By Mr. ROBINSON of North Carolina: A bill (H. R. 11080) to provide for the acquisition by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, of a site for a public building at Sanford, N. C.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11081) to provide for the erection of a public building at Laurinburg, N. C.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11082) to provide for the erection of a public building at Wadesboro, N. C.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11083) to provide for the erection of a public building at Rockingham, N. C.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11084) to provide for the acquisition by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, of a site for a public building at Hamlet, N. C.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. CLARK of Florida: A bill (H. R. 11085) to declare certain publications unmailable and prescribing punishment for its violation; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11086) to prohibit certain persons engaging in business in the District of Columbia and the Territories of the United States, and to punish its violation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. PLATT: A bill (H. R. 11087) to regulate the filling of vacancies in the Corps of Cadets at the United States Military Academy not otherwise provided for by existing law; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WASON: A bill (H. R. 11088) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Peterborough, in the State of New Hampshire; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. SIEGEL: A bill (H. R. 11089) to provide for the punishment of the crime of anarchy, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: A bill (H. R. 11090) providing for a survey of the Columbia River between Chinook, Wash., and the head of Sand Island; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 11091) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the town of Yorkhaven, Pa., two cannons, with suitable number of shells; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: A bill (H. R. 11092) for the exclusion, deportation, and expulsion of certain aliens, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. WHEELER: Resolution (H. Res. 417) to provide for the appointment of a clerk to the Committee on Railways and Canals; to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. BABKA: Resolution (H. Res. 418) directing an investigation of the reported hoarding of sugar; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. ROGERS: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 261) to make immediately available the appropriation for the expenses of regulating further the entry of aliens into the United States; to the Committee on Appropriations.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ASHBROOK: A bill (H. R. 11093) granting an increase of pension to Joseph S. Hall; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CLEARY: A bill (H. R. 11094) granting a pension to May Gantert Lace; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. COPLEY: A bill (H. R. 11095) granting an increase of pension to Theresa Brisbois; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HADLEY: A bill (H. R. 11096) granting an increase of pension to Vernom Van Houten; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HAYS: A bill (H. R. 11097) granting an increase of pension to John A. Keltner; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HERSMAN: A bill (H. R. 11098) granting an increase of pension to Charles Asa Clark; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11099) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to lease San Miguel Island, Calif., and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. HICKS: A bill (H. R. 11100) granting an increase of pension to Leonard T. Butler; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOWARD: A bill (H. R. 11101) granting an increase of pension to John J. Spencer; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11102) for the relief of Dr. L. A. O'Brien; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HUDDLESTON: A bill (H. R. 11103) granting an increase of pension to Henry Chairsell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KING: A bill (H. R. 11104) granting a pension to Milo Conner; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11105) granting a pension to Charles Diesron; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McKENZIE: A bill (H. R. 11106) granting a pension to Dora Myers; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RUCKER: A bill (H. R. 11107) granting an increase of pension to John Canote; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SIEGEL: A bill (H. R. 11108) granting an increase of pension to Laura E. Valleau; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 11109) granting a pension to Charles Roddy; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11110) granting a pension to Palace Douglas; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TOWNER: A bill (H. R. 11111) granting an increase of pension to Samuel Sheline; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WASON: A bill (H. R. 11112) granting an increase of pension to Frank Libby; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

263. By Mr. BRIGGS: Petition of Plainview Lodge, No. 1175, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, demanding deportation of undesirable aliens; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

264. By Mr. BURDICK: Resolution of a mass meeting of the United Jewry of Rhode Island, in Providence, R. I., November 30, 1919, requesting the Government of the United States to place before the supreme council of the peace conference the atrocities being waged against the Jewish people of Ukrainia and other lands to the end that the atrocities be stopped; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

265. Also, resolution of the city council of Providence, R. I., indorsing the bill now pending providing for a daylight-saving plan applicable to New England; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

266. By Mr. CULLEN: Petition of the Allied Council of American Shoe and Leather Industries and Trades, protesting against discrimination by Indian Government to tanners of the British Empire; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

267. By Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa: Petition of retail dealers and merchants of Lake Mills, Iowa, protesting against the tax of the Siegel bill, H. R. 8315; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

268. By Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri: Petition of Warrensburg Lodge, No. 673, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; Sedalia Lodge, No. 125, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; Joplin Lodge, No. 501, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, all of the State of Missouri, denouncing activities of Industrial Workers of the World and Bolsheviki; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

269. By Mr. ESCH: Petition of Missouri and Kansas publishers, concerning solution of paper shortage; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

270. Also, petition of Fond du Lac Post, No. 75, American Legion, demanding deportation of Victor L. Berger and proper investigation of the record of Representative VOIGT; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

271. Also, petition of St. Columcille Branch, Friends of Irish Freedom, favoring recognition of republic of Ireland; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

272. Also, petition of the Allied Council of American Shoe and Leather Industries and Trades, protesting against discrimination by Indian Government to tanners of the British Empire; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

273. By Mr. FORDNEY: Petition of Southern Oil & Transport Co. and other oil companies holding interest in oil wells in Mexico, protesting against methods taken by the Mexican Government in closing oil wells in Mexico; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

274. By Mr. FULLER of Illinois: Petition of Ancient Order of Hibernians and Ladies' Auxiliary of La Salle, Ill., favoring House bill 3404; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

275. Also, petition of the Farmers' National Council opposing Cummins and Esch bills; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

276. By Mr. GALLIVAN: Petition of Patrick O'Rourke and Claremens Association of Boston, Mass., favoring H. R. 3404; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

277. Also, petition of Boston Gaelic School condemning statements and articles by Admiral Sims; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

278. By Mr. HULINGS: Petition of Sharon Lodge No. 103 Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, condemning activities of I. W. W. and Bolsheviki; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

279. Also, petition of Southern Oil & Transport Co. and other oil companies protesting against the methods employed by the Mexican Government in seizing oil wells in Mexico; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

280. By Mr. HUTCHINSON: Petition of Board of Commissioners of Trenton, N. J., favoring legislation providing for daylight saving; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

281. By Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island: Resolutions of city council of Providence, R. I., indorsing daylight-saving plan for New England; to the Committee on Agriculture.

282. Also, petition of Sarsfield Literary Association, favoring House bill 3404; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

283. Also, petition of New England governors regarding railroad conditions in New England; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

284. Also, petition of New England governors for suitable recognition in rank be given to Maj. Gen. Clarence R. Edwards; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

285. Also, petition of New England governors that the United States Shipping Board allocate some of its large ships to the New England owners, operators, and managers of steamers; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

286. By Mr. MAHER: Petition of E. J. Duffy Branch, Friends of Irish Freedom, favoring House bill 3404; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

287. Also, petition of New York Commandery, Military Order of the Loyal Legion, asking additional compensation for volunteer officers who served in the War 1861–1865; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

288. By Mr. MERRITT: Petition of Combined Jewish Organizations, of Bridgeport, Conn., protesting against the massacre of Jews in Ukraine and other lands; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

289. By Mr. O'CONNELL: Petition of the Allied Council of the American Shoe and Leather Industries and Trades, protesting against discrimination by the Indian Government to tanners of the British Empire; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

290. Also, petition of Farmers' National Council, opposing Cummins and Esch bills; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

291. Also, petition of New York State Association of Supervisory Post Office Employees, favoring Sterling-Lehlbach retirement bill; to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

292. By Mr. RAMSEYER: Petition of Howard Cessna Post, No. 136, Iowa Branch, American Legion, pledging support in upholding law and order and condemning activities of Industrial Workers of the World; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

293. Also, petition of Harry Anderson Post, No. 34, American Legion, protesting against the activities of the Industrial Workers of the World; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

294. Also, petition of American Red Cross, Service Star, Legion, and Commercial Club of Oskaloosa, Iowa, favoring legislation to make November 11 a national holiday; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

295. Also, petition of Oscar B. Nelson Post, No. 3, American Legion, Ottumwa, Iowa, favoring that the bodies of the soldiers who died on the fields of France be brought back to this country for burial; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

296. By Mr. RIORDAN: Petition of J. Mitchel, Friends of Irish Freedom, favoring recognition of the republic of Ireland; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

297. By Mr. ROWAN: Petition of J. P. Holland Branch, Friends of Irish Freedom, favoring House bill 3404; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

298. Also, petition of Missouri and Kansas publishers regarding solution for paper shortage; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

299. Also, petition of A. M. Upjohn, regarding conditions in Alaska and urging recognition of the Republic of Armenia; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

300. Also, petition of Public Ledger, Philadelphia, forwarding copy of letter sent to the President regarding methods of reducing popular unrest; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

301. Also, petition of Southern Oil & Transport Co. and other oil companies, regarding the methods employed by the Mexican Government in seizing the oil wells in Mexico; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

302. Also, petition of Farmers' National Council, opposing Cummins and Esch bills; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

303. Also, petition of the Allied Council of American Shoe and Leather Industries and Trades, protesting against discrimination by the Indian Government to tanners of the British Empire; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

304. By Mr. WINSLOW: Petition of Patriotic Order Sons of America, on Mexican situation; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

305. Also, petition of Patriotic Order Sons of America, on remedy for the high cost of living; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, December 12, 1919.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we present ourselves to Thee with hearts we trust responsive to the divine will, with readiness to hear Thy command and to follow Thy purpose. We pray that Thou wilt guide us in the discharge of our duties so that we may ever have the comfortable satisfaction of knowing that we are working together with God in the great task of the present day. For Christ's sake. Amen.

THOMAS P. GORE, a Senator from the State of Oklahoma, appeared in his seat to-day.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Harris	McNary	Sheppard
Capper	Harrison	Moses	Smith, S. C.
Culberson	Johnson, S. Dak.	Myers	Smoot
Cummins	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Spencer
Dial	Jones, Wash.	Newberry	Trammell
Edge	Kellogg	Norris	Underwood
Elkins	Keyes	Nugent	Wadsworth
Fletcher	Kirby	Overman	Warren
Gay	Knox	Page
Hale	La Follette	Phipps
Harding	Lenroot	Ransdell

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] requested me to announce his temporary absence on important business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-one Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. ASHURST, Mr. CALDER, Mr. COLT, Mr. FERNALD, Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, Mr. HITCHCOCK, Mr. STERLING, Mr. THOMAS, Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts, Mr. WALSH of Montana, and Mr. WATSON answered to their names when called.

Mr. KING, Mr. POMERENE, Mr. FALL, Mr. MCLEAN, Mr. GRONNA, Mr. CURTIS, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. SUTHERLAND, Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. NELSON, Mr. TOWNSEND, and Mr. GORE entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I wish to announce that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] are detained from the Senate by illness in their families.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], and the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] are absent on official business.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] are detained from the Senate on public business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Secretary will read the Journal of the proceedings of the preceding session.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Wednesday, December 10, 1919, when, on request of Mr. SMOOT and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD (H. DOC. NO. 504).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the United States Shipping Board, transmitting, pursuant to law, a statement of travel performed by officers and employees of the United States Shipping Board during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1919, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

UNITED STATES BOARD OF MEDIATION AND CONCILIATION (H. DOC. NO. 505).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the United States Board of Mediation and Conciliation, transmitting, pursuant to law, a statement showing for the first four months of the current fiscal year the average number of employees receiving increased compensation at the rate of $240 per annum, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House agrees to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1190) to prohibit the purchase, sale, or possession for the purpose of sale of certain wild birds in the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 260) authorizing the payment of salaries of officers and employees of Congress for December, 1919, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. KEYES. I present resolutions adopted at a conference of New England governors, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolutions unanimously adopted at a conference of New England governors held at the Executive Chamber, Boston, Wednesday, December 10, 1919.

"Resolved, That it is the opinion of the governors of the States that were especially represented in the Twenty-sixth Division that Maj. Gen. Clarence R. Edwards is entitled to a position and rank commensurate with the services rendered by that distinguished division."

Mr. NELSON presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Minneapolis, Minn., remonstrating against the persecution of Jews in the Ukraine, and praying that the United States Government take steps for their relief, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of Monticello Post, No. 260, American Legion, of Monticello, Minn., and a petition of Kit Carson Post, No. 43, American Legion, of Fort Lyon, Colo., praying for the enactment of legislation for the suppression of disloyal persons, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CAPPER presented petitions of sundry citizens of Logan, Wayne, Gaylord, and Glen Elder, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the exemption of lyceum courses from the provisions of the so-called luxury-tax clause of the revenue law, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of Local Lodge No. 507, Sheet Metal Workers' Union, of Topeka, Kans., and a memorial of Local Lodge No. 148, Association of Machinists, of Dodge City, Kans., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Cummins railroad bill, and praying for two years' extension of Government control of railroads, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of E. M. Stanton Post, No. 23, Department of Kansas, Grand Army of the Republic, of Howard, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation granting increased pensions to veterans of the Civil War, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a memorial of sundry retail jewelers of Battle Creek, Mich., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing that retailers of manufactured articles carried in interstate commerce attach cost prices to such articles before they are sold to customers, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of the Michigan Daily Newspaper Association, of Detroit, Mich., remonstrating against the proposed increase in second-class postage rates, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a memorial of Local Division No. 33, International Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of Battle Creek, Mich., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Cummins railroad bill and praying for a two years' extension of Government control of railroads, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Port Huron, Mich., and a petition of the faculty and students of Kalamazoo College, Kalamazoo, Mich., praying for the early ratification of the league of nations and the peace treaty, which were ordered to lie on the table.

CONDITIONS ON MEXICAN BORDER.

Mr. WADSWORTH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred Senate concurrent resolution No. 20, directing the Secretary of War to employ the military forces of the United States in protecting the lives of American citizens adjacent to the Mexican border, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, which was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HARRIS:

A bill (S. 3521) to construct a public building for a post office at the city of Sandersville, Ga.;

A bill (S. 3522) to provide for the erection of a public building at the city of Toccoa, Ga.;

A bill (S. 3523) to construct a suitable building for the use of the United States court at Gainesville, Ga., and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 3524) to increase the appropriation for a post-office building at Dawson, Ga.;

A bill (S. 3525) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building at Eastman, Dodge County, Ga.; and

A bill (S. 3526) providing for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Fort Valley, Houston County, Ga.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. LENROOT:

A bill (S. 3527) granting an increase of pension to Martha A. Dunbar; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FALL:

A bill (S. 3528) granting a pension to Henry L. Bond (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 3529) granting a pension to Samuel L. Duckworth (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SPENCER:

A bill (S. 3530) for the relief of Sarah Shelton; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 3531) granting an increase of pension to William L. Sapp (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GORE:

A bill (S. 3532) granting a pension to James H. Johns; to the Committee on Pensions.

SHORTAGE OF PRINT PAPER.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, on yesterday I received a telegram from the publishers of some of the largest newspapers in the State of New Mexico calling attention to a condition which I am sure has been in the minds of many Senators for a considerable period of time. The telegram reads:

ALBUQUERQUE, N. MEX., December 10, 1919.

Hon. A. A. JONES,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Unless war-time restrictions are placed upon the use of print paper practically every newspaper in New Mexico will be compelled to suspend publication within a few months, many of them within a few weeks at farthest. What is true of New Mexico is true of the United States, except those papers that own their own mills. Pacific coast papers are issuing editions of 180 pages on Sunday and other big papers are wasting proportionately. Only the utmost gravity of the situation here causes us to send this imperative wire.

D. A. MACPHERSON,
M. L. FOX.
H. B. HENING,
THOMAS HUGHES.

I believe that condition is recognized by the country at large, and it seems to me that something must be done in order to curtail the use of print paper in the manner in which it is being done, so that the country papers may have at least an ordinary supply for their purposes.

I, of course, have not been able to give this subject very careful consideration, with an idea of suggesting a remedy, but it seems to me that one very effective remedy can be provided, and that is to increase the postal rates on newspapers exceeding a definite size. With that in view, and in order that the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads may thoroughly consider the subject, I have drafted a bill proposing an increase of postal rates by five times the present rate on daily papers exceeding 24 pages in size. The purpose, of course, is to curtail the use of print paper by the large daily newspapers, especially in connection with the Sunday editions. It seems to me that if a paper contains as many as 24 pages, that ought to be sufficient to give the current news of the country and also provide a sufficient amount of space for advertising. We know that these newspapers are carried at a loss under the present rate. A bill of this kind would serve two very useful purposes—to distribute the print paper throughout the country without requiring the country papers to pay an excessive price, and also add to the postal revenues, if any paper should decide to publish a paper exceeding the size specified in the bill.

I therefore introduce the bill which I send to the desk and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The bill (S. 3520) to increase the postal rates on certain classes of second-class matter was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in this connection I desire to say that now that the peace treaty is no longer before the Senate, I think the time has arrived when we ought to stop publishing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD articles, telegrams, and addresses sent to Senators, and thereby save not only print paper but the expense to the Government of printing such communications in the RECORD. I desire to inform the Senate that every page of the RECORD which is printed to-day costs the Government of the United States nearly $60. That is not all. We have men now scouring the country daily in order to pick up paper wherever they can at almost any price that is asked for it, in order to secure enough paper to publish the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD daily.

While the peace treaty was before the Senate there was no objection on the part of any Senator to printing any kind of matter that had any relation whatever to that treaty. That condition no longer exists, and in a very short time I am going to ascertain whether or not the Senate really wants to assist in this matter, for I am going to object to the insertion of such communications in the RECORD. Then I hope that the Vice President will ask the Senate to decide the question whether or not the existing policy is to be continued. If the Senate will support me in this position, I will keep everything out of the RECORD except that which relates to subjects affecting the legislation before this body. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD should contain matter relating to such legislation and nothing else. Of late we have been running wild in the direction I have indicated, and the Senate will have to decide whether or not we are going to continue the policy which we have been recently pursuing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Vice President will be very glad to ask the Senate, if the Senator desires him to do so, whether the publication of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD shall not be suspended during the famine in print paper.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I was going to suggest that the Senator from Utah does not go far enough. I think it would be a very good idea to quit printing the RECORD altogether. My impression is that that would be one way in which we could curtail the output of senatorial oratory; in fact, I do not know of any other way in which it can be done. The RECORD is read by quite a large constituency, and then, fortunately, the most of its contents are forgotten. An old RECORD is about as useful as last month's edition of a daily newspaper.

The scarcity of print paper to which the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] has referred seems, however, to be one which is affecting only the requirements of the legitimate press. There are about 300 so-called "red" publications, some of which, I think, have hourly editions, circulating throughout the country, and from that source we hear no complaint about the scarcity of print paper.

I think the scarcity of print paper is largely due to the fact that so much of it is consumed in propaganda against the Government of the United States. If in order to limit the output of that kind of daily literature hardships are visited upon the remainder of the press for a while, it will not be entirely an unmixed evil. It would seem, however, that the manufacturers of and dealers in print paper could very well, by voluntary action, proportion and distribute their output so that the legitimate press of the country would not suffer and at the same time perform a very desirable public service.

I rose, Mr. President, however, to call attention to a subject about which I am receiving a great many letters and telegrams, none of which I intend to offer for publication, from coal operators relating to the difficulty and practical impossibility of securing payments from the railroads for the seizure of large quantities of coal, mined and consigned to other purchasers. The Senate is aware of the fact that immediately after the coal strike was declared the Railway Administration began to possess itself of all the coal it could lay its hands upon, and for the very necessary purpose of running the trains and continuing the lines of communication. Their action in that particular is not only justified but perhaps commendable. Unfortunately, however, they have not been as eager to pay the operators for the coal as they should be, and some of the operators of my State are suffering severe financial embarrassment consequent upon the impossibility of securing payments for coal which they have mined and sold to others and which the Government has seized.

At this time, when the President of the United States and the president of the United Mine Workers are exchanging telegrams of felicitation, we ought to consider the possible effect of the Government action upon operators who mine and produce the coal. Unless these men are settled with, as they ought to be, and the money which is their due for the mining of the coal be given to them very soon, there are going to be a good many suspensions of operators. The Government should do justice to all its citizens, and when it seizes coal for a public purpose, and seizes it at once and summarily, payment should be quite as prompt and quite as summary. It is a poor Government that will operate its machinery at the expense of taxpayers through the virtual confiscation of their property.

Mr. JONES of Washington and Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. At this point in the oratorical efforts of the morning I wish to give notice that from now on I am going to insist, so far as I can, upon the regular order in the interest of the RECORD and in the interest of the transaction of the public business. I ask now, Mr. President, for the regular order.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Will the Senator withhold his request for a moment?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; I can not do so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Bills and joint resolutions are still in order.

AUGUSTA LOUISE DE HAVEN-ALTEN.

Mr. McNARY. At the request of the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] I introduce a joint resolution and ask that it be read by the Secretary and be referred to the Committee on Immigration.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 134) to readmit Augusta Louise de Haven-Alten to the status and privileges of a citizen of the United States was read the first time by its title and the second time at length and referred to the Committee on Immigration, as follows:

Whereas Augusta Louise de Haven-Alten, daughter of the late Capt. Joseph Edwin de Haven, of the United States Navy, a native-born citizen of the United States and a resident of the State of Illinois, married in 1886 Eberhard Alten, an alien of German birth and parentage; and

Whereas the said Augusta Louise de Haven-Alten left Germany in 1911 and has not since returned, and in 1912 sued her said husband for absolute divorce, which suit is still pending in Germany, and has since 1911 lived apart from her said husband; and

Whereas the said Augusta Louise de Haven-Alten has since returned to the United States and renewed her residence therein and petitioned Congress to be readmitted to the status and privileges of a citizen of the United States, under and by virtue of the power and laws of the United States of America: Therefore Resolved, etc., That Augusta Louise de Haven-Alten, daughter of said Capt. Joseph Edwin de Haven, be, and she is hereby, on her own application unconditionally readmitted to the character and privileges of a citizen of the United States.

RECLASSIFICATION COMMISSION.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I would like to ask unanimous consent to introduce and have passed a joint resolution regarding the Reclassification Commission. I find that in order to complete the work of that commission by the 12th of January it will be necessary for those who are engaged in the actual work to put in such long hours that it will be a distinct burden upon them; and, besides, the members of the joint commission itself will not be able to give to the service that careful consideration which it should have, and I therefore offer a joint resolution extending the life of the commission until the 12th of March. I have conferred with the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, and he feels that it will not delay the work of that committee if we should have this additional time.

Mr. KING. Is that the commission of which Mr. Keating is a member?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. He is a member of the commission. I will state, further, that this resolution does not propose any additional appropriation, but merely an extension of time in order to complete this work which is going on in a splendid way. But the members of the commission themselves will not have time to digest what is being done within the limit fixed by law. When that limit was fixed, of course no one knew what the work would be or the length of time that would be required for it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I was unable to hear the beginning of the Senator's remarks. The Senator has not read the resolution?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. No.

Mr. NORRIS. It simply extends the time?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. How much additional time does it give?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Sixty days.

Mr. NORRIS. Under the original authority, when would the life of the commission expire?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. On the 12th of January.

Mr. NORRIS. And this extends it?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. To the 12th of March.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator ask unanimous consent for that?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I object.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Then I will ask unanimous consent to introduce the joint resolution, but not for its immediate consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. I will not object to that.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 135) extending the time for filing final report of the Joint Commission on Reclassification of Salaries, created by section 9, Public 314, Sixty-fifth Congress, approved March 1, 1919, to a date not later than March 12, 1920, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

DISCHARGE OF SOLDIER PATIENTS.

Mr. OVERMAN. I offer a resolution and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 258) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the Secretary of War so modify Circular No. 345 as to prohibit the discharge of any disabled patient soldier in a Government hospital, except upon his own request, before he has received the maximum improvement in the opinion of the officers in charge of said hospital.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. JONES of Washington. If the resolution is going to lead to discussion, I object to its present consideration.

Mr. OVERMAN. I merely wish to say a word of explanation in regard to the resolution; that is all.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If it leads to any discussion, I object to its consideration.

Mr. OVERMAN. I merely wish to say that recently, while on a visit to Asheville, N. C., I was waited on by a delegation from the Government hospital at Oteen, N. C., who disclosed a pitiable condition of affairs existing there.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think the resolution can be passed if the Senator will allow it to be acted upon.

Mr. KING. I shall object to the consideration of the resolution unless the Committee on Military Affairs recommended it. I feel that it is too important to pass without the consideration of that committee.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator insists upon the objection, well and good, but I should like to have placed in the RECORD a copy of the order issued by the War Department concerning the discharge of disabled soldiers from Government hospitals, although many of them are on their beds and are suffering, and some of them dying. The condition is a terrible one.

I also ask to have inserted in the RECORD a letter from two very prominent officers who protest against this order and ask to be allowed to stay in the hospital referred to. They are on the road to recovery now, and if they are allowed to remain in the hospital they will be able before very long to go home to their families. The men in these hospitals fought in France; but if the Senator from Utah wants the resolution to go to the Committee on Military Affairs, I have no objection.

Mr. KING. Of course, if the condition described by the Senator from North Carolina exists, it is unfortunate and ought to be remedied; but this is a matter that ought to receive the attention of the committee, and I object to the immediate consideration of the resolution.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator does not object, I presume, to my having inserted in the RECORD the War Department circular and the letter from the officers to whom I have referred.

Mr. KING. Oh, no.

Mr. OVERMAN. I desire to say that I hope the committee will give early consideration to this matter, because I know of one case where a soldier now in bed suffering from tuberculosis is going to be discharged. Under the order of the War Department he can not remain at the hospital longer than 12 months. He fought in France, was brought to this country, and he is now on his bed; but they are going to send him out on the world. He can go to a Public Health Service hospital and receive the small allowance allotted to him, but on that he can not support his family. So, if discharged from the hospital, he will have to go home and die.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the matter referred to by the Senator from North Carolina will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

(Circular Letter No. 345.)

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF STAFF,
Washington, November 7, 1919.

Memorandum for the Surgeon General:

Subject: Policy re protracted hospital treatment for military personnel.

1. That all disabled military personnel, except officers of the permanent Army and special surgical cases, shall be granted discharge six months after admission to a hospital in the United States for definitive treatment, if discharge is desired and applied for by the individual in writing.

2. That all disabled military personnel, except officers of the permanent Army and those requiring multiple operations or special surgical treatment or suffering from mental diseases, shall be discharged one year after admission to a hospital in this country after having been carried on sick report for definitive treatment for the same period: Provided, Individuals too sick to be removed from hospital without prejudice to their life or recovery or who, upon the question of discharge being submitted to them in writing, certify that they can not provide for the necessary care and attention for themselves shall be retained until provisions for their care and maintenance is made by the War Risk Insurance Bureau, Soldiers' Home, or National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be deemed to rescind the provisions of Circular No. 188, War Department, 1918, authorizing discharge at any time of the disabled who have been cured or have attained maximum restoration, or those who furnish guaranties that specialized treatment will be continued as long as necessary.

E. D. ANDERSON,
Colonel, General Staff,
Acting Director of Operations.
By P. O. BISHOP,
Colonel, General Staff,
Chief Personnel Branch, Operations Division.

—

OTEEN, N. C., November 30, 1919.

Hon. LEE S. OVERMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In compliance with your request we are writing you further in regard to Circular Letter 345, issued by the War Department from the office of the Chief of Staff, dated November 7, 1919.

Paragraph 2 of this letter is in direct contradiction to Circular No. 420, War Department, September 10, 1919, which provides that—

"Officers under medical treatment for disability incident to military service will be retained in service whether or not applicants for permanent appointment until such time as maximum restoration has been attained. This will not be construed as authorizing the retention of officers temporarily on sick report for minor disability."

This new policy is in violation of General Orders, No. 73, War Department, 1918, and section 10 of the act of Congress approved May 18, 1917, in that it shows discrimination between the various members of the military service, allowing only the Regular Army officers the benefits of maximum cure on full pay and allowances.

There are officers and men who have been here a year who can not take their treatment under the War Risk Insurance Bureau provision and support their dependents. Therefore they must go to work prematurely and stand the risk of undermining their present state of cure, which, in tuberculosis, means another protracted siege of sanatorium treatment with its necessary hardships on their relatives and dependents, and in most cases ultimate death to the patient himself. Men suffering from pulmonary tuberculosis need to have their cases properly arrested before attempting any sort of work.

Some men have been very ill for a whole year in this hospital and are just now in position to take a very little exercise. These cases are not healed to the maximum degree, yet they could be moved to other sanatoria under War Risk Insurance Bureau supervision without prejudice to their life or recovery. But they can not stay for treatment at these sanatoria, for they have dependents who are absolutely dependent on their Army pay for support. The compensation from the war-risk insurance act is totally insufficient to care for their families, therefore they must go to work immediately with the odds tremendously against them.

These same men, if given the maximum amount of cure—that is, if allowed to get well, for they can get well—could then be reconstructed under the Federal Board of Vocational Training and be made useful citizens.

It is the belief of the patient officers of this hospital that the promises of the Government to us and our dependents can not be fulfilled if this policy of the War Department is not revoked.

The number of officers directly affected in this hospital by this order is considerably less than 100, and the total number, including the other three hospitals for tuberculous patients, namely, Fort Bayard, Whipple Barracks, and Denver, is probably about 300.

These patient officers appeal to you to use your influence to have this policy revoked and to allow them to continue their treatment in a military hospital and to stay in the Military Establishment until they have arrived at the maximum amount of cure.

We thank you very much for the interest you have shown in this matter and feel certain that when this is called to the attention of Secretary Baker he will have Circular Letter No. 345 revoked.

Cordially, yours,

Mr. KING subsequently said: Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] this morning asked for the immediate consideration of a resolution the effect of which was to continue in the military hospitals certain patients, soldiers who have been injured in the war. I objected to the immediate consideration of the resolution and asked that it go to an appropriate committee. I felt that the importance of the measure demanded the consideration of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Another reason why I objected to the resolution was—and I desire the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]—that we have already appropriated large amounts, aggregating several million dollars, and we are now asked to appropriate $85,000,000 more, for the acquisition of hospitals to be conducted under the Public Health Service of the Government to care for the particular cases that the Senator from North Carolina had in mind and those that were covered by the resolution which he offered. It seemed to me, if we passed the resolution submitted by the Senator from North Carolina, that there was going to be a conflict with the present policy and, perhaps, a conflict with the program which has been heretofore outlined.

My understanding is that at a certain stage these soldiers are transferred from the military hospitals to the Public Health hospitals and that ample provision has been made and will be made by Congress fully to care for all of the soldiers who need further medical and hospital attention. I merely want the RECORD to show that the basis of my opposition was as I have indicated.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Utah is right; the matter ought to be investigated; but the exception I make is in the case of tubercular patients. I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that the regulations require the discharge of soldier patients from the hospitals after a certain length of time. Many, if not most, of the patients in these hospitals fought in France, where they were gassed and as a consequence many of them are suffering from tuberculosis and confined to their beds. To discharge them from the Government hospitals where they are now being treated and where many of them are improving and send them to a hospital of the Public Health Service would be a great mistake. Under the law while in the Public Health Service they would get from the War Risk Bureau not exceeding, as I understand, $50 a month. Most of these men have families, and they tell me they can not support their families on the $50 allotted to them, even if they go to the Public Health Service hospitals. They would, therefore, be required to go to work in order to support their families. To compel them to work, in many instances, would mean death, whereas if they could remain at the hospitals where they are now for a few months longer they could probably be restored to their families and be in a condition to take care of them.

The resolution I have offered merely requires that they should only be discharged by the doctor in charge when he finds that they have improved beyond a certain point.

I think that the soldiers who are suffering from tuberculosis should be accorded the greatest possible consideration. The situation is a pitiable one. I have been to one of the hospitals and seen some of the soldier patients. Many of them are improving and, it is thought, can entirely recover; but the psychological effect of the order of the War Department has been fearful, and they are writing and telegraphing me appeals that they be allowed to remain in the hospitals just a few months longer, and asking that the decision be left to the doctor at the hospital to say whether or not they are to be discharged. They are willing to go at the proper time, but they do not wish to be discharged and sent to a Public Health Service hospital, leaving their families to starve, as will be the result, because they will not get enough from the War Risk Bureau to support their families.

I hope the chairman of the committee—and I am glad that we have a chairman who will look into this question thoroughly—will investigate the matter and make a report and ascertain if it is not wise to provide for a modification of the War Department circular which has been issued.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, apropos the matter which the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] have just discussed, the inquiry which I have caused to be made at the office of the Surgeon General develops this state of facts, that Circular 345 sent out by the Chief of Staff requires that men who had been under treatment in hospitals for a certain length of time must be discharged. This was mandatory. Within the last 48 hours the Surgeon General has asked that the order be modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SUTHERLAND in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution?

Mr. OVERMAN. No, Mr. President.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let me say, furthermore, that this notation has come to me just this moment over the telephone:

> Its modification has been approved by the Chief of Staff, and men will now be treated until the maximum improvement in their condition is attained.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am very glad to hear that statement of the Senator from New York. That was the purpose of my resolution; it was all that it required; that the maximum improvement should be reached, in the opinion of the physician, before discharge was ordered. I thank the Senator from New York, the able chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs. I will telegraph the patients in the hospitals who have been writing me, and I am sure the information I will be able to convey will have a wonderful effect upon those sick men.

CONDITION OF JEWS IN THE UKRAINE.

Mr. SPENCER. I offer a resolution and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The resolution (S. Res. 259) was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Resolved, That the attention of the Senate having been called to the awful massacre of members of the Jewish race in the Ukraine and to the existence and execution of pogroms, which indicate a determination to exterminate the Jews of Ukrainia, it is requested of the State Department that such information as may be available, not inconsistent with the public service, be transmitted to the Senate showing the actual conditions in the Ukraine, and indicating what steps, if any, that have been taken or are contemplated on the part of our Government in the matter.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, there was a meeting of representative citizens in St. Louis held recently at which 10,000 persons were present in protest against the massacre of the Jews in the Ukraine and against the pogrom which seemed to be initiated and executed for the entire extermination of the Jews in Ukraine. I present a memorial adopted by that meeting in St. Louis and ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ST. LOUIS, MO., December 9, 1919.

Hon. SELDEN P. SPENCER,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: At a mammoth mass meeting held in Coliseum in this city a resolution was unanimously passed by 10,000 citizens of city of St. Louis and electors of your State against the awful massacres against our race and creed for no other reason than religious scruples. Realizing your previous stand as a Christian and gentleman, believing in fairness and religious liberty for all people in all parts of the globe, and more so from the fact that in your own family you suffered a sad casualty in order that the world may be safe for democracy, I, as rabbi of the following congregations: Benai Abraham, 1240 Glasgow Avenue; Love of Freedom, Fourteenth and Carr Streets, composed of 10,000 members in this city, join with them in praying to God that these awful pogroms will cease, and that you will use every endeavor within your power to see that the poor unfortunate people of Ukrainia are given religious liberties and that no further massacres of these people will be held. Any action taken in the premises by you will be heartily appreciated by not only the citizens of the city of St. Louis but also the millions of unfortunate people who have lost their relatives in these awful massacres.

Respectfully, yours,

A. B. GOLDENSON,
Chief Rabbi.

PAY OF EMPLOYEES.

H. J. Res. 260. Joint resolution authorizing the payment of salaries of officers and employees of Congress for December, 1919, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WARREN. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably, without amendment, the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 260) authorizing the payment of salaries of officers and employees of Congress for December, 1919, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives are authorized and instructed to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives, including the Capitol police, their respective salaries for the month of December, 1919, on the day of adjournment of the present session for the holiday recess.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUGAR EQUALIZATION BOARD.

Mr. McNARY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3284.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3284) to provide for the national welfare by continuing the United States Sugar Equalization Board until December 31, 1920, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, and open to further amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. I offer an amendment which I ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, at the end of the bill, the following proviso:

Provided, That the zone system of sale and distribution of sugar heretofore established by the said United States Sugar Equalization Board shall be abolished and shall not be reestablished or maintained, and that said sugar shall be permitted to be sold and to circulate freely in every portion of the United States.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand the Senator from Oregon accepts that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Senators can not fix up amendments in that way. The question is whether or not the Senate will accept it.

Mr. McNARY. I did not hear the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator from Oregon accept the amendment as part of his bill?

Mr. McNARY. Yes; it is perfectly satisfactory to me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that is a good way to legislate, but it is illegal. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I know that this bill is safe in the hands of the Senator from Oregon. I have not had an opportunity to give any consideration to this particular amendment. I understand it is agreeable to the Senators from Louisiana and those who are directly interested in this proposed legislation.

Mr. McNARY. Yes, sir.

Mr. GRONNA. Of course, I have no personal objection to it.

Mr. McNARY. It simply abolishes the unfortunate zone systems that were experimented with by the Sugar Equalization Board and gives a fair and normal distribution all over the United States. It is satisfactory, I think, to all the friends of the sugar bill.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator from Oregon if he knows whether or not it is satisfactory to the Sugar Equalization Board?

Mr. McNARY. I do not know as to that. We are legislating to help the people rather than any particular board.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; I understand that.

Mr. McNARY. I am sure it will be satisfactory to the great American people. If it is not satisfactory to the board, they will have to accept it as it is.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from North Dakota that I am quite sure the Sugar Equalization Board will be very glad to get rid of that responsibility, and I think the amendment ought to be agreed to.

Mr. GRONNA. I asked the question of the Senator from Oregon for the reason that I know his subcommitte held extended hearings and invited the Sugar Equalization Board to appear, and that in framing this legislation, of course, the advice of the board was considered valuable. I shall not object to the amendment, but while I am on my feet I want to ask the Senator if any further changes have been made in the bill as it was reported from the committee?

Mr. McNARY. I am very happy to say to the Senator from North Dakota that there have been no changes in the bill save this proposed amendment; and whether or not it is satisfactory to the board I can not say, because this question was not considered at the hearings. It is an order that has been promulgated by them subsequently to the hearings before the Senate subcommittee.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield for a question? I was not able to hear all of the argument made by the Senator from Oregon the other day, and I wanted to ask him specifically with regard to one or two matters. As I understood him, the United States Sugar Equalization Board felt that the Cuban crop should have been bought some time in September?

Mr. McNARY. Some time in August.

Mr. POMERENE. And that Prof. Taussig advised against it?

Mr. McNARY. That is true.

Mr. POMERENE. I want to ask another question. Of course, I understand that the Senator can not give exactly definite information as to the price at which we can now purchase the remainder of the Cuban sugar crop; but can the Senator give us, in his judgment, the price at which this crop could have been bought in August or September and the price at which it probably can be bought now?

Mr. McNARY. I will say to the Senator that that requires, perhaps, the exercise of prophecy. However, last year the raw sugar crop was bought in Cuba at 5½ cents in the northern ports and 5.4 cents at the southern ports of Cuba. In August and September of the present year it was thought that 1 cent per pound had been added, and that it could have been bought at 6½ cents. It was thought by the Sugar Equalization Board about five weeks ago that the sugar could be had around 10½ cents.

Mr. POMERENE. That would make an advance of about 4 cents a pound?

Mr. McNARY. About 4 cents; but I will say to the Senator from Ohio that I have been informed, although I can not state the degree of accuracy with which the statement was made, that sugar bought by speculators has brought as high as 13½ cents in Cuba.

Mr. POMERENE. I simply wanted to observe to the Senate that this is an evidence again of the fact that adherence to the advice of a professional economist is going to cost the people of the United States an advance of 4 cents a pound for every pound of sugar that will be consumed during the ensuing year; and as the per capita consumption is about 92 pounds, and the population of this country now is about 110,000,000, we can estimate how valuable this advice has been. It amounts to about $404,800,000.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield; yes.

Mr. KELLOGG. I understand that Mr. Hoover and the board informed the President in July or August that the sugar crop of Cuba could be bought for one-half cent a pound above the price of last year, and recommended it strongly on the ground that there was a world shortage of sugar; that as a matter of fact it can not be bought for 10 cents to-day, and that it is selling on a basis of cost that will cost the American people about 22 cents a pound retail. I do not wish to intimate by that that I shall not vote for this bill; but, as a matter of fact, they could have gotten the sugar crop for about one-half cent a pound above last year, and it was turned down, and now, of course, it is too late to get it.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. Well, the facts indicate that if some of these professional economists would take a short course of study in the primary school of common, practical business sense they would not make so many mistakes.

Mr. CAPPER obtained the floor.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I desire to interrogate the Senator from Ohio.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. CAPPER. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I have followed this discussion with some interest and quite carefully, but I am a little astonished at the statement just made by the Senator from Ohio that as a result of following the advice, I assume, of Mr. Taussig, of the Tariff Board, the price of sugar to the consumer has been increased 4 cents a pound, the aggregate obviously being something enormous. I should really like to hear, if the Senator from Kansas, who has the floor, will permit it, a statement from the Senator from Ohio as to how he reaches that conclusion.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, it is an easy enough matter to arrive at that conclusion. I asked the Senator from Oregon one or two questions, and the answer to the questions was, in brief, that the sugar probably could have been bought at 6½ cents last August, and that it would now probably cost us, if we were to buy the sugar crop in Cuba, 10½ cents. The difference is 4 cents a pound. I assume that that is going to affect the price in the United States somewhat. The crop in Cuba is about 4,500,000 tons this year. The total beet-sugar production in this country for 1918 was 762,306 tons. It is estimated that it will be something over that amount this year. Our consumption is about 4,000,000 tons annually; that is to say, that is what it was last year. The average consumption last year was about 84 pounds per capita. The consumption this year, it is said, will be about 92 pounds per capita, so that there will be an increased consumption of 8 pounds per capita. During the war we bought sugar at 10½ cents or thereabouts. Senators who have just spoken this morning have indicated that the price at which some of the Cuban sugar has been bought is perhaps 13 cents a pound. We know, as a matter of fact, that many of our consumers are buying sugar at 18, 19, and 20 cents a pound—that is, when they can buy it at all. It is necessary that we secure in the neighborhood of 3,000,000 tons. Now, I take it as a practical business proposition that the price at which we buy this surplus down there of probably 3,000,000 tons is going very largely to fix the price for the rest of the sugar which we buy. Of course, we have a part of the Hawaiian sugar and the Porto Rican crop. I have not figured this out down to the penny, but I think I can give a little information which bears interestingly on the subject.

Figuring the consumption at 92 pounds per capita, the 110,000,000 people of the United States will consume 10,120,000,000 pounds. At 1 cent a pound this 10,120,000,000 pounds will amount to $101,200,000. So that every advance of 1 cent a pound means to the consumers per-year $101,200,000.

At 5 cents it would amount to $506,000,000. At 10½ cents a pound, the price which was fixed for beet sugar, it would amount to $1,062,600,000. At 18 cents, if that price were to prevail, the total cost to the consumers would amount to $1,821,600,000.

In the State of Ohio we have 5,000,000 people, in round numbers. If their consumption is 92 pounds per capita, the total required for the State would be 460,000,000 pounds. At 1 cent a pound that would mean $4,600,000. At 10½ cents a pound it would amount to $48,300,000. That is what it would cost Ohioans. The 4-cent per pound increase, representing the difference between the price at which the Cuban sugar could probably have been bought in August or September, and the price at which it can probably be bought now, will add to the cost of sugar for the Ohio consumers $18,400,000.

It is very easy to take these figures and come to a reasonably accurate statement as to the probable cost of sugar to the country. That is why I have made these observations. I recognize the fact that even in this day and generation when any question of price fixing comes up we are referred to that famous rule that the law of supply and demand controls prices. The economists all say that is so, but the economists do not add to that the corollary which they ought to add to it, namely, that it only controls prices when it is permitted to function.

I think a primary student understands that if a supply is locked up in a warehouse somewhere, and the people can not get it, the supply is not going to affect the price; and if the people of the United States are hungry for sugar, starving for sugar, and they can not get any sugar because it is locked up, then the demand is not going to affect the price very much. That is the practical way of looking at this subject, it seems me, and I am quite willing when it comes to legislation of this kind to take counsel of facts and not of theories. It is because of my belief in these principles, which I have tried to enunciate in a very few words, that I have come to the conclusion that we have paid a high price for the advice which has been given to the country.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I want to indorse in the most emphatic manner possible the remarkably clear and forceful statement made in the Senate Wednesday by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] in support of his bill for a continuation of the Sugar Equalization Board to take control of the available sugar supply and thereby protect the consumers from hoarding, speculation, and profiteering in the future. I think, as he suggested, that this whole subject would have been definitely disposed of by this time but for the delay of the President in executing the recommendation of the Sugar Equalization Board a few months ago.

As a member of the Senate Agricultural Committee I listened to the greater part of the testimony in the sugar hearings, and I think if Senators here had heard that testimony the bill would have been passed some time ago. It convinced me that unless the Government takes charge of the sugar business we will shortly see sugar advance to prices that are practically prohibitive. I was particularly impressed by the testimony of a Washington wholesale dealer, who informed us that he had been offered 22 cents a pound for all the sugar he held and all he could obtain. This dealer and others expressed the opinion that in a short time prices would be practically prohibitive if the Government does not take prompt action.

Mr. President, I represent a State that produces about 50,000 tons of beet sugar annually, and I am as much interested as any other man on this floor in the encouragement of the sugar industry, but in an emergency like this the welfare of 110,000,000 people comes before the interests of any locality or any State.

The burden of my mail in the last month or so has been filled with complaints as to the outrageous price dealers are exacting from the consumers of the country for sugar and for other necessaries of life. Profiteering is rampant throughout the country. I wish to read a telegram recently received by me from L. H. Chapman, one of the city commissioners of Kansas City, Kans., and I might add that substantially the same telegram came to me a few days ago from W. S. McLucas, president of the Chamber of Commerce of Kansas City, Mo. Mr. Chapman's telegram says:

> Oklahoma and Kansas fuel oil sold f. o. b. refinery August and September this year 60 to 80 cents per barrel, October 8 to $1, November 1 to November 10 $1 to $1.10, November 10 to November 20 $1.10 to $1.50. Since November 20 price has increased from 25 to 50 cents daily, and present-week prices have been from $3 to $4.50 per barrel f. o. b. refinery. Contracts were offered in August and September for one year for from 90 cents to $1.25 per barrel. In fact, it was generally understood that fuel oil stored for sale in the winter was for an expected price of $1.25 maximum. Utilities and necessary industries have been operating on the basis of steam coal costs of $3.50 to $4 per ton f. o. b. Kansas City. Three barrels of oil equal 1 ton of coal and prior to coal strike oil sold f. o. b. Kansas City $1.20 to $1.35, representing a comparative cost on basis of equal heat value. A 53-cent freight rate on oil would make the required price at that time of from 70 to 80 cents per barrel. With the present selling price of fuel oil if the public utilities operated, the total daily receipts would only cover costs of fuel and less than 50 per cent of the daily wages of employees. If oil can be furnished at reasonable price water, light, and transportation companies can continue to operate and at the same time can furnish power to the essential industries for part running time, which will prevent turning thousands of men out of employment in Kansas City, Kans. Situation is most serious.
>
> L. H. CHAPMAN.
> KANSAS CITY, KANS.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. CAPPER. Certainly.

Mr. RANSDELL. I merely wish to ask the Senator if, in his opinion, sugar is the only thing, in view of the statement he has just made, that requires congressional legislation in order to prevent profiteering?

Mr. CAPPER. No, sir; but there is a peculiar situation as to sugar. There is a shortage of sugar probably as in no other commodity now being used by the public.

Mr. RANSDELL. There is a great deal of profiteering, though, in many other commodities besides sugar.

Mr. CAPPER. Undoubtedly; and I think it is getting worse instead of better.

Mr. RANSDELL. And that applies to food products as well as to fuel oil.

Mr. CAPPER. There is no doubt of it.

Mr. President, the profiteers of big business—and this includes a lot of coal operators—are as great or a greater menace to us and our institutions than the Bolsheviks, the I. W. W.'s, and the radicals, who are preaching the overthrow of government, and, let me say, I will go the limit in supporting every measure which will stamp out Bolshevism and anarchy.

Because, among other things, the operators wished to pocket their war profits while paying the miners wages lower in buying power than they were receiving in 1913, the people to keep warm had to resort to fuel oil, another natural resource provided by the Almighty. And what happened? Why, the usual thing. The price of fuel oil has been advanced 300 per cent in less than 30 days by a bunch of oil profiteers, not because of the increased cost of production, that already has been well taken care of, but simply because the men in control of this product could get the money by exploiting the people's need. Unlike bandit Carlisle, they are willing to take it from old men and women and from soldiers and sailors, as well as from schools, heating plants, and hospitals.

I have filed charges direct with the Attorney General against the oil profiteers in Kansas City and in Kansas who have taken advantage of the fuel shortage period to line their pockets, and have demanded immediate investigation, prosecution, and imprisonment of those found guilty. I am glad to say to the credit of the Attorney General that he began his investigation the day following, and undoubtedly will get results, as this is profiteering of the rankest kind.

Mr. President, unless we speedily check price gouging the high cost of profits is soon to be translated into the excessive cost of existence, and an unbearable and still more difficult situation will arise. We are beginning to hear about $18 shoes, $80 hand-me-downs, and $15 hats for next spring, notwithstanding the people have bought and paid for all the cotton and woolen mills in a single year, as during the war they bought and paid for all the shoe factories, all the big flour mills, all the steel mills, the sawmills, the packing houses, the tanneries, the coal mines, and who knows what else, and yet do not own them and are at the mercy of excessively priced products. I do not concede that as yet labor troubles and slack production are responsible, except in part, for the more and more excessive toll exacted of the consumer.

While the people made sacrifices and fought during the war, and are still fighting and sacrificing, these industries have paid no part in the cost of the national defense, nor have they contributed anything to help the country except at war prices and for tremendous profits. And now they are collecting their war taxes from the people and exacting excessive toll besides by "soaking" them for all they can get for their products.

The war is over, but speculation, spoliation, and plunder are as rampant as ever and more daring. Train robbery or burglary is a poor trade by comparison.

According to the papers to-day Bradstreet's report shows that the cost of things to eat has increased another 1½ per cent in the last 30 days, notwithstanding the millions lost in falling markets by middle western producers, and stands at the highest level ever known.

When sugar is released from Federal control December 31, we may certainly expect to see that necessity soar.

Nine months ago a dollar would buy 5 pounds of coffee. To-day it will buy only 2 pounds.

A nickel sack of tobacco now costs 10 cents. In it the smoker finds a little card which reads: "Special notice: This package should be sold for 5 cents. Your dealer makes a fair margin of profit at this price."

Lumber sells at from $68 to $102 per thousand feet. I have it from a lumberman who has spent his life in the business that this is at least 30 per cent beyond all reasonable profit.

And so it goes, and will continue to go, Mr. President, until we beggar the people, lower consumption, and kill demand, unless we find and apply the means to check the game of grab which is at the bottom of most of our present troubles. Men working for wages may be expected to keep asking for more. They must if a family of five is to be shod with $18 shoes all around and supplied with other wearables and with eatables at constantly increasing prices.

Profiteering is now a prison offense, and I hope to see State governments actively assist the Federal Department of Justice in bringing all such offenders to book. Let the powers of Government be summoned into action for the protection of the people, as is now being done so admirably by the State of Kansas in the Kansas coal fields, keeping in mind every hour of the day and every day of the week that the interests of the public are above and beyond those of any organization or association, whether of capital or of individuals.

I am inclined to think that as an emergency measure it might be well to give the Federal Government power to limit gross profits, as Canada has been doing so successfully, requiring every dealer or manufacturer from the time the raw material leaves the hands of the producer until the product reaches the consumer to mark the cost price to him on all his goods, also his own selling price, and be prepared to show invoices. This will make it possible quickly to spot the man who is doing the profiteering.

I advance these suggestions not as emergency measures alone but to curb a widespread evil and abuse which has long been growing until it has become the bane of legitimate business, a serious handicap to honest merchandising, an incubus to national prosperity, and a grievous burden to the American people now saddled with a huge war debt and supporting a $5,000,000,000 a year Government.

What deep suffering shall we have to go through before every American can see clearly that, with a world slowly and desperately beating back to normal condition, we must ourselves pull together and stand together for the common good to achieve our own personal good. We shall none of us better our condition by stepping on the other fellow's neck to gain greater profits or to win a brief increase of wage, and least of all advance our fortunes by traveling Russia's red road to ruin. But I want especially to-day to emphasize that the business man, or any other man, who now seeks personal advantage at the expense of the common good is in the same class as the red-flag demagogue, the black-flag profiteer, and the war-profit patriot.

If we, a peaceful Nation, can send 4,000,000 of the best soldiers the world has ever seen to Europe in one year and raise $25,000,000,000 in half as many months to carry on a war, we can solve these postwar problems. We can settle the profiteering evil. If we do not protect from these profiteering wolves the 100,000,000 men and women who feed and clothe and supply this country's needs, we can certainly rest assured that the blame for this failure of duty will be placed where it belongs—at the seat of government.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I shall support the amendment. I see no occasion for the zones. I should like to know from the Senator in charge of the bill whether the board ever had any authority under the law to establish a zone system? Is any such authority given the board?

Mr. McNARY. Of course, the Sugar Equalization Board was created and now functions under the provisions of the food-control act known as the Lever Act. I do not know of any express authority which permitted the equalization board to prescribe these unfortunate and uneconomic zones, but it has been done, and the amendment which has been offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] will remove and correct that situation.

Mr. OVERMAN. I shall support the amendment, for they had no authority to establish the zones. I believe the trouble is with the board. I sent them a letter which I received from a constituent of mine asking why he could not buy sugar where he had been buying it for 50 years, when he could buy it there more cheaply, and why he should be required to buy it in New Orleans. I wrote the equalization board asking what the trouble was and if they could answer the man's question. They wrote back a very curt letter, saying that the man ought to be able to buy sugar not where he could buy more cheaply but where he could buy sugar. It was a very curt letter.

I think we have a very incompetent board and that the trouble comes from the board more than anything else. I shall support the amendment, though I think they have no authority and never did have authority to establish a zone system. They have taxed the people in my district millions of dollars. We could have bought sugar in another zone, but they would not allow the producers in that zone to sell us any sugar. Without any authority, they have gone ahead and fixed the zone system. I think the board ought to be turned off and some new men of common sense employed.

Mr. GAY. Mr. President, the bill under discussion seeks to perpetuate one of the great Government boards organized for war-time emergency. It seeks to single out one great American industry to place restrictions on it and to give power to a corporation which, for more than a year, has had full control of the sugar industry of the United States.

The United States Sugar Equalization Board (Inc.) was organized under the laws of the State of Delaware in July, 1918, with a capital of $5,000,000; it was given broad power; it could purchase or otherwise acquire, manufacture, sell, or otherwise dispose of, store, handle, and otherwise deal in and with raw and refined beet and cane sugar, sirup, molasses, and other commodities, and to do all acts and things necessary, expedient, or incidental to the conduct of the said business, and to exercise all power which may be delegated to it by the President of the United States. The question arises whether the Sugar Equalization Board should be continued in its present capacity. If this question should be answered in the affirmative—that is, that it would be to the best interest of the Nation to continue the equalization board—then the question necessarily arises, Why?

When the Great War was entered into by the United States the food-control act was passed. It was brought to bear and operate directly upon the sugar industry of the United States. There was an acute shortage of sugar in the United States at that time—fall of 1917—and if the law of supply and demand had been permitted to operate refined sugar would likely have sold for 25 or 30 cents per pound, but the power of the Government deprived the beet and Louisiana producer of a very large profit in 1917, but they patriotically accepted it without protest.

Then the question arose, How would it be possible to increase the production of sugar in the United States and at the same time hold down the price? Various schemes were suggested by the Food Administration and persons representing the sugar industry, and at last the idea creating the equalization board was adopted. This board was incorporated, and its entire capital stock of $5,000,000 was subscribed by the President of the United States for the Government. It became an arm of the Food Administration for the purpose of administering its affairs relative to sugar. With the power vested in the Food Administration, through the President, it could control absolutely the disposition and price of sugar in the United States. It could buy the Cuban crop, and we dare say could buy it at almost any price named for the reason that the Cuban Government, without ships, was powerless to transport its sugar except by the aid of the Allies. Therefore, when the Royal Commission, representing England, France, and Italy, and the equalization board, representing the United States, decided to buy the Cuban crop, the Cubans had no alternative except to sell—not that they would have objected, to the contrary we believe the sons of that little isle were as patriotic as any who entered the list against the Hun.

So the equalization board, through the Shipping Board and the Food Administration, having the power to embargo exports and imports, could, without difficulty, control the price of sugar by fixing the price on Cuban sugar.

Mr. President, we contend that the present sugar shortage is only temporary.

As stated in the report of the minority members of the Agricultural Committee, we are of the opinion that even without the purchase of the Cuban crop there would not be such a scarcity of sugar in this country, as is anticipated by the majority members of the Committee on Agriculture. Even now, with this temporary shortage, refined sugar on the eastern seaboard is selling at 9 cents and beet sugar in the West is selling from 10 to 11 cents, and Louisiana sugar in the South is selling at 17 cents.

The power given the equalization board was justified by the war. Is its continuance justified, as peace is practically here and formal declaration evidencing a state of peace will necessarily be issued before a great while? Our answer is, No. We believe that the Nation should resume its normal peace basis. We believe the law of supply and demand should now be permitted to operate. We believe that it is the fundamental principle of free government that the nation which is least governed is best governed, and that it is no part of governmental function to engage in private enterprise or unjustly interfere with the private business of its citizens. But, say those who look at the situation from purely a material standpoint and not involving any fundamental principles of free government, that by buying the Cuban crop the American people can secure sugar much cheaper than to permit it to be purchased by various sugar refiners, dealers, or brokers. In this day of high cost of living this is a very appealing argument, and as the food-control act authorizes voluntary contracts and continuation of same until their termination, even though peace has been declared, and thereby the food-control act ceases to exist, they see no reason why the equalization board, acting for the Food Administration, should not proceed at once to purchase the Cuban crop, and numerous ideas of this character have been suggested from almost every quarter; but the equalization board, standing as it does as the representative of the Food Administration and of the American people, answer that they fear to undertake the purchase unless there is legislation, and the president of the board has stated that he considers it too late.

They are thoroughly familiar with the situation, and their judgment in the matter we shall not attempt to show is incorrect; to the contrary, we are rather inclined to agree with them, especially since a considerable proportion of the Cuban crop has already been purchased and is in other hands. The equalization board would necessarily feel that their purchase of the Cuban crop might not be able to control the price. Of course, if they had sufficient quantity of Cuban sugar to promptly meet the demand at any point in the United States at the price named, and that price was a lower price than could be met by outside interests, then necessarily it would control the price, but in sizing up the situation at this time, with a portion of the Cuban crop already sold and the uncertainty that the entire crop can be purchased by them and at what price, they necessarily feel that they might not be able to accomplish the purpose desired.

So the whole question in the final analysis is answered by whether or not we are in favor of this proposed bill. We are not in favor of this bill for the reason already stated; we are opposed to further regulations for the singling out of one industry to impose restriction. Then, can the equalization board continue its operations in 1920 without such legislation? They say no. Is the legislation so important as to sacrifice the principles upon which this free Government is builded and continue these regulations in time of peace?

The situation that confronts the Louisiana sugar producer is a very difficult one. His crop goes on the market during the months of November and December, just as the Cuban 1918–19 crop is being finally disposed of, which crop was purchased by the equalization board, and we understand there is now on hand a part of last year's crop yet undistributed and that several factories are operating on the new crop. This is nothing like the amount sufficient to supply the needs of the people of the United States, and therefore is not sufficient to control the price. It goes without saying that the beet-sugar people of the West could not sell their beet sugar as they are now doing at 10 to 11 cents if the consumer obtain cane granulated from the East at 9 cents, nor would the people of the South pay a higher price for louisiana sugar if they can secure cane sugar from the East at 9 cents.

This is brought about by the law of supply and demand. The demand is here but there is not sufficient 9-cent sugar to fill the demand. The demand being acute, a higher price is offered in order to secure the sugar. Then the question arises, Shall the Louisiana sugar producer of the South and the beet-sugar producer of the West accept the higher price or shall he be called upon through patriotism or otherwise to continue the 9-cent price? We answer that nothing of this kind should be expected of him. He is an American citizen; he produces a necessary commodity; one that is used on every table in the United States. His product was considered the most essential of all food products in supplying our Army and equipping them for heroic service upon the battle fields of France and Flanders.

Therefore, is there any reason why sugar should be singled out either by law or in the public mind and required to make a sacrifice when no other agricultural product is thus treated? This would be true if everything consumed on the sugar plantation, everything that goes into the making of the sugar crop, was raised by the sugar producer, but such is not the fact. A large proportion of other agricultural products goes into the cane production. In other words, most of the great bulk of the gross receipts from the sugar crop is distributed to almost every variety of producer. For instance, this year in Louisiana the country will be bare of feed for their teams by the 1st of February. This corn and provender must be bought from the corn raisers of the West.

Some years prior to the war 8 to 10 pounds of sugar would purchase a bushel of corn. At the 9-cent price it takes from 18 to 24 pounds of sugar to buy a bushel of corn. Peas, sown for fertilizer, prior to the war were worth $1.50 a bushel. From 25 to 30 pounds of sugar would buy a bushel of peas. Last year we paid from $5 to $7 per bushel for such peas, and therefore it would take, at the 9-cent price—the price at which we sold our sugar last season—from 60 to 80 pounds of sugar to buy a bushel of peas. Sugar even at 17 or 18 cents is not on a prewar parity with other commodities. This is true with reference to fertilizer, machinery, tools, implements, mules and other animals, labor, and, in fact, everything that goes into the making of the sugar crop. Our sugar is consumed by the producers and vendors of these articles that are bought and used by the sugar planter, and it is hardly fair to say that the corn producer of the West is entitled to double the amount of sugar for a bushel of corn now that he received prior to the war, or the farmer of North and South Carolina and other sections of the South is entitled to from 60 to 80 pounds of sugar for a bushel of peas, when prior to the war the exchange could be made for 25 or 30 pounds of sugar.

So if there is a farmer in the United States who is entitled to the just return for his product raised, there is no reason why the sugar producer should be excluded. It is fair that he should receive the market price for his product. He is confronted with disaster unless he gets a much higher price than that received last year. He entered into a voluntary contract with the Food Administration last year by which he agreed that Mr. Hoover, United States Food Administrator, should be authorized to name the price at which his sugar should be sold, and that he would conform thereto. Mr. Hoover appointed a committee who painstakingly and carefully went into the question and decided that a price of $7.28 for raw sugar and $8.82 net for refined sugar would be the price at which he would be permitted to sell his upper and lower grades, with corresponding differentials for intermediate grades. He patriotically conformed to this agreement. His 1918 sugar has long since been disposed of, and now the 1919 crop is on the market. The new beet crop is coming on and there is a remnant of the 1918–19 Cuban crop still on hand. We understand that the distribution of this remnant of the Cuban crop, however, is to be confined to the eastern seaboard, and that the distribution will continue at the 9-cent price. We understand that the beet producers are called upon to supply the West, and it is agreed that the fair price for beet sugar, considering the average crop that has been produced and the price at which the beets have been purchased from the farmers, would be 10 cents per pound, since which time the beet people have complained of the sugar output per ton and have been permitted to sell at 12 cents and even higher. Whereas if the Louisiana producer, with his less than one-half crop, should agree to sell his product at either of the prices, a great many of them would go into the bankrupt court.

The difference between the beet producer of the West and the cane producer of the South is, we understand, that most of the beets are produced by farmers who have little or no interest in the factory and that the contract of purchase is made and based upon a flat price; that is, the manufacturer pays $10 per ton for beets, whereas the Louisiana manufacturer buys his cane upon a sliding scale. The contract price usually is the market value of 100 pounds of sugar for a ton of cane. The value of this sugar is determined by the market value, and even if the Louisiana producer had a full crop and felt inclined to meet the price established in other sections of the United States for sugar he would be doing an injustice to the cane raiser and would be answerable to him both morally and legally for the value of that cane, based upon the market value of the sugar and not upon the low price at which he had agreed to sell it. This year, however, when it has cost more to cultivate an acre of cane than last year, and where the yield is less than 50 per cent of last year—and even last year in a number of instances the planter showed no profit—it is perfectly apparent that unless he gets a price something like double what he got last year that his crop this year will prove a great disaster financially.

I ask permission to insert at this point the views of the minority of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and also a statement from the committee of Louisiana sugar producers who appeared before that committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

	Tons.
The Cuban crop for 1920 is estimated at	4,500,000
The local consumption in Cuba amounts to	150,000
Thus leaving for export	4,350,000
Mr. Zabriskie, the president of the United States Sugar Equalization Board, stated before our committee that about one-fourth of this crop had been sold partly to European countries and in part to American refiners; deducting this one-fourth, or	1,087,500
We have in Cuba, still remaining for export	3,262,500

The Government estimates of the domestic sugar crop of the United States and its possessions are as follows:

	Short tons.
Beet crop, United States	953,000
Louisiana cane crop	138,000
Hawaiian cane crop	600,000
Porto Rican cane crop	300,000
Total	1,991,000

SUGAR SHORTAGE.

	Tons.
Reduced to long tons this domestic crop would be	1,777,700
Adding Cuban crop, now available for purchase and export	3,262,500
Leaves a total for distribution in this country of (To this may be added such portion of the Cuban crop as has already been purchased by refiners in this country, and also such portion of the Philippine crop as may be brought to this country.)	5,040,200
The estimated consumption of sugar in this country for the current year amounts to about	4,260,000
Thus leaving a surplus of	780,200

In support of this view I beg to annex herewith the memorandum submitted by Dr. Taussig to the President on August 14, 1919, in which he dissented from the views of a majority of the United States Sugar Equalization Board.

MEMORANDUM.

"I regret not to be able to reach the same conclusion as the other members of the Sugar Equalization Board. I believe that no negotiation should be entered in with the Cuban producers and that the regulation and restriction of sugar prices should cease with the close of the present arrangement, December 31.

"It is true that the evidence now available points to a shortage of sugar in 1920 and to a possibility of prices in that year as high as those of 1919, or even higher. But no certain conclusions can be reached about the future. Prices of sugar will be affected not only by the incoming supplies, but by the general political and monetary conditions of the whole world. The general level of prices in the United States and in other countries may be lower than it is now. Consumption may be reduced by changes in general business conditions or by restrictive measures in importing countries. The present recommendation of the board is that the United States (through the board) should repeat a huge commercial venture, in the hope of protecting consumers and of incurring no loss, but with the clear possibility of having to assume a loss. The operation would involve a guaranty by the Government of extremely high profits to the Cuban sugar planters, and also a virtual guarantee of similar profits to our beet-sugar producers, as well as to the planters of Louisiana, Hawaii, and Porto Rico. It would necessarily lead to contracts with the sugar refiners which would guarantee good profits to them also. No doubt, in the absence of Government regulation, all these producers might make profits higher still; but prediction as to the outcome one way or the other can not be made with any confidence. Business of this kind may be undertaken by the Government under stress of war, but should cease now that we are at peace.

"Moreover, the regulation of the price of sugar can not, in my judgment, stand alone. The whole relation of Government to industry in time of peace is involved. If the price of sugar is to be specifically controlled, so should that of bread, of meat, of clothing. In the main, we must look for a remedy to the natural development of production and to the return of the entire world to normal financial and economical conditions."

—

STATEMENT FROM COMMITTEE OF LOUISIANA SUGAR PRODUCERS.

During the war the Food Administration has prevailed upon all sugar producers supplying the American market to base their price upon cost of production plus a fair profit.

Each time that the delegates of Louisiana sugar industry have appeared before the Food Commission or the Equilization Board they have been confronted with the statement that the public demands justified no greater price for sugar than was represented by the cost of production plus the fair profit mentioned.

One year ago, in line with this ruling of the Food Commission, we, representing the sugar producers of the State of Louisiana, appeared before the Food Commission and presented tabulated cost sheets. Working from these cost sheets, the Food Commission settled upon a price of $8.82 delivered New Orleans per hundred pounds as the price of plantation granulated sugars. After the harvest season, which was a most trying one on account of excessive and almost continuous rain, the said price was proven by the balance sheets of many sugar producers in Louisiana to have been entirely inadequate. Nevertheless, the price was set and the majority of Louisiana sugar producers thereunder made a meager profit and many registered a considerable loss.

We are now asked the question, "What is a fair price for Louisiana to receive this year for its sugar and what our cost sheets would indicate?" We can answer this question in what we believe will be a perfectly satisfactory manner to your committee and in just a few words.

The Government authorities have repeatedly and continually made the statement that the Lousiana sugar crop of this year is less than 50 per cent of a normal crop; that is to say, less than 50 per cent of last year's crop. During the course of the year all costs entering into the production of sugar in Louisiana have increased. This being interpreted means that by comparison with last year, when we made a meager profit or loss, we have expended on an acre of sugar land much more than last year, and from the Government reports, with which we entirely agree, we will harvest from the said acre less than half of last year's tonnage. Therefore, the natural conclusion is that a fair price for this year's Louisiana crop would be a price far in excess of the present fixed price.

We only desire, however, such a price as will avoid disaster and one that will encourage the cane producers to continue in the business and not further curtail their output. The Louisiana sugar producer does not desire to be placed in the position of being misunderstood by the sugar consumer in the marketing of this crop. The chairman of the equalization board, Mr. Zabriskie, on page 67 of the hearings before the subcommittee, of which Senator McNARY is chairman, has made the following statements in answer to questions of Congressman MARTIN:

"Mr. MARTIN. In testifying before the Senate committee that investigated sugar Mr. Hoover made this statement in reference to contracts: 'Supposing that we had made no agreement with him—that is, the producer—during this shortage, he would probably have sold his sugar at 25 or 30 cents a pound.' Do you agree with that statement?"

"Mr. ZABRISKIE. I think it would bring 25 or 30 cents a pound.

"Mr. MARTIN. Then by virtue of that contract the consumers saved that amount and the producers lost that amount?

"Mr. ZABRISKIE. Yes, sir.

"Mr. GLASGOW. The producers lost what they might have made.

"Mr. MARTIN. As a matter of fact, you had no trouble entering into the contracts with the producers?

"Mr. ZABRISKIE. They are all voluntary and they all lived up to their agreements.

"Mr. MARTIN. Now, you said something about the Louisiana crop. Do you know how short that crop will be this year?

"Mr. ZABRISKIE. Well, our advice would indicate that they would not have more than half of what they raised a year ago.

"Mr. MARTIN. As a matter of fact, there are a great many factories there that will not turn a wheel.

"Mr. ZABRISKIE. Probably.

"Mr. MARTIN. Many will have to use this year's crop for the planting of next year's crop?

"Mr. ZABRISKIE. Yes.

"Mr. MARTIN. That being the case, even if they got 15 cents a pound, many of them will lose money?

"Mr. ZABRISKIE. I think they would, Congressman.

"Mr. MARTIN. It is a question how much they will lose. Is this short crop due to causes beyond their control, or is there any way for them to make a better crop?

"Mr. ZABRISKIE. Why, I think they exerted every effort to make a big crop.

"Mr. MARTIN. And it is due to shortage of labor and bad weather?

"Mr. ZABRISKIE. That is what our reports are.

"Mr. MARTIN. And upon a very material increase, also, in all the articles that go into the production of sugar.

"Mr. ZABRISKIE. Yes; that is true.

"Mr. MARTIN. Over last year?

"Mr. ZABRISKIE. Yes."

This statement will unquestionably prevent the Louisiana sugar producer from being classed as a profiteer, and we believe no higher authority will be needed to safeguard us from being put in the class of profiteers, as Mr. Zabriskie has so correctly expressed the situation that prevails in Louisiana this year. Nevertheless, we realize fully that the average purchaser of sugar may not be thoroughly acquainted with these facts, and when such consumer is confronted with the situation of a sugar market in New York, say, 9 cents, and a Chicago sugar market of 10 or 10½ cents, and a Louisiana sugar market of a very much higher price, he will be prone to believe that he is being unfairly dealt with by the sugar producer of Louisiana.

The sugar producers of Louisiana have throughout the period of the war complied with every ruling of the food commission and have, for patriotic reasons, like other sugar producers, sacrificed profit for the good of the Nation and have accepted a price which has netted them, we believe, for the two past seasons less than the average of a 10-year period—and this, too, at a time when they might have sold sugar at a price which would have made the industry secure for many decades against a period of lean years.

Now that the war is over we are unalterably opposed to a continuation of the control of prices and the licensing system, and we believe that the untrammeled operation of the law of supply and demand should no longer be interfered with. Louisiana refuses to be put in the attitude of assuming the responsibility for either the scarcity or the high price of sugar for the approaching year, but we can not agree that the price of sugar be placed at such a figure as will mean ruin and disaster to the sugar producers of our State.

In a spirit of fairness and with the view of so adjusting prices and the marketing of the Louisiana crop we have met and conferred with members of the Sugar Equalization Board, who freely admit that the Louisiana producers must sell their product at a very much increased price over last year in order to avert disaster, but take the position that without additional legislation they do not see their way clear to purchase the Cuban crop. This is a matter of which the Equalization Board is perhaps the best judge. We do not oppose the purchasing of the Cuban crop, but as the Sugar Equalization Board insist that they must have the additional power of license both for the domestic refiners and producers, we do not believe that the necessity of such purchase will justify the enactment of a law continuing for another year the power of licensing and price fixing.

(Signed) R. E. MILLING.
E. F. DICKINSON.
E. A. PHARR.
J. C. LE BOURGEOIS.
R. O. YOUNG.

Mr. GAY. Mr. President, the McNary bill contemplates the extension of the Sugar Equalization Board as a governmental body. The important function it performed while this country was engaged in the titanic struggle from which we have recently emerged is a matter of history.

I do not want to be regarded as one of those who are finding fault with the management of the various branches or departments of our Government while we were at war. No sacrifice, however great, was great enough when we started in this conflict or while we were engaged therein.

The Sugar Equalization Board was one of the necessities which resulted from the Food Administration, and fortunate indeed were they to secure men of such talent and ability. The power given the Food Administration was unique in the history of our country. The Sugar Equalization Board was but a branch of this administration, but cooperative under the Delaware charter, presumably for the protection of those engaged in the administration of her affairs. They performed an important function by calling in conference the sugar producers of the United States and a committee representing the sugar producers of the Republic of Cuba to consider what would be a fair price for both the raw and the refined product, and a price was agreed upon. Every thought at that time was to lend some effort to help in some way, no matter at what cost or what sacrifice, to the winning of the World War. Sugar was necessary—was regarded as one of the great essentials for both the men in arms, for our allies, and for the people at home. It was found necessary to put the quantity on a ration basis, 3 pounds being the limit which people could buy, and it was also found necessary to encourage production everywhere. It was urged that all available lands be cultivated and planted in this country in beets or in cane from which sugar could be derived.

When the Sugar Equalization Board was first organized, and when it had completed its contract with the Cuban Government for its entire crop and had made its sale of one-third thereof to the British Royal Commission, there was great anxiety on the part of the board that they would have difficulty in disposing of the two-thirds of the Cuban crop which the board had bought. This occurred in March and April of this year. There was no real inducement on the part of the wholesale grocers or manufacturers throughout the United States to lay in an adequate supply and to look ahead because the Food Administration had established a marginal profit. There was no speculative profit for the man to buy when sugar was in full supply and to sell when it might be in great demand, so that throughout the United States supplies of sugar were allowed to run down by the wholesale grocers, so that sugar backed up on the part of the refiners. One refiner had something like $50,000,000 tied up in sugar, and they were all concerned; the board was concerned.

This, Mr. President, is the testimony given by Mr. Zabriskie, president of the equalization board.

The sugar from Porto Rico that was pressing the market at great expense was held on lighters until it could be made available, and there was great anxiety that the normal amount of sugar which had been bought could be disposed of.

About the last of June or first of July refiners began to notice their stock depleting. There was no thought of scarcity at that time. That did not begin to shape up until the latter part of July. Mr. Zabriskie further states in the hearings before the subcommittee of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry: "Then we got to the point where the capacity of the refineries—and the business of the refiner is only limited by his capacity; and one of the strange things about the industry is that the refining capacity of the United States is not twice the normal requirements, not much more than one and one-half times the normal requirements. So that the refiners must anticipate their wants in times of plentitude of sugar for that time when they may have an excessive demand—that is, the preserving season."

Mr. President, the beet-sugar crop and the Louisiana and Texas cane-sugar crops come on the market for distribution usually at a time when the stock from Cuba is pretty well depleted, and supplies the demand of the United States until sugar is again available from Cuba.

The western beet crop of 1919 at the beginning of the harvest season was considered above the normal. The sugar crop of Louisiana was less than 50 per cent normal. The Sugar Equalization Board conferred with representatives from both the beet-growing sections and Louisiana, looking to the establishment of a fair price for this season. The voluntary contract which had been made for the war emergency had expired and the sugar producers of Louisiana felt that their product was entitled to go on the market at its real value, according to the law which has always regulated the price of a commodity—the law of supply and demand.

The Department of Justice, under power given it for the war emergency, which power is still in effect, notified the officials of the Department of Justice throughout the country that they would institute proceedings for profiteering against sugar producers who sold at what they considered an excess price. The sugar producers of Louisiana knowing that they had less than one-half crop realized that they would not be profiteering even at the highest price at which sugar sold in October and the first few days of November, but to avoid litigation and to prevent the impression which would naturally prevail throughout the country due to the sudden increase in the price from the control or war emergency price of 9 cents to the natural price or that price which the demand for sugar justified, immediately conferred with the officials of the Department of Justice looking to the establishment of a maximum price for sugar, which would prevent endless litigation and likewise prevent the bankruptcy of an established American industry. Seventeen cents was the price agreed upon for yellow, or what is known as clarified sugar, and 18 cents was the price established for granulated sugar.

The Louisiana producers were offered and it was insisted that they accept contract for a far greater price than the now established price. Enough of these contracts were offered from territories supplied by beet and Cuban sugars, and which were entirely out of the Louisiana zone, to consume the entire output of the State of Louisiana. The Louisiana producers voluntarily refused these contracts and canceled the offer made at these high prices after conferring with representatives of the Department of Justice and have been living faithfully up to the agreement with the Department of Justice when they know full well that their commodity was worth a great deal more, and they realize that they were in no sense profiteering even at a much greater price than the one agreed upon with the officials of the Department of Justice.

Mr. President, resolutions were recently passed by the Grain Dealers' National Association of St. Louis, at St. Louis, Mo., which I shall read, as follows:

RETURN GRAIN BUSINESS TO PEOPLE.

Resolutions passed at the twenty-third annual convention of the Grain Dealers' National Association, held at St. Louis, Mo., on October 13, 14, and 15, 1919.

Whereas the system of marketing the grain crops of this country which was in operation before we entered the Great War is the result of the experience and best thought of several generations of grain merchants, and is believed by us to be the best and most satisfactory system yet devised for the economical distribution of grain from producer to consumer; and

Whereas during the period of the war the many regulations and restrictions relative to the sale and distribution of grain and grain products as promulgated by the Government and its agencies have been patiently and patriotically observed by the grain trade; and

Whereas in time of peace these war-time regulations and restrictions are, in our judgment, neither necessary nor advisable: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Grain Dealers' National Association calls upon the Federal Government and its agencies (as soon after the conclusion of peace as is consistent with the national welfare and with existing contracts and obligations) to entirely disassociate themselves from grain control and return to the people the grain business as nearly as possible in the same condition as it was before the war.

OPPOSED TO GOVERNMENT LICENSES.

Whereas the unparalleled prosperity of this country and its wonderful progress in industry, commerce, agriculture, manufacturing, and transportation have resulted largely from the private initiative, enterprise, courage, and industry of its citizens, unhampered by Government control or regulations; and

Whereas the citizens of the United States should be allowed in their occupations the largest liberty consistent with the rights of others: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Grain Dealers' National Association is opposed to a governmental policy of licensing interstate business and subjecting it to rules and regulations promulgated by governmental agencies or commissions, and urges all Members of Congress to oppose such policy and to defeat any legislation intended to inaugurate such a system of Government control of business.

These resolutions, Mr. President, conclusively show how the business people of this country regard further war-time control, and they express very accurately the feeling of the sugar producers of the United States, who constitute as patriotic a body of men as there are anywhere in America, who have discharged every war obligation and who now simply ask that their business be returned to the natural channels of trade which have heretofore existed. I think it is manifestly unfair to single out this industry and to make it the target of such legislation, and that it is only right and proper that the sugar producers and the sugar industry should be treated just as all other classes of business, other agricultural products, and all other industries are treated. We demand fair play. For the reasons I have stated, Mr. President, I am very much opposed to the passage of the pending bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire to say before this bill is passed and the pending amendment is adopted that, in my opinion, the legislation does not go far enough, and I sincerely hope that at the other end of the Capitol the House of Representatives will amend the bill so as to make it more effective, in order to guarantee to the people of the United States that sugar may really be had at a more reasonable price. I base that expression upon this state of facts: I had intended to offer as a substitute for the pending bill the original bill proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] at the instance of the Sugar Equalization Board. When that original bill came before the committee I was very much in favor of the proposed legislation and used every effort in my power to aid its passage, but I voted against continuing the licensing powers given to the Sugar Equalization Board. I voted against that in the committee because the committee were informed that there were certain Senators who had stated that they would speak at such length so as to kill the proposed legislation if the licensing feature should be adopted.

We are in a peculiar parliamentary situation at this time. I realize, as all Senators must realize, that, under the rules of the Senate, unless we can pass this proposed legislation in its present form through the Senate it probably can not be passed at all. On yesterday we made a most heroic effort to get the pending bill before the Senate by substituting it for the railroad bill. The vote on that motion was 27 to 32; we were turned down, and consequently we had to rely, in order to pass this measure, upon its consideration during the morning hour each day. It would be impossible to secure its passage in that way, because any Senator opposed to the legislation might utilize the time before the expiration of the morning hour each day and thereby defeat the bill.

I realize, as all Senators who are familiar with the subject realize, that so long as the Congress has jurisdiction of this matter and declines to act the price of sugar will continue to soar and we will be further away from obtaining the Cuban crop of sugar. It has been stated—I do not know with what force—that the American refineries are refusing to purchase the Cuban crop of sugar so long as Congress is considering this matter. Certainly it seems to me that Congress should let the refineries know whether we are going to take action, so that if we are not going to take action they may go to Cuba and purchase the Cuban sugar. Whether there is any truth in the statement to which I have referred I do not know.

It has been hinted repeatedly that the President of the United States is responsible for the failure of appropriate action being taken to reduce the cost of sugar or to obtain the Cuban crop of sugar. I say to the Senate and to the country that the facts do not sustain that statement. The Sugar Equalization Board, on August 20, did suggest to the President of the United States that it might be a good idea to obtain the Cuban sugar crop; and no action was taken. It will be recalled, however, that Prof. Taussig, a member of the board, took a different view; the board was divided upon that proposition. The President was considering it, until very suddenly he became ill; but the Congress of the United States can not excuse itself for its failure in this emergency.

Hearings were started on this proposition before the Senate committee on October 3. The Agricultural Committee of the Senate reported favorably a bill on November 7, and that bill has been on the calendar of the Senate since that date. The Senate of the United States has had jurisdiction of this matter since October 3—practically 10 weeks—during which time the Cuban producers were ready to sell their sugar. In the meantime the price of sugar to the consumers of this country has continued to increase and Congress has failed to do anything. I submit that the situation, deplorable as it is, to-day is due to the Congress of the United States failing to take action to pass this legislation at least since October 3, when it came to the attention of Congress.

I have no sympathy with the opponents of this legislation. No one ever dreamed that sugar would go beyond 15 cents. The hearings conclusively show that. Yet we are to-day faced with the condition that the producers of Louisiana are obtaining 17 cents a pound for sugar, and the people in my State and other States of the South and perhaps in other sections of the country are paying upward of 20 cents a pound. I know, because instances have come to me where retailers in Mississippi have sold sugar to the consumers at 27 cents a pound.

I took up that matter immediately with the Department of Justice. I asked for an immediate investigation, and I hope that those men who are profiteering in my State, as well as in the other States of the Union, who make such unreasonable and exorbitant profits on sugar, will be placed in jail. There is no reason for sugar selling for 20 cents per pound or, in my opinion, 17 cents a pound. Last year and year before last the Sugar Equalization Board sent out inspectors, and they investigated the cost of production of sugar in the United States. It was a fair investigation, because I have never heard it protested against; and on that investigation the Sugar Equalization Board fixed 9 cents a pound as a fair price and one that would allow reasonable profits to the producers of sugar in this country.

I realize that there is not this year as large a crop of sugar in certain localities in this country as last year or the year before; but it is preposterous to assume that 17 cents a pound is a reasonable price for sugar, and I can not see any reason or fairness or justice in the proposition, because 100,000 tons of sugar might be produced in one State of this Union, that when the American people need 4,000,000 tons for consumption the great majority of the people should be burdened with an enormous and an exorbitant and an unreasonable price in order to take care of this 100,000 tons.

I sympathize with my friends from Louisiana. God knows I love the two Senators from that State. I want to stand with the people of Louisiana in every reasonable request they may make. Only an imaginary boundary line divides the people of my State from the people of Louisiana. Many of the producers of sugar cane in Louisiana live in my old congressional district and in my State, but I can not see any justice in the proposition that they shall obtain 17 cents a pound for sugar, causing the burden to be placed upon the people of my State and the people of the United States.

I hope this legislation will pass. I hope the House will substitute for it the original bill introduced by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY]. I want to see the Sugar Equalization Board given such power that they can restrain the greedy hands of the profiteers and give sugar to the people at a reasonable price.

I have not that degree of criticism to make against the Sugar Equalization Board that I have heard expressed upon the floor of this Chamber, because I recall that during the war that board made it possible to obtain sugar at a reasonable price for the fighting forces of this country and for the American people. It may have been at times that we were unable to procure all the sugar that we desired, but we got along, and the price was maintained at a low level. I know of no product, I know of nothing that was sold during the war that was maintained at such a low level as was the price of sugar, that was kept from increasing in price to such an extent as was the price of sugar. They rendered a great service to the people of America; and as soon as their hand was removed from the situation sugar increased to the consumers in the United States, in some instances going as high as 27 cents a pound. Do not forget, too, Senators, that while the Sugar Equalization Board were maintaining this low level of price for sugar to the consumers of the country and procuring it for the fighting forces of America they placed in the Treasury of the United States $38,000,000—a pretty large sum when you think about it. During these abnormal conditions I want to see this board continue to function and continue to give to the people the same satisfactory results that they gave to the people during the war.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. THOMAS subsequently said: Mr. President, I wish to make a personal statement. I was in attendance upon a meeting this morning of the Committee on Military Affairs when the vote was taken on the bill for the continuation of the Sugar Equalization Board. I merely wish to say that if I had been present I would have recorded my vote against the bill.

SEDITIOUS ACTS AND UTTERANCES.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3317) to prohibit and punish certain seditious acts against the Government of the United States and to prohibit the use of the mails for the purpose of promoting such acts.

Mr. FRANCE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gronna	Lenroot	Ransdell
Ball	Hale	McKellar	Sheppard
Bankhead	Harding	McLean	Smith, S. C.
Beckham	Harris	McNary	Smoot
Calder	Harrison	Moses	Stanley
Capper	Hitchcock	Myers	Sterling
Colt	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nelson	Sutherland
Cummins	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Thomas
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Newberry	Townsend
Dial	Kellogg	Norris	Trammell
Elkins	Keyes	Nugent	Underwood
Fletcher	King	Overman	Walsh, Mass.
France	Kirby	Page	Walsh, Mont.
Gay	Knox	Phipps
Gore	La Follette	Pomerene

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-eight Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Senator from South Dakota moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3317.

Mr. FRANCE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Dakota.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3317) to prohibit and punish certain seditious acts against the Government of the United States and to prohibit the use of the mails for the purpose of promoting such acts.

COAL-MINING INDUSTRY.

Mr. HARRIS. With the permission of the Senator from South Dakota, I should like to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of Senate resolution 247, and I wish to offer an amendment to it.

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator, provided the resolution will lead to no discussion.

Mr. HARRIS. I offer an amendment, to follow the last line of the first page. It is satisfactory to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON], who has an amendment to the same effect.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution as modified by the Senator from Georgia.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 247) submitted by Mr. HARRIS December 6, 1919, as modified, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate the following information to be secured from the income and profits tax returns for the taxable year 1918 of all corporations engaged, exclusively or principally, in the mining of bituminous and lignite coal:

Capital stock; invested capital; net income; tax (1) income, (2) excess profits, (3) total; per cent of total tax to net income; net income, after deducting tax; per cent of net income to capital stock; per cent of net income to invested capital; per cent of net income, after deducting tax, to capital stock; per cent of net income, after deducting tax, to invested capital; capital stock, 1917; net income, 1917; per cent of net income to capital stock, 1917; excess of the per cent of net income to capital stock for 1918 above the percentage for 1917.

Also a statement showing the dividends paid by corporations engaged in the mining and production of bituminous coal within the United States for the years 1917 and 1918; that if such information is not already in the possession of the Secretary of the Treasury that he be requested to procure the same and transmit it to the Senate as promptly as may be practical.

That the information be transmitted in form similar to that obtaining in Senate Document No. 259, Sixty-fifth Congress, second session, which contains the information transmitted by the Secretary of the Treasury in response to the resolution of the Senate of June 6, 1918, and that the corporations be listed in the same sequence and under the same symbols, as far as possible, as obtain in Senate Document No. 259.

Mr. KING. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Georgia whether he asks in the resolution of inquiry which he has submitted that information be furnished as to the loss by depletion, or the damage to the property by depletion, because it is obviously unfair to merely take the dividends without showing the draft which was made upon the capital, the capital being the coal which is taken from the mine?

Mr. HARRIS. The resolution asks for the profits, and that will take into consideration the depletion and all such things. That is an amendment which the Senator heard read. The resolution provides for the net profits for 1917 and 1918.

Mr. KING. Does that take into account the depreciation in value because of the depletion of the product?

Mr. HARRIS. That is my understanding.

Mr. KING. As I heard the resolution read it does not ask for that at all.

Mr. THOMAS. May I inquire from the Senator from Georgia if he has asked for immediate consideration of his resolution?

Mr. HARRIS. I have.

Mr. THOMAS. I shall object to it, then. I want to look into this subject before we consider it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] yielded with the understanding that the resolution would lead to no discussion.

Mr. THOMAS. I shall be compelled to consider the subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is an objection.

Mr. STERLING. I call for the regular order.

MURDER OF CITIZENS AT CENTRALIA, WASH.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I understand that Senate bill 3317 will not be permitted to come to a vote before 1 o'clock, so I am going to take just a few minutes in order that I may have printed in the RECORD a document that I think is pertinent.

Mr. STERLING. I think I shall object to the taking of any time for any other business than the consideration of the bill before the Senate.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am going to proceed with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. STERLING. I was not aware of that. I judged from the Senator's preliminary statement that he was about to speak on some other matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington proposes to speak from the bill, not on the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is connected with the bill, and I would not take this time, because I want to see the bill passed, if I did not know that the time from now to 1 o'clock would be consumed so that the bill would not pass.

Mr. President, a few days ago the Nation was startled and shocked by the news that American citizens had been shot down at Centralia, Wash., by the I. W. W. The boys killed had donned the uniform of the United States and offered their lives in the Nation's defense. They were shot down while marching in a patriotic parade celebrating the victory they had done so much to win. Their lives had been offered to maintain the rights and preserve the liberties given to us by the fathers and which made this Nation the world's hope. They were shot down by a destructive element that has no respect for law and no love for orderly government. The shots that killed these boys were really aimed at the heart of this Nation by those who oppose law and seek to overthrow our Government. Overt acts like this must be met by law and its stern enforcement and not by lawless measures.

This is the best form of government devised by the wit of man to right wrongs, insure liberty, and promote happiness in a peaceful and orderly way. Every American should read that part of the report on Senate resolution 307, introduced by me, made by Senators OVERMAN, KING, WALCOTT, NELSON, and STERLING, from page 27 to page 43. This shows what bolshevism is and what it leads to. Let every American study it well and show by word and deed that it has no excuse to be here. The traditions of the fathers of the Republic, devotion to law and order, love for orderly liberty and controlled freedom, undiluted Americanism should be our watchword.

Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD from page 27 to the close of the first paragraph on page 43 of the report of the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary on the resolution relating to charges made against the United States Brewers' Association and allied interests and bolshevism.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BOLSHEVISM.

"On the 4th day of February, 1919, the Senate adopted the following resolution, No. 436, and in pursuance to the directions therein contained your committee proceeded to make the inquiry requested, and the testimony taken by your committee is contained in the printed record, entitled 'Bolshevik propaganda,' which is herewith transmitted:

"Resolved, That the authority of the Committee on the Judiciary conferred by Senate resolution 307 be, and the same hereby is, extended so as to include the power and duty to inquire concerning any efforts being made to propagate in this country the principles of any party exercising or claiming to exercise authority in Russia, whether such efforts originate in this country or are incited or financed from abroad; and, further, to inquire into any effort to incite the overthrow of the Government of this country or all government by force, or by the destruction of life or property, or the general cessation of industry.

"In order to determine the possible connection and relation between the principles of government advocated by those claiming to exercise authority in Russia and the several activities now being carried on in the United States, it was deemed essential that a careful inquiry be made to determine the exact nature of the so-called principles of government now being applied in Russia. The record includes the constitution and a compilation of many of the so-called laws in force in Russia from which the nature of the paper government can be determined and the testimony of many eyewitnesses of the attempted application of this paper government discloses the character and nature of the actual Government in practical operation. The investigation which your committee has conducted convinces it that few of either the advocates or opponents in this country of the present Russian Socialist Federal Soviet Republic are familiar with the fundamental principles upon which this government is attempting to perpetuate itself. Consequently the agitation growing out of developments in Russia has largely degenerated into appeals to the prejudices and the animosities that are inherent in the selfish natures of most individuals, and little or no appeal has been made to the intelligence of the people.

"It is therefore not surprising that the word 'bolshevism' has now become merely a generic term, and in America is nothing more than a slogan of the elements of unrest and discontent.

"By reason of their ignorance as to what bolshevism as a code of political and social morals in Russia means, almost every dissatisfied element, from the radical anarchist to the theoretical idealist, has seized upon it as approaching something of a Utopian nature. It is interesting to note that every witness called before your committee as a champion of the cause of the principles of the Russian Socialist Federal Soviet Republic admitted that he or she had never read the constitution of the Government of which he was the champion.

"The word 'bolshevism' has been so promiscuously applied to various political and social programs that we feel that it is of paramount importance that the delusions and misconceptions as to what it really is, as it exists to-day in Russia, should be, as far as possible, removed and that the people of the United States should be thoroughly informed as to just what this much-discussed institution realy is, both in theory and in practice.

"Your committee is of the opinion that the best answer that can be given to the argument of the champions of this Russian institution is a true explanation of its real nature and the actual principles upon which it is founded as well as the unavoidable consequences that would follow its adoption. The word 'bolshevik' is the name of the party that controls the Russian Socialist Federal Soviet Republic and that dictated its constitution. We are, therefore, justified in using this name to identify the constitution which it dictated and in accepting that constitution and the laws that have been prescribed under it as the platform and program of bolshevism.

"The following are a few of the fundamental facts descriptive of bolshevism and the form and character of the government established and operated by the Bolsheviki in Russia under the name of the 'Russian Socialist Federal Soviet Republic.'

"It is the dictatorship of a class and is not a democratic form of government. In its actual application it has become an autocracy of a few individuals who exercise their authority and suppress all opposition by fear, terrorism, and force. It has developed into as much of an autocracy, though more cruel in its methods, as the monarchical government of the Czar's régime. Under the provisional government of Kerensky an effort was made to establish a democracy and to inaugurate a socialistic State under that form of government. With a view to establishing such a democratic government the provisional government, on July 22, 1917, ordered the election of the constituent assembly to be voted for by all of the people of Russia on September 30, 1917. Prior to this time general elections in Russia on an equal suffrage basis were unheard of, and it therefore became necessary for the provisional government to create the necessary election machinery and to secure a complete and impartial registration of the newly created electorate. The difficulties encountered in this undertaking made it necessary in August to postpone the election of the constituent assembly from the 30th of September to the 25th of November. This postponement was seized upon by the Bolsheviki as raising an issue through which they could attack the provisional government, and they charged that government with having an ulterior purpose in directing this postponement.

"In raising this issue they appealed to the people to arise in defense of a democratic form of government by overthrowing the provisional government and securing for themselves thereby, through the Bolshevik Party, the benefits and advantages of a democracy and the election of a constituent assembly as an instrument which would make possible the establishment of a constitution based upon the equality of man and secure to all Russian citizens equal participation in the affairs of government. With this issue, among others, the bolshevik party overthrew the provisional government in the October revolution, and immediately issued a decree (Exhibit 1, appendix of record and hearing) ordering 'that the elections to the constituent assembly shall be held on November 25, the day set aside for this purpose' by the provisional government and ordering that the freedom of the ballot should be adequately safeguarded. At the appointed time the constituent assembly was elected, and a canvass of the personnel of that assembly established the overwhelming defeat of the bolshevik party and the supremacy of other socialist parties, whereupon the attitude of the Bolsheviki toward the constituent assembly underwent a complete change, and from that time their antagonism toward a constituent assembly, universal equal suffrage, and a democratic form of government has been manifested in every official act of the government and in the actual application of that government to the several activities of the nation.

"In the original call for the election of the constituent assembly, December 12, 1917, had been fixed as the time of its meeting. It was not, however, until January, 1918, that the bolshevik autocracy permitted the constituent assembly to convene. When it did meet the Bolshevik Party submitted to this representative body for adoption a set of resolutions denouncing the election at which it was elected, repudiating itself as representative of the electorate, whose commission it held, and declaring that there was no proper function for it to perform in the proposed new government of the Russian Nation. (Exhibit 16, appendix.) As might well have been expected, the constituent assembly declined to pass this resolution, whereupon the bolshevik members withdrew, and the constituent assembly was forcibly dispersed by the Red Guard, and a democratic form of government was lost to the Russian people. In its place has arisen the dictatorship of the small minority—headed by Lenin and Trotski.

"Lenin, president of the Soviet of Peoples Commissaries, frankly admits this in the following words:

"'Just as 150,000 lordly landowners dominated the 180,000,000 of Russian peasants, so 200,000 members of the Bolshevik Party are imposing their proletarian will on the mass. * * *

"Nor is this dictatorship the result of a usurpation of power on the part of the officials of the Bolsheviki, but it is the recognized foundation upon which the whole governmental structure is erected, as is evidenced by paragraph 9 of the bolshevik constitution, which provides as follows:

"'The principal aim of the constitution of the Russian Socialist Federal Soviet Republic in the present transitory period is to establish the dictatorship of the city and rural proletariat and of the poorest elements of the peasantry in the form of a powerful all-Russian soviet government for the purpose of completely suppressing the capitalistic class. * * *

"'[NOTE.—Under bolshevism, the capitalistic class includes all persons who do not perform manual labor for a livelihood, or who employ any person in their business, or who own any property or receive any income, no matter how small the amount. The words 'parasitic class' and 'bourgeoise' are popularly used by the Bolsheviki as synonymous with 'capitalistic class.']

"It is perhaps difficult to realize that it has been possible to perpetuate a dictatorship of such a small minority through the many months which have passed since it came into power. Without some understanding of the nature and character of the actual activities of the Bolsheviki the casual observer would be persuaded that the tyranny of this autocracy would in a short time bring down upon its head the wrath of the majority, who with reasonable effort would have no difficulty in overthrowing the usurpers. A study of the actual methods and practices of the dictatorship, however, clearly establishes the helplessness of the great mass of the Russian populace. The Bolsheviki have inaugurated a reign of terror unparalleled in the history of modern civilization, in many of its aspects rivaling even the inhuman savagery of the Turk and the terrors of the French Revolution. Under the evidence your committee has been compelled to impose the responsibility for this terrorism upon the government itself rather than attribute it merely to the excesses of individuals and groups undisciplined and untrained in the personal liberty acquired by them with the overthrowing of the centralized autocratic government of the old monarchistic régime. Terrorism and excesses in a State are either attributable to the encouragement of the State or the weakness and inability of the State to restrain the same. In bolshevik Russia every instrument available for the exercise of force and power is in the possession of that government, and those opposed to the government or who fail to render it whole-hearted support are completely suppressed and absolutely powerless. The government is more highly centralized and less restricted in the exercise of that centralized power than was the government of the Czar. The agencies used by the dictators in imposing their will upon the masses are less restrained and restricted in the exercise of their power by law, custom, or humanity than were the agencies utilized by the old régime. Economic domination unheard of and unsought in the past has been seized upon and usurped by the dictatorship.

"All these facts negative the suggestion of the existence of a degree of weakness which makes the government impotent to exercise the necessary restraint. On the contrary, every act of terrorism is justified by the affirmative pronouncement of the bolshevik government, either through its constitution and laws or the authoritative utterances of its officials. The government is founded upon class hatred, its avowed purpose is the extermination of all elements of society that are opposed to or are capable of opposing the bolshevik party. 'Merciless suppression' and 'extermination' of all classes except the present governing class are familiar slogans of the Bolsheviki, and confiscation is adopted as an essential instrument in the governmental formula. As a guaranty of its perpetuation in power its underlying policy is that 'the end justifies the means,' and in the application of this policy the government denies the existence of any inalienable right in the Russian citizen and respects neither the right to life, liberty, or property. In its so-called declaration of rights the government adopts a policy which it hopes will result in 'the destruction of the parasitic classes of society,' and as an aid to this end has decreed as an essential part of its fundamental law the principle of arming one class and disarming another, with a view of making the extermination and destruction more effective. In practice, this government has classified all of those people who fail to sympathize with and support the existing dictatorship as the bourgeoise, and has proclaimed the doctrine that their refusal to bow to the edict of the dictatorship should be answered by 'violence toward the bourgeoise.' A careful survey of the innumerable acts of violence and terrorism committed in Russia will fail to disclose scarcely a single offense that has not been participated in either by their Red Guard, by Commissars, or by others having an official and governmental status.

"The dictatorship, utilizing Lettish troops and Chinese laborers as well as to some extent German and Austrian prisoners and criminals discharged from the jails as its so-called Red Guard to enforce its decrees, promptly secured possession and control of:

"(a) All arms and ammunition.

"(b) Practically all foodstuffs and commodities essential to the maintenance of life.

"(c) All clothing and household goods necessary for warmth and health.

"(d) All gold, silver, and specie, including jewelry, ornaments, gold and silver plate.

"This was accomplished by means of confiscation followed by the nationalization and monopolizing by the State of all commercial, industrial, and financial enterprises. Having secured possession of all of these instruments of physical and economic power and domination, this dictatorship was enabled to enforce the submission of most of the population to its will. The rank and file of the people of Russia had no other choice. They could not resist or oppose the Bolsheviki with force, as they were without firearms and without ammunition. They could not refuse to obey its dictates, else they would be starved to death. They could not defy the dictators, as they would be left without raiment. They could not sustain life with money possessing an intrinsic value, for they had none, and thousands have been starved to death and murdered as a result of this régime.

"Possessing, therefore, every instrument necessary for the exercise of the forcible persuasion of the populace, it became expedient to reinforce the dictatorship with an increased man power. Recognizing the state of the public mind, it was necessary to guard against betrayal by those who were drafted into the service of the State, and the most effective weapons selected to secure the faithful execution of the will of the dictators were fear, terrorism, and a system of hostages. By this system of hostages the relatives, family, and loved ones of the drafted subject were held as prisoners. Their food supplies, their clothing, even their lives, depending upon the fidelity with which the dictatorship was supported and its orders executed.

"Having professed an adherence to the democratic form of government to assist in securing control of Russia, the Bolsheviki, in establishing its paper government, sought to maintain its dictatorship under color of a representative political system. A recognition of the democratic principle that all men are created equal, however, would have necessitated the equal participation of all citizens in the affairs of government. Such universal participation in political affairs would have made impossible a dictatorship of the minority, but would inherently have been a rule of the majority and have accomplished just what the dissolution of the constituent assembly was intended to prevent. The following of the bolshevik government being more numerous in the cities, and these by reason of their concentration within more restricted territorial limits, being more readily led and dominated, it was prescribed by constitutional direction that representation from cities in the government should be five times as great as the representation from the provincial districts. In other words, representation from cities is in the ratio of 1 to every 25,000 of the population, while from the rural districts and the territory of the peasants, who constitute a large percentage of the Russian population, representation is 1 to every 125,000 of the population. Even this discrimination did not adequately safeguard the domination of the bolshevik minority. Disfranchisement of large groups of the population was necessary. By constitutional provision they denied the right to participate in the government and disfranchised the following classes:

"(a) All persons employing others in connection with the conduct of their business.

"(b) All persons receiving interest, rents, dividends, or an income from financial or industrial enterprises.

"(c) All merchants, traders, and dealers.

"(d) All clergymen, priests, and employees of churches and religious bodies.

"(e) Certain persons connected with the Czar's government, persons mentally afflicted, and persons convicted of certain crimes against the bolshevik government.

"Even with these restrictions upon suffrage the bolshevik government has refused to undertake the election of a constituent assembly. The elections that are permitted are conducted under supervision of the red guard, and local bodies or soviets that are not satisfactory to the dictatorship are removed and in some instances so-called commissars or officials of unquestioned loyalty to the government are imported from the cities to govern the affairs of the political unit (the local soviet) sought to be dominated according to the bolshevik faith.

"Confiscation on a wholesale scale has been used as a means of undertaking to create and maintain tangible assets that could be used as the economic foundation upon which could be built the industrial and financial superstructure of the bolshevik state. By constitutional edicts and by a series of decrees issued by the dictatorship all land, forests, and natural resources of Russia have been confiscated by the government in order that the bolshevik government may become the landlord of the entire population and exercise the control incident thereto. Where a man shall live and toil and till the soil is determined by the State, and the right to determine the nature and extent of each man's domicile, and the power to compel the migration of the peasant from the locality of his birth or adoption, even to the extent of separating families as the population of the various communities expands or contracts, is exercised by the bolshevik government through the laws which it has decreed for the control of the people.

"The alleged purpose of the seizure of land by the government was that the right to the land might be transferred to the rank and file of the people of Russia, in order that the individual Russian peasant might become the unrestrained and unrestricted architect of his own future economic development, but the methods adopted by the Bolsheviki have merely transferred the landlordship from the large landowners, and in many instances from the peasant groups themselves, to the bolshevik government, and the present control by that government is not confined to the land itself, as was the control of the landowners under the old régime, but extends as well to the persons and even the tools, implements, and products of the peasants. The aged and infirm are deprived of all right to utilize and enjoy during their declining years the soil their efforts may have enriched, because their physical strength makes them powerless to perform all of the labor incident to its full cultivation. They, thereupon, become mere pensioners of the State.

"This system guarantees to the peasant only the present enjoyment of a given piece of land, and consequently only warrants him in so utilizing the beneficence of the State in according him the right to use the same as to insure the maximum present production to the exclusion of a scientific development that will enure to future advantage. In other words, an uncertain tenure is naturally accompanied by an exploitation rather than by a systematic development of the leasehold interest. Under this system the peasant can never become the owner of the land he tills or of any other land. To aid in the system and to establish a larger control of peasant activities by the government the principle of confiscation has also been invoked in the case of all live stock and all agricultural implements, and as a consequence these essential instruments of land cultivation, these chattels necessary to the production of both meat and vegetable foodstuffs have become, without regard to the rights of former owners or the advantage to the individual of future ownership therein, the property of the bolshevik government, and the only right thereto that the peasant can in the future acquire is a use upon such terms and conditions as the government may prescribe.

"As may well be expected, there seems to be much difficulty in determining the manner in which this policy is being carried into actual operation, and it is apparent that only by the application of arbitrary methods can the already existing articles in these categories be made useful to any portion of the peasant population or be adequately protected and maintained so as to preserve their value. It is also interesting to contemplate, but dubious to predict, how meat-food products can under this system be maintained at a sufficient quantity to sustain life.

"The thrift, industry, perseverance, and intelligence which has enabled a portion of the Russian people in the past to acquire and save money has also been penalized by the confiscation of all banks and banking institutions and their transformation into a State monopoly.

"Confiscation under the milder term of nationalization has eliminated from all industrial establishments, such as factories, mills, and mines, the business acumen and scientific methods necessary to successful operation and competitive methods. The absolute control of their operation and management is placed in the hands of the employees. This has been followed by the stagnation of the industrial life of the country, and even those nationalized industries which have been able to operate under government control have operated at an enormous percentage of loss, the deficiencies being met from the unlimited issue of fiat paper money printed by the government. The nationalization of the enterprises essential to the production and delivery of raw materials has so handicapped their production as to restrict the quantity of raw materials available for the maintenance of industrial enterprises, and the whole economic condition of Russia has made it impossible to secure relief from foreign sources. These industrial conditions can only continue so long as the government can succeed in monopolizing the means of subsistence, maintain an adequate military force to enforce the decrees of the dictatorship, and force the recognition of worthless fiat paper money as the basis of its financial system.

"As the economic formula of the Bolsheviki prescribes the confiscation of the property rights of others, likewise it proclaims the doctrine of the repudiation of financial obligations and the debts of Russia have been renounced. Repudiation is also invoked to secure the government against the incumbrances upon and liabilities of the property and assets of the enterprises, land, and chattels seized by it under its confiscation program. This repudiation also aided materially in suppressing and exterminating the creditor class, which naturally constitutes a part of the element that the Bolsheviki are pleased to call the bourgeois, or capitalistic class, by depriving them of the right and ability to recover and utilize the earnings, savings, and accumulations of the past. As it affected them it was a form of confiscation. Repudiation is, therefore, a consistent accompaniment of confiscation and an essential element in the process of destruction. The financial condition of the dictatorship, however, required the adoption of some constructive policy that would finance it. It was necessary to maintain at least a color of legitimacy, an appearance of honest business methods, in supporting its so-called red army, and in securing control of the articles necessary to sustain life. Further than that, it was desirable to devise ways and means by which service in the red army and employment in nationalized enterprises might appear sufficiently attractive, and at the same time give an appearance of prosperity to the government itself, in order that hope as well as fear might assist in maintaining the bolshevik government. The policy adopted was the printing of unlimited amounts of fiat paper money unsecured by any reserve. This naturally furnished to the government a cash capital limited only by the capacity of the printing presses of the government, which, in turn, had been confiscated and nationalized. Already it is estimated that a sum in excess of 30,000,000,000 rubles has been put into circulation. This has created a ridiculously inflated circulating medium of no material value to the public but of enforced value to the government.

"The populace are compelled to accept this paper money from the bolshevik dictatorship, but can secure little for it in transactions between one another. Barter and exchange have, therefore, become the only satisfactory means of conducting commercial transactions, and the breakdown in the industrial life and transportation facilities of the country has made practically impossible the bringing together in the same community of the articles of trade and commerce necessary to the health, comfort, and life of the various elements of society. In consequence, many Russians are faced with starvation while possessing large sums of the money of the government that, in their extremity, avails them nothing. There can be no permanence to a government whose financial system is founded upon such a method.

"The destruction of all effective military and naval power and the removal of the leadership of capable officers was essential to the establishment of a powerful dictatorship as well as to the complete abandonment of the eastern front during the war. By the safe conduct of Lenin from Switzerland through the German Empire into Russia, regardless of the question as to whether he and his confrères were financed, as seems probable, in their revolutionary undertaking by the German Government, an obligation was incurred to demoralize and destroy the existing Russian Army which had been more or less effectively maintaining the eastern front. How completely this was accomplished is now history. They promptly decreed in their so-called declaration of rights that 'the soldiers and sailors are liberated from the power of autocratic generals, because the generals will now be elected and they may be removed.' All titles and degrees of rank and the authority incident to superiority were annulled and discipline was discontinued. Instantaneously the army and navy degenerated into a mere mob with every soldier a law unto himself. Demobilization was directed and the demoralization was completed. The organization of the red army was undertaken around the nucleus which the Lettish troops and sailors in the red guard of the October revolution provided.

"By similar means the organization of the red fleet was undertaken. Chinese laborers without other means of subsistence were easily enlisted. The opportunity that service in the red army and red fleet afforded for pilfering and looting under color of authorized confiscation presented a sufficient invitation to the lawless and criminal elements that had become conspicuous through the opening of the doors of prisons by the Bolsheviki to join those bodies and participate in the confiscation and seizures that were a part of the program of terror, fear, extermination, and destruction upon which the bolshevik government had entered. The food and clothing situation was desperate, and the government had acquired, through the application of its formula, a generous supply, and was using its red guard to gain a monopoly. In consequence the one reasonably certain way of gaining a livelihood was by affiliating with the red army. This brought into the bolshevik fold many people who otherwise would have been condemned to starve. Hostages were held by the government to compel the submission of those who might otherwise have been recalcitrant. Thus a red army and a red fleet has been created, and they are charged with the execution of the decrees of the dictatorship and the sentences of the so-called courts or revolutionary tribunals, and they are afforded a large degree of personal discretion in the exercise of duties which practically constitute a rule of martial law.

"Repudiating the doctrine of all radical revolutionary groups throughout the world that have claimed for the individual of all lands the right of conscientious objection for religious or other reason against the bearing of arms and the participation in armed conflicts, the Bolsheviki have adopted as the essential safeguard of their political fabric compulsory military service. As Prussianism found it essential to world domination by the autocracy of the Hohenzollerns, so bolshevism seized upon it as the mainstay that would weather its autocracy of the dictatorship through its campaign of confiscation and repudiation.

"All of the established courts and judicial institutions have been abolished, and in their place have been created revolutionary tribunals. Under the dictatorship these new judicial tribunals disregard all laws that 'contradict the revolutionary conception of right.' In actual operation these revolutionary tribunals have tried and condemned men in their absence. No right to bail is recognized, and the penalty imposed depends largely upon the caprice of the court. The death penalty, the reestablishment of which under the provisional government was vociferously denounced by the Bolsheviki, has been invoked for all sorts of crimes and misdemeanors. In fact, the procedure in the courts is a mere travesty on justice and most summary in its nature.

"Every activity of the bolshevik government indicates clearly the antipathy of the Bolsheviki toward Christianity and the Christian religion. Its program is a direct challenge to that religion. The Christian church and bolshevism can not both survive the program that is being developed by the Russian dictatorship and which it is undertaking to extend throughout the world. Not only have they confiscated all church property, real and personal, but they have established the right of antireligious propaganda as a constitutionally recognized institution. Church and school have been divorced even to the extent of suppressing the Sunday school, and the teaching of all religious doctrines in public, either in schools or educational institutions of any kind, is expressly forbidden. Religion can only be taught or studied privately. All church and religious organizations are prohibited from owning property of any kind. All recognition of a Supreme Being in both governmental and judicial oaths is abolished. The clergy and all servants or employees of church bodies are expressly disfranchised and deprived of all right to hold public positions. The full significance of the attitude of the Bolsheviki toward Christianity is most fully manifested in the fact that, though by Russian custom and decree under the old régime, every newspaper or periodical published on Easter Sunday in the Russian Empire was required to carry the headline, 'Christ is risen,' on Easter Sunday in 1918, all bolshevik papers substituted for this sacred sentiment the headline and slogan, 'One hundred years ago to-day Karl Marx was born.' Thus the issue has been framed between the gospel of Karl Marx and the teachings of Christ. We reiterate, therefore, that bolshevism and the Christian religion can not both survive.

"Bolshevism accords to the family no such sacred place in society as modern civilization accords to it. Conflicting reports have been passing current during the last few months relative to the nationalization of women by the new Russian government. Two or three local soviets have apparently thus degraded the womanhood of their particular districts, but the central government has refrained from adopting any such policy in the whole nation. They have, however, promulgated decrees relating to marriage and divorce which practically establishes a state of free love. Their effect has been to furnish a vehicle for the legalization of prostitution by permitting the annulment of the marriage bonds at the whim of the parties, recognizing their collusive purposes as a ground for the severance of the matrimonial state.

"The freedom of the press and of speech, though heralded by the advocates of bolshevism as necessary to the intelligent participation of the people in popular government, has been abrogated in Russia, and by the usual confiscatory method of the accepted formula all of the mechanical devices and materials necessary for the publication of periodicals and all places of meeting and public assemblage have been seized by the bolshevik government.

"To make the control more complete and effective the publication of all advertisements, whether in regularly published periodicals or on handbills or programs, is made a monopoly of the government. As a consequence the people of Russia are deprived of all facts, literature, and public expression through the medium of the press or public meetings, except such as is approved by the dictatorship and has been passed by its censorship.

"In the attempted establishment of an educational system it is to be expected that much difficulty would arise because of the large percentage of illiteracy that afflicts Russia, and it is not surprising that this system is largely on paper and of little practical value. It is interesting to note, however, that under this system age rather than attainment determines the admissibility of the student to a given school or grade, and that to require the production of evidence of the qualification of a student for such admission is a criminal offense. This again reflects the bolshevik theory that equalization can be accomplished by dictatorial decrees.

"The apparent purpose of the bolshevik government is to make the Russian citizen, and especially the women and children, the wards and dependents of that government. Not satisfied with the degree of dependency incurred by the economic and industrial control assumed by its functionaries, it has destroyed the natural ambition and made impossible of accomplishment the moral obligation of the father to provide, care for, and adequately protect the child of his blood and the mother of that child against the misfortunes of orphanhood and widowhood. To accomplish this it has by decree expressly abolished and prohibited all right of inheritance, either by law or will. Upon death all of the decedent's estate is confiscated by the State, and all heirs who are physically incapable of working become pensioners of the State to the extent that the assets confiscated by the government make such pensions possible.

"Insurance of all kinds has been nationalized, the assets of insurance companies confiscated, and the business of insuring life, property, accident, old age, and unemployment made a State monopoly. In the attempted liquidation of existing companies and associations the liquidating representatives of the government seem only concerned in securing possession and record of all their assets and fail to recognize the propriety of accurately adjusting their liabilities. As a consequence, those insured and the beneficiaries under existing policies find themselves wthout the protection for which they have been paying premiums.

"There has been much discussion with reference to the policy and motive of the associated Governments in landing troops on Russian soil. It is interesting to note that the combined military force at Archangel was landed at the solicitation and request of the established and de facto government of the northern Provinces of Russia to aid that government in protecting its citizenship from the murder, cruelty, and confiscation by the approaching red army of the bolshevik government.

"The salient features which constitute the program of bolshevism, as it exists to-day in Russia and is presented to the rest of the world as a panacea for all ills, may be summarized as follows:

"(1) The repudiation of democracy and the establishment of a dictatorship.

"(2) The confiscation of all land and the improvements thereon.

"(3) The confiscation of all forests and natural resources.

"(4) The confiscation of all live stock and all agricultural implements.

"(5) The confiscation of all banks and banking institutions and the establishment of a State monopoly of the banking business.

"(6) The confiscation of all factories, mills, mines, and industrial institutions and the delivery of the control and operation thereof to the employees therein.

"(7) The confiscation of all churches and all church property, real and personal.

"(8) The confiscation of all newspapers and periodicals and all mechanical facilities and machinery used in the publication thereof.

"(9) The seizure and confiscation of all public meeting places and assembly halls.

"(10) The confiscation of all transportation and communication systems.

"(11) The confiscation of the entire estate of all decedents.

"(12) The monopolizing by the State of all advertisements of every nature, whether in newspapers, periodicals, handbills, or programs.

"(13) The repudiation of all debts against the government and all obligations due the nonbolshevik elements of the population.

"(14) The establishment of universal compulsory military service regardless of religious scruples and conscientious objections.

"(15) The establishment of universal compulsory labor.

"(16) The abolition of the Sunday school and all other schools and institutions that teach religion.

"(17) The absolute separation of churches and schools.

"(18) The establishment, through marriage and divorce laws, of a method for the legalization of prostitution, when the same is engaged in by consent of the parties.

"(19) The refusal to recognize the existence of God in its governmental and judicial proceedings.

"(20) The conferring of the rights of citizenship on aliens without regard to length of residence or intelligence.

"(21) The arming of all so-called 'toilers,' and the disarming of all persons who had succeeded in acquiring property.

"(22) The discrimination in favor of residents of cities and against residents of the rural districts through giving residents of cities five times as much voting power as is accorded to residents of rural districts in such elections as are permitted.

"(23) The disfranchisement of all persons employing any other person in connection with their business.

"(24) The disfranchisement of all persons receiving rent, interest, or dividends.

"(25) The disfranchisement of all merchants, traders, and commercial agents.

"(26) The disfranchisement of all priests, clergymen, or employees of churches and religious bodies.

"(27) The denial of the existence of any inalienable rights in the individual citizen.

"(28) The establishment of a judicial system exercising autocratic power, convicting persons and imposing penalties in their absence, and without opportunity to be heard, and even adopting the death penalty for numerous crimes and misdemeanors.

"(29) The inauguration of a reign of fear, terrorism, and violence.

"This is the program that the revolutionary elements and the so-called 'parlor Bolshevists' would have this country accept as a substitute for the Government of the United States, which recognizes that 'all men are created equal,' and that 'life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness' are the inalienable rights of all its citizens. This is the formula they would have adopted to supersede the Government which was established by all the people of the United States 'in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity,' and 'promote the general welfare.' The mere recital of the program is a sufficient denunciation of it and of the individuals and groups which advocate and defend it.

"During modern times the effort of civilization has been directed to lifting mankind to the highest possible level of intelligence and social and material well-being in order to attain the highest degree of social equality between man and man. For the first time since the Dark Ages has an organized government undertaken to invoke a process of equalization by establishing as the basis of social equality the minimum rather than the maximum degree of existing educational, industrial, social, and moral efficiency, yet such is the policy of the bolshevik government. It recognizes that the psychology of even the most illiterate elements of the Russian people is such that it can not perpetuate this doctrine in practice unless the same reactionary methods of equalization are simultaneously destroying the social fabric, the efficiency, the individual initiative, the ambition, and the material prosperity of the peoples of all other nations, whose competition and accomplishments would necessarily result in odious and destructive comparisons. Not content, therefore, in fathering in Russia this retrograde method of establishing the equality of mankind on the basis of the lowest strata of society, it has undertaken to arouse in the United States and in all other countries resentment, rancor, and hatred against those elements of society which have, by reason of their aptitude, perseverance, industry, and thrift attained that superior degree of intelligence and prosperity that has made possible the accomplishments of twentieth century civilization. The effort of progressing civilization has always been the uplifting of man to a higher and higher plane of living and a loftier place in society.

"The activities of the Bolsheviki constitute a complete repudiation of modern civilization and the promulgation of the doctrine that the best attainment of the most backward member of society shall be the level at which mankind shall find its final and victorious goal. The pulling down of the progressive rather than the lifting up of the retrogressive is presented as the doctrine of their new kind of civilization. To carry this message to the uttermost parts of the earth they have appropriated enormous sums of money, and, incidentally, their process of equalization in Russia was promoted by the starvation which the funds thus expended might have been utilized to alleviate. Their messengers and their friends have afflicted this country, and their new civilization has been represented as Utopian in its nature. Many well-disposed persons have been deceived into the belief that they were promoting a social welfare movement in advocating it. They have even given their substance that it might be perpetuated and extended. Yet, while these people who have been popularly called 'parlor Bolshevists' are contributing to these bolshevik agents, these same agents are appealing to the hatred and the lowest instincts of the more ignorant elements of the population, reinforced by the criminally inclined, to whom the doctrine of confiscation furnished a form of legalized robbery and a means of livelihood without physical or mental effort, to rise en masse and destroy our civilization and the so-called bourgeoise with whom, of course, must be classed these same 'parlor Bolshevists' who are assisting, by lending funds and respectability to the movement, in bringing the temple down upon their own heads.

"It is significant, however, that in the United States only a portion of the so-called radical revolutionary groups and organizations accept in its entirety the doctrine of the Bolsheviki. They have, however, all seized upon bolshevism as a rallying cry and are undertaking to unite all of these elements under that banner for the purpose of accomplishing the initial step in their common formula, to wit, the overthrow of existing governmental institutions and the complete demoralization of modern society. With this accomplished each group hopes that it can muster sufficient strength to maintain a supremacy in the new social order and invoke the policies of its particular creed. Most of these groups accept the common ground that forcible, as distinguished from political, action should be used as the instrument to secure the overthrow of the present government and in so doing defy and repudiate the democratic form of government which guarantees under our Constitution the rule of the majority. Like the Bolsheviki in Russia, these groups recognize in the destruction of life, property, and personal security the necessary preliminary to the establishment of a government founded upon the violence of the minority. They realize that riot, disorder, and hunger breed hatred, blood lust, and desperation, and that without these mankind can not be driven to the use of force to accomplish an end attainable by lawful and peaceable political methods under the existing government.

"The radical revolutionary elements in this country and the bolshevik government of Russia have, therefore, found a common cause in support of which they can unite their forces. They are both fanning the flame of discontent and endeavoring to incite revolution. Numerous newspapers are openly advocating revolution. Literature and circular matter demanding a resort to violence are being widely circulated. Bombs and high explosives have been used in many parts of the country in an attempt to inaugurate a reign of terror and to accomplish the assassination of public officials. The demonstration of the consequences of this movement in Russia, no matter how graphic the description, is a distant, far-away picture to the average citizen of the United States. While entertaining and perhaps amusing him, much as the novel in modern fiction does, it fails to impress him as an actual existing institution, in a world growing smaller and smaller through the accomplishments in transportation and communication, that must be considered and met as an actuality. To understand and realize its real consequences, it must be brought home to the citizen and applied to the life and institutions which he knows.

"With a view, therefore, of concretely illustrating just what this new social order would accomplish if transplanted into the political, educational, industrial, and religious life of the United States attention is invited to the following unavoidable consequences:

"1. The application of force and violence, the shedding of blood and the destruction of life and property, the common incidents of all revolutions, and all this to destroy a democratic form of government, under which the majority can secure just the kind of government that it desires. The advocacy of revolutionary methods is an admission, therefore, that minority rather than majority rule is the goal sought to be attained.

"2. To make possible the control of the minority as the dictators of the majority, the disfranchisement of millions of substantial, patriotic citizens who would fall in the so-called bourgeois or capitalistic class. This would deprive of the right to participate in affairs of government—

"(a) Millions of farmers, merchants, and manufacturers, both large and small, employing persons in the conduct of their business, and all professional and business men utilizing the services of a clerk, bookkeeper, or stenographer.

"(b) All persons receiving interest on borrowed money or bonds, rent from real estate or personal property, and dividends from stock of any kind.

"(c) All traders, merchants, and dealers, even though they do not employ another person in the conduct of their business.

"(d) All preachers, priests, janitors, and employees of all churches and religious bodies.

"It is apparent with the millions of persons falling into these several classes, disfranchised and deprived of all right to participate in the affairs of government, accompanied with the immediate enfranchisement of all aliens who do not fall within these prohibited classes, and the opening of the doors of all prisons and penitentiaries, the domination of the criminal and most undesirable alien elements of the country would be a comparatively easy matter. To simplify the question of this control, however, the substantial rural portion of the population would be further suppressed and restricted, and under the revolutionary formula the voting power of the cities would be five times as great as that of the rural communities, the ratio of representation in cities being 1 to every 25,000 of the population, while that of the rural districts would be only 1 to every 125,000 of the population. In the United States the rural population under the 1910 census was considerably in excess of the urban. We must also remember that the application of the formula would include the disarming of all disfranchised classes and the arming to the teeth of these criminal and alien elements.

"3. It would result in the confiscation by the government thus constituted of the land of the United States, including 6,361,502 farms, of which 62.1 per cent, or 3,948,722 farms, are owned in fee by the farmers who cultivate them and represent the labor and toil of a lifetime. On the farms of the United States there are improvements, machinery, and live stock to the value of $40,991,449,090 (census of 1910), all of which would be confiscated with the land. The confiscation program would include the more than 275,000 manufacturing establishments, including the $22,790,980,000 of invested capital, much of which is owned by the small investor, whose livelihood depends upon the success of the respective enterprises. The confiscation would also include 203,432 church edifices. Forests aggregating 555,000,000 acres would be seized by the government and an annual product of $1,375,000,000 would come under the control of the dictatorship. Dwellings to the number of 17,805,845, of which 9,093,675 are owned in fee, with 5,984,248 entirely free from debt, would be confiscated and the owners dispossessed at the pleasure of the government.

"4. Although clamoring loudly for a free and unrestricted press, the revolutionary program would require the seizure and confiscation of the 22,896 newspapers and periodicals in the United States, together with all mechanical equipment necessary for their publication, and a control and ownership of the public press by the government.

"5. Complete control of all banking institutions and their assets is an essential part of the revolutionary program, and the 31,492 banks in the United States would be taken over by the government and the savings of millions, including 11,397,553 depositors drawing interest on accounts in savings banks, and consequently belonging to the so-called bourgeois or capitalistic class, jeopardized.

"6. One of the most appalling and far-reaching consequences of an application of bolshevism in the United States would be found in the confiscation and liquidation of its life insurance companies. There is 20 per cent more life insurance in force in this country than in all the rest of the world and nine-tenths of it is mutual insurance. Almost 50,000,000 life insurance policies, representing nearly $30,000,000,000 of insurance, the substantial protection of the women and children of the Nation, would be rendered valueless.

"7. The atheism that permeates the whole Russian dictatorship is clearly reflected in the activities of their revolutionary confrères in the United States, and in their publications they have denounced our religion and our God as "lies." This gives added significance to the revolutionary attitude toward the Christian church and the Christian religion. The prohibition of religious schools and the teaching or studying of religion, except in private, would necessitate the abolition of 194,759 Sunday schools in the United States and a great number of seminaries, colleges, and universities; 19,935,890 Sunday school scholars would be deprived and prevented from enjoying the institution that has become an important part of their lives and is one of the great moral influences of the Nation. Catholic schools, colleges, and seminaries to the number of 6,681 would be suppressed. Church property of the value of $1,676,600,582 would be confiscated and 41,926,854 (census of 1916) members of 227,487 church organizations would be subjected to the domination of an atheist dictatorship.

"Notwithstanding the fact that every champion and defender of bolshevism that testified before your committee unequivocally admitted that the bolshevik formula was not adaptable to the economic and social life of the United States, they and their coevangelists persist in their appeals to the passion of the people in an attempt to provoke discontent and hatred. In cooperation with the revolutionary elements, destruction of existing social and governmental institutions by violent methods is being promoted. They must, therefore, be condemned as the mere acceptable ideal, as they profess to have, with which to soften and appease the wrath that they are undertaking to arouse."

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to ask the Senator from Washington if he can inform the Senate what has been done in regard to the prosecution and conviction of the men who were guilty of the crime in Centralia, Wash., about which we have all read?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have seen in the newspapers reports that at least one man has been arrested and is now under indictment. There may be more. We have a very stringent antisyndicalism State act. I think he is being prosecuted, however, on the charge of murder. I think that was the charge made under the State law.

Mr. NORRIS. I assumed, of course, that they were guilty of murder and that they ought to be prosecuted for murder.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course.

Mr. NORRIS. Have all those who participated in the crime been arrested, does the Senator know?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not think they have caught everyone who they think participated in it.

Mr. NORRIS. Is there any doubt about who did participate in it? Has that question arisen?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think there is some question about it.

Mr. NORRIS. Is the identity of the criminals clearly established?

Mr. JONES of Washington. All I know is what I read in the newspaper reports. I think I can say that they have not yet clearly established the identify of the criminals, or all of them.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course there is a law in Washington, I assume, that fully covers the situation. It would not be necessary for any legislation on the part of Congress?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Not to cover that particular act.

Mr. NORRIS. I just wanted to get all the information I could with regard to that episode, which really shocked the sensibilities of everybody when we read about it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have given the Senate practically all the information which I have, which I have gotten from the press.

REGULATION OF STREET TRAFFIC IN WASHINGTON CITY.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the pending bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is an amendment pending now.

Mr. FLETCHER. Then, Mr. President, as there is not time to act on it, I want to allude to a local condition here in the city of Washington. I was not present yesterday when the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN], the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, called attention to this condition, and should have been glad to join him at the time or, rather, support his observations about it.

The situation is that it has become almost dangerous for a pedestrian to use the streets of Washington at all. It is as critical as if the people here were in a railroad yard all the time. It is perfectly incomprehensible and inexcusable that people should be run over here day after day, four and five cases every day, by either automobiles or electric street cars.

The instance which brings it especially home to me is the occasion of the death of Mrs. Willard. Mrs. Willard was the daughter of one of the most distinguished citizens of Florida, a former Member of Congress, and she was no stranger to the streets of Washington. The use of street cars and the streets was nothing new to her.

The facts seem to have been that at a regular stopping place for the cars, a place opposite the Hamilton Hotel, quite a party of people assembled for the purpose of taking a northbound car for Chevy Chase. They were at the place where the cars stop. An automobile came speeding down the street, according to the driver, at a rate of speed of 12 miles an hour, but perhaps a great deal more than that, and the driver blew his horn so as to alarm these people and have them get out of his way, I presume, and some of the people did rush from the place where they were standing toward the car tracks. This driver apparently never lessened his speed at all. Mrs. Willard did what was the proper thing to do, stood still to let the driver go around her, because it is dangerous to be shifting back and forth when an automobile is approaching. Usually the wise, sensible thing to do is to stand still. Apparently she stood still. Other members of the party rushed to the street car track, and this automobile struck Mrs. Willard and inflicted such injuries upon her that in 24 hours she died.

The driver says in his statement that he did not see Mrs. Willard. It was his business to see her. There is absolutely no excuse for an automobile driver to run his car into a crowd of people, assuming that they are going to get out of his way, and then claim, because one of them is hurt, that he did not see that particular person.

Mr. POMERENE. She had a legal right to be there.

Mr. FLETCHER. She had a legal right to be there. The truth is that you have to get out into the street where these cars stop and be there when the car arrives or else you can not get on the car. Many a time I myself, and I am quite a user of the street cars, have been within a half a length of the car, of the door entering the car, when the motorman or the conductor would start up the car and leave me, closing the door, and forcing me to wait 10 minutes for another car.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning hour having expired the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3288) further to regulate commerce among the States and with foreign nations and to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended.

Mr. FLETCHER. Passengers who desire to board a street car are obliged to be at the place where the car stops. If they are not there, the motorman will move on and leave them on the sidewalk or within 10 feet of the entrance to the car.

The accident to which I am referring happened at a regular car stop. According to the testimony before the coroner, as reported in the newspapers, it appears that the cars were tied up just a block away. The people who were there waiting for the street cars did not probably know there was a tie-up. The tie-up was only one block from them anyhow, and they were out there waiting to take a street car. The driver gives as an excuse for the accident that he did not see Mrs. Willard at all and therefore he ought not to be blamed. The coroner exonerated him and dismissed the matter.

It seems to me there must be adequate laws already to meet a situation like that. I do not know that we have, but apparently either there is need of additional and other laws, or else we need new coroners in the District and we need some new prosecuting officers.

If I were in a party of people exercising my right to wait to get on a street car at a regular stopping place, if we assembled in the street for the purpose of boarding the street car, and an automobile were to come speeding down the street toward that group of people and a man in the crowd should take out his pistol and shoot the reckless driver down, and if that man was prosecuted and I were called on to serve on the jury at his trial I would acquit him. You are going to come to something like that in the city of Washington if something is not done about the reckless disregard of human life by the automobile drivers, and in some instances probably by motormen of electric street cars. But this was an automobile accident and I refer especially to that.

It is an intolerable situation that a pedestrian has no rights in the streets of Washington at all apparently now that automobile drivers are bound to respect. It seems to me we need a new coroner or more here, otherwise we may expect the next coroner will give a medal to the man who runs down some person and causes his death. It is a condition that we can not afford to ignore. Human life is worth something, and we ought not to permit this sort of thing.

It seems to me the commissioners could promulgate regulations, and the police ought to be stimulated to do their part, and certainly the coroners ought to be competent and willing to do their duty. Of course, the coroner's verdict amounts to practically nothing so far as further action is concerned, and the prosecuting officers can still proceed against this individual, though he will probably leave town and get away and escape punishment entirely. The people who indulge in such criminal negligence and such wicked indifference to others ought to be punished, and punished severely. That man was as clearly guilty of manslaughter as ever a man was in the world.

If he deliberately ran his machine over Mrs. Willard, who was standing in the street, then he is guilty of murder. If he did not see her, he is guilty of manslaughter. She had a right to be there, and it was his business to see her and his business to stop his machine when approaching a crowd of people in the street, and not take it for granted that they were going to get out of his way. The thing is happening every day, and something must be done about it. We can not sit here and see people injured and their rights utterly disregarded by the people who are running automobiles for hire or for pleasure, it makes no difference which. We can not have the streets entirely monopolized by the automobiles and by the street cars.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from Florida has not overemphasized the perilous condition of Washington's streets. A citizen will soon have to arm himself with a pistol and shoot some of the drivers of this city, who, with a cynical, reckless disregard of human life, run down old men, old women, and babes in arms.

Only yesterday a driver very nearly deprived the Senate of a useful Member, whereupon the speed-mad driver only laughed and said, "Keep off the street; you have no right here."

Mr. KING. It was a good joke.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; it was a good joke for him.

Mr. FLETCHER. I quite agree with the Senator from Arizona. The people will undoubtedly resort to some method of that kind in order to protect themselves if the police officers and municipal authorities in the District of Columbia do not in some way bring about a change in the present practice.

I, of course, was not a witness to the accident, but, according to the article in the Star, this running down a person on the public highway and causing injuries which resulted in death was a dastardly act, in violation of law and deserving of severe punishment. The headline reads:

> Mrs. Willard's death accident. Coroner's jury investigates fatal auto crash. Other street collisions.

The article sets forth a list of five or six more accidents similar in character, in addition to the one to which I have referred. The article says:

> It was testified that Charles E. Jones, a colored chauffeur, was driving his employer's machine north on Fourteenth Street at a rate of speed not greater than 12 miles an hour—

Of course, that is his statement—

> Street cars were tied up on Fourteenth Street, south of I, witnesses stated—

That is only one block away from where the accident occurred—> and no car was approaching the place where the accident happened.

It does not take a street car long to run a block, and, as I said, unless you are right at the spot in time to take the car, the car will move on without you, even if you have to go the distance from the sidewalk to the car track.

> Several persons were standing on the street almost in front of the entrance to the Hamilton Hotel—> and when Jones sounded his horn all of them, with the exception of Mrs. Willard, moved toward the car tracks. The night was dark and misty, and Jones and other occupants of the car said they did not see Mrs. Willard.

That is a regular stopping place—

Jones was exonerated, and the killing of a most estimable woman, as gentle and sweet a character as lived, was declared an unavoidable accident. As I said, perhaps the next man who does a thing like that will be given a medal by the coroner or decorated in some way. It is a perfect outrage, a wicked crime. It was the driver's business to see Mrs. Willard in the street and to stop his car before he approached the crowd of people standing in the street, and to take no chances of that sort; but it seems automobile drivers do not propose to stop under such circumstances. Pedestrians have either got to get out of the way or they will get run over, and that is all there is to it.

I hope the Committee on the District of Columbia will present a bill that will rectify this condition and adequately deal with the situation. It is getting so that it is absolutely dangerous for pedestrians to use the streets at all. A man takes his life in his hands when he goes out into the street to board a street car or goes from the car to the sidewalk. It is intolerable.

Mr. KIRBY obtained the floor.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Will the Senator from Arkansas yield?

Mr. KIRBY. Certainly.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I wish simply to make a brief statement with regard to the question of traffic regulations and automobile traffic in Washington. I quite agree with the Senators who have spoken on the subject that Congress should immediately enact some legislation to protect the traveling public against the carelessness that now exists in Washington. The safety of not only the public but our own families depends upon it.

You can stop all this reckless driving if you will simply enact a law providing for the examination of drivers and licensing only responsible drivers, those who are qualified to drive, and by providing a strong penalty clause of arrest or fine for those who violate the law. That will correct the present disregard of all law and order in the city of Washington.

The matter was discussed yesterday and we can go on discussing it, but the evil will continue unless some provision is made to punish the offenders with fine or imprisonment and unless we have some responsible bureau to examine everyone who drives an automobile in the city of Washington and compel them to pass an examination and compel them to show that they are efficient and capable of driving it. Then if they violate the regulations arrest them and fine them and deprive them of the further privilege of driving. Thus you will stop the reckless driving and the menace to the traveling public.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I only desire to confirm the statement made by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] and to call attention to another, the most flagrant case of apparent willful disregard of human life that I have ever known. I did not see the occurrence, but it was related in the city papers. Yesterday or the day before a street car struck a person down on Pennsylvania Avenue. The car stopped, of course. The motorman of the street car behind it got out to administer some relief to the injured man and an automobilist came along and killed that motorman.

That happened right here in Washington. That condition ought not to be allowed to exist anywhere. Necessarily there was confusion under the circumstances there that would have attracted the attention of any driver, and still when the motorman of the second car went out to administer some relief to the injured person he was run down and killed by an automobile right here on Pennsylvania Avenue.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I know of no more lawless set of people than the chauffeurs of this city who drive automobiles. I do not believe there is one automobile driver out of fifty who observes the regulation about stopping his machine before it gets within 15 feet of a street car which has stopped, and which forbids automobiles from passing a street car while the car has stopped. I do not believe there is one automobile driver out of fifty who observes that regulation. I see automobiles every day sweeping right past street cars when people are alighting, and paying no more attention to them than if there were no such law at all.

It is practically impossible to convict anyone of a violation of the law. A few weeks ago I was alighting from a street car and an automobile swept by without paying any attention at all and I came very nearly being run over. If I had not noticed the approach of the car and stepped back a foot or two I would have been struck down. I was going to prosecute the driver of the machine. I got the number of the machine from the rear as it went by in its joyous career, and wrote the district attorney about it. I gave him the number of the car, but he informed me that I would have to swear to the identity of the driver; that when he came into court I would have to point him out and say, "This man was driving the car." I could not do that, of course. I did not get a good glimpse of the driver, so that it was practically impossible to identify him.

I do not believe there is one machine out of fifty in the city that observes the regulations. I believe the average rate of speed of automobiles in Washington is 30 miles an hour right on the most crowded streets, and I have seen some of them on residence streets that I believe were going 50 miles an hour. They turn corners without halting or paying any attention, and even without blowing their horns. If a man is not careful some automobile coming from a side street will slip up behind him and run over him and kill him. I believe the law ought to be that anyone who fails to observe the regulations shall have his automobile confiscated, no matter who is driving it. If he insists on employing a lawless, reckless chauffeur, let him suffer the consequences.

It has become so that it is dangerous to cross the streets in Washington. About the only remedy seems to be for pedestrians to go armed and to draw their arms and shoot the chauffeurs who approach them in disregard of the law. There are drivers in this city who ought to be shot down just as a wild animal at large would be shot down. The minority of members of Congress who use street cars find their lives in constant danger.

Mr. President, I merely wanted to add my testimony to what has been said here. A very grave situation exists.

RAILROAD CONTROL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3288) further to regulate commerce among the States and with foreign nations, and to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended.

Mr. FRANCE. I present an amendment to the pending bill, being the so-called Madden bill, which was offered some time ago in the House of Representatives and which I intend to offer as an amendment to the pending bill. I ask that the proposed amendment may be printed in the RECORD and that it may also be printed in the usual form and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. FRANCE to the bill (S. 3288) further to regulate commerce among the States and with foreign nations and to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, viz: At the proper place insert the following:

SEC. —. That hereafter it shall be unlawful for any owner, operator, manager, trustee, receiver, or lessee of any transportation system or systems, by land or water routes within the territorial boundaries of the United States of America and engaged in or soliciting interstate commerce under a common control, management, or arrangement, or any servant, employee, or agent of such owner, manager, trustee, receiver, operator, or lessee, or any other person having connection therewith, to deny or to refuse to furnish, by any device or method whatsoever, equal and identical rights, accommodations, and privileges to any person who shall pay, or offer to pay, the uniform charge made for such equal and identical rights, accommodations, and privileges in interstate transportation, when such refusal is on account of the race, color, or previous condition of servitude of the person so applying.

And it shall hereafter be further unlawful for any owner, operator, manager, lessee, trustee, or receiver of any system or systems of transportation within the territorial boundaries of the United States of America and engaged in or soliciting interstate commerce, or any servant, employee, or agent of such owner, operator, manager, trustee, receiver, or lessee, or any other person connected therewith, to operate upon any part of their transportation system or systems any car, vessel, train of cars, or other conveyance in and upon which any person, being transported to a final destination beyond the boundaries of any State or Territory of the United States of America, or beyond the boundaries of the District of Columbia, and paying, or offering to pay, the uniform charge made for transportation in interstate transportation, shall, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, be separated from any other passenger, or be denied equal and identical rights, accommodations, and privileges accorded any other passenger paying or offering to pay such uniform charge for interstate transportation, or be permitted to be assaulted, molested, or in any other way injured or oppressed by reason of the exercise of any right herein granted or protected.

SEC. —. That any owner, manager, lessee, operator, trustee, or receiver of any system of transportation as set forth in section 1 of this act who shall violate or connive at the violation of any of the provisions of section 1 shall, for each such violation or connivance, forfeit not less than the full sum of $5,000, to be recovered in a proper United States court, in an action on the case, to the use of each person aggrieved by such violation, together with costs and reasonable counsel fees, to be fixed by the trial justice; and all other persons guilty of such violation or participation therein shall, upon conviction in a proper United States court, be fined $1,000, or imprisoned in a Federal prison for one year, or both.

SEC. —. That the provisions of this act shall apply to the interstate operation of transportation systems under Federal control, with like penalties and punishments for its violation.

SEC. —. That all acts, parts of acts, statutes, regulations, and orders not in conformity herewith are hereby amended, altered, or repealed.

Mr. McKELLAR resumed and concluded the speech begun by him yesterday. The entire speech is as follows:

Mr. President, the pending railroad bill has been before the Senate for a number of days. Practically no interest has been taken in the bill. Senators have absented themselves from the Senate during the entire discussion. If they feel any interest in the bill they do not indicate it either by their presence in the Senate or by talking about it. It involves about one-fifteenth of the entire wealth of the United States. It is the most important measure affecting the interests and the prosperity of this country that was ever before Congress, and yet it is being allowed to pass along practically without any comment in the newspapers, and practically without any notice upon the part of the public. About one Senator in four or five, apparently, has looked over the bill, from what I can understand about the situation, and the country itself seems almost oblivious to the fact that there is pending before the Congress this very important measure.

Whether or not we are going to take any more interest in it as the debate goes on I can not say. I am sure it is not because we have made up our minds, because there are a great many of us that have considered it in but a perfunctory way, and there are a great many others of us that have not considered it at all.

I am frank to say, Mr. President, that I am greatly disappointed in the bill that has been reported out by the committee. I do not believe it is a wise measure. When its provisions are fully known I do not believe it will meet the approval of the country. It is wholly opposed to sound business principles, to say the least of it. In a large sense it is bolshevistic in the extreme. I have heard a great many people talk about the iniquities of the Plumb plan. About the only difference between the Plumb plan and the Cummins plan of control of the railroads is this: Under the Plumb plan the railroads are taken away from the owners, paid for by the Government, and turned over to the brotherhoods. Under this proposed measure the railroads are put in a trust and turned over to the security holders. The Government holds the bag under both plans. The people will be required to pay exorbitant charges under both plans. The plans are very similar and both approach Government ownership very substantially.

Mr. President, in continuing where I left off yesterday I desire for a few moments to address myself to the subject of the 5½ per cent guaranty provided in the pending bill. I am fully aware that the distinguished chairman of the committee, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], takes a different view of the 5½ per cent guaranty which is provided for in section 6 of the bill. The chairman of the committee is of the opinion, as stated on yesterday, that this is not a guaranty provision, but that it is merely a declaration of policy. I think the chairman is mistaken in that; and I wish to read the provision of the bill itself. I quote from page 13 of the bill:

> The commission shall initiate, modify, or adjust rates, fares, charges, and classifications, as nearly as may be, so that the railway carriers as a whole allocated to each district and subject to this act shall earn an aggregate annual net railway operating income equal, as nearly as may be, to 5½ per cent upon the aggregate value, as determined in accordance with the provisions hereof, of the railway property of such carriers in the district held for and used in the service of transportation.

Mr. President, there is no declaration of policy in these words. They are absolutely mandatory. They constitute, in my judgment, a guaranty.

Mr. President, I am convinced that this provision of the bill is not only wrong in policy but that, as a matter of law, it is unconstitutional. I base my statement that it is unconstitutional upon somewhat distinguished authority in this country. Four years ago it was very distinguished authority on one side of this Chamber, and it is probably just as distinguished authority to-day. I refer to the opinion of ex-Justice of the Supreme Court Mr. Charles Evans Hughes. He believes that that provision, with the accompanying provisions, is unconstitutional, and so do I, and there are decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States that uphold that view.

Before going into the legal question, however, I wish to say that, in my judgment, this is an absolute guaranty, susceptible of being enforced in the courts. I venture the opinion that if this provision becomes a law the railroads of the country will have the legal right, if it becomes necessary, to mandamus the Interstate Commerce Commission to fix such a rate as will yield a return of 5½ per cent.

Let us see what is the nature of that guaranty. Mr. President, under the Constitution of the United States this body, together with the House of Representatives, with the approval of the President, has the power to tax the people. It is true that measures passed by Congress giving the Interstate Commerce Commission the right to fix rates of fare and of freight on railroads have been upheld, and properly so; but I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that in holding such provisions constitutional the courts have done so upon the theory that what the Interstate Commerce Commission was directed to do was to fix a reasonable compensation for reasonable services rendered. Whenever you go beyond that you invade another jurisdiction, and that, in my judgment, can not be done under the Constitution.

What is the purpose here of providing that rates shall be fixed to return 5½ per cent upon the actual capital invested by the railroads? Is it for the purpose of fixing a compensation for services rendered? Not at all. It is a rate fixed for the purpose not of determining the compensation but for measuring income, for guaranteeing income, and I say that may not be done under our Constitution.

I say, in the next place, that it is not a wise policy for the American Congress to guarantee to any of its citizens that there shall be a fixed return upon their property, regardless of what the citizen or property does to earn it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Tennessee to the fact—I have forgotten the name of the case now, but I can furnish it to him—that one of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States is in relation to a case coming from Tennessee, where the legislature of that State in the early history of the building of railroads, provided in the charter of a railroad company that the compensation should be only a reasonable return upon the capital. That provision was attacked and was declared invalid, not on the ground that a reasonable return on the capital was not a fair basis of rate making, but on the ground that the legislative body failed to establish what was a reasonable basis or prescribe what the reasonable basis should be or provide a rule of action by which it could be determined. In the early history of rate making in this country, and in England as well, many railroad charters were granted on the very basis that rates should be based on a reasonable return on their capital, and such provisions have been sustained. So this is not a new problem.

The Senator refers to the decision of Justice Hughes. Justice Hughes's decision was written on the basis of the bill as originally introduced. It has been very considerably modified and his criticism of the bill met by the committee; and if the Senator will refer to the bill with reference to the just and reasonable return, as criticized by Justice Hughes in his opinion, and then look at the amendment—it may have escaped the Senator, because it was not clearly set out as an amendment. The original bill was introduced, and then afterwards very greatly amended in several particulars, and another bill was introduced as a substitute for it that came in intact and did not show the amendments; but if the Senator will compare the bill that Justice Hughes was criticizing with the bill that is now before the Senate, he will find that they are two very different measures in this particular.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have compared them, and I understand the changes that have been made. I have before me the provision that Mr. Justice Hughes criticized, and I also have before me the bill as it is at present written and proposed; and I venture the assertion that the vice pointed out by Justice Hughes is just as obvious in the present bill as it was in the original bill.

What was done was this: The original bill provided that one-half of the excess payments—in other words, one-half of the taxes levied upon the people and collected by the carrier—one-half of all such payments to the board shall be invested or expended for the purposes set forth in section 25 hereof, and one-half thereof shall be deposited in a fund which from time to time shall be expended by the board in the purchase of equipment to be leased under proper terms to carriers in order to facilitate transportation, or to loan to carriers upon reasonable security in order to purchase equipment or other facilities, in the event that such carriers are unable to secure elsewhere the funds with which to provide themselves with adequate transportation facilities.

Now, that part of the bill was altered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the Senator, though, that that is not the part to which I am referring. I have not the bill before me, but it is the part with reference to rate making to which Mr. Justice Hughes's opinion directly related, where he claimed it was unconstitutional; and as the bill was originally introduced, the basis of rate making was a fair and reasonable return on the capital. It was not the disposition of the funds after they were collected that I was referring to or that his decision primarily goes to. It is a question of rate making, and not the disposition of the money after the rate is acquired; and that has been entirely changed in the present bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Under the provisions of the original bill one half of the excess money secured by the rates was to be divided among the employees under certain conditions and the other half put in a contingent fund for the benefit of the weak or poor railroads. That is the substance of it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is true, but his decision did not go to that point.

Mr. McKELLAR. Just one moment. The new bill provides that one-third of this excess collection shall go to the carriers themselves and two-thirds of it shall be put in a contingent fund to help crippled railroads. Now, my proposition is this——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But, Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. Just one moment. Let me state the case, and then the Senator can see whether or not he differs with me. My proposition is this, that Congress has not the constitutional power to delegate to the Interstate Commerce Commission the right to raise and collect money in this way, or in any other way; or, in other words, to tax the people, the tax to be devoted to the aid of broken down or needy railroad companies. You can not do it under any guise, and whenever you undertake to transfer or delegate the taxing power to the Interstate Commerce Commission to raise money for any such purpose you violate the Constitution.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senator will allow me, my recollection of Justice Hughes's opinion is that it did not go to that feature of the bill. It was with regard to the feature as to levying taxation, and that is what I thought the Senator referred to as the basis of the decision.

As the bill was originally prepared, I agree with the Senator about the amendment of which he speaks. It originally proposed that part of this fund should go to the employees. That was for individual effort; but there is a very different bill before the Senate to-day. Under that bill the proceeds of the fund so collected went to private enterprise or private employment; but under the bill as it stands to-day, it goes to the public. It goes to the Government of the United States. All this surplus fund goes to a Government board, just as it would go to the Treasury of the United States; not to a railroad. It never goes to a railroad. It is provided that the fund may be used to loan to the railroads, but the interest comes back to the Government.

The Treasury is loaning money to the railroads now. This fund that goes to the public would be loaned to the railroads. There is nothing unconstitutional about that. On the other hand, if it is not used for that purpose, it goes to a Government corporation to build cars and equipment to lend to railroads in the interest of the public, and it does not become the property of the corporation; but it possibly enables the weak road to rent, on reasonable terms, cars to furnish transportation facilities to the people on the weak roads, and give them the benefits that only the people on the strong roads get to-day. That is a very different aspect of the case from the way the bill stood when Justice Hughes rendered his decision.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will read from the bill itself. That is the best way to get at it. I am talking now about the contingent fund that is being raised on the excess rates that are to be fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission. In other words, the excess of taxes that are levied by the Interstate Commerce Commission on the business of the country is to be put into a contingent fund, and here is what is to be done with it according to the bill:

And the said fund and all accretions thereof shall be employed or invested or expended by the board in furtherance of the public interest in railway transportation by carriers subject to the act to regulate commerce in avoiding congestions, interruptions, or hindrances to the railway service of the United States by carriers subject to the act to regulate commerce, or in furthering the public service rendered by them, either by way of purchase, lease, or rental of transportation equipment and facilities to be used by such carriers wherever the public interest may require, or by way of loans to such carriers, upon such fair and reasonable terms and conditions, in either case, as the board may prescribe.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Exactly.

Mr. McKELLAR. Now, one moment. My proposition is that the United States Government may tax the people, if it so desires, and establish a fund for these purposes. If it wants to vote bounties to certain railroads in the country, or any other corporations in the country, or any individuals in the country, it has the right to do it if it can get the necessary majority in both Houses of Congress and get the President's signature to it; but under the Constitution it can not delegate its rightful power to tax to the Interstate Commerce Commission and let that commission tax the people for any such purpose.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is another question.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is the question that I am raising.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But the question that Justice Hughes raised was not that question.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is exactly in the same line, and the same reasoning that applied to the question in Justice Hughes's argument applies to this question; in other words, that the Congress has not the right to delegate its power to the Interstate Commerce Commission in order to raise taxes for any purpose, I do not care what it is.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the Senator from Tennessee that I do not agree with him entirely on that matter; but I only interrupted him to call his attention to the difference in the two bills at the time Mr. Justice Hughes wrote his decision and now. It will take an extended argument to present my views on the other question, and I will not attempt to do it in the Senator's time.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall be glad to yield a little later.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would not trespass on the Senator now.

Mr. McKELLAR. I would prefer to go on and at least state the propositions that I desire to state.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course I will yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. CUMMINS. I want the Senate to understand the relation of ex-Justice Hughes and ex-Senator Root and the associates of both to this question.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will permit me, I will state that I have Mr. Justice Hughes's opinion in the matter, and I am going to ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD, so that the Senate can see just what it is.

Mr. CUMMINS. Very well; let us have it printed, because it has been circulated very generally. I have not a word to say, of course, as the Senator knows, in disrespect of ex-Justice Hughes. I think he is a very distinguished lawyer, and I say likewise of ex-Senator Root; but I want the Senate to understand that the railway executives employed ex-Justice Hughes. This is the way, at least, that it has been given to me, and I assume that it is true. Notwithstanding some things that have been said in this Chamber, the railway executives are opposed to this bill and are doing everything in their power to defeat it, and in order to help defeat it they employed ex-Justice Hughes to render an opinion for them with regard to this feature of the bill. The same thing is true of ex-Senator Root. The Securities Association, or whatever may be its technical name, representing in a general way the bonds of the railway companies, employed ex-Senator Root to render an opinion with regard to a feature in their plan that required the taking of excess earnings—not the same plan that we have here, but a plan that would present the same legal questions.

Mr. McKELLAR. Precisely.

Mr. CUMMINS. That I agree. All that I want the country and the Senate to know is that these opinions, coming indeed from distinguished men and lawyers, are the opinions of advocates of their respective interests, advocates of the two sides of that question.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. Just one minute. I will yield to the Senator from Ohio in just a minute.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have said all that I care to say.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I say I know nothing in the world about by whom Mr. Justice Hughes and Senator Elihu Root were employed. I know nothing about it, but I take the Senator's word for it. But I want to say that, so far as I am concerned, I do not think anyone on earth would charge for a moment that I represented anybody in this body except my constituents in Tennessee and the United States.

Mr. CUMMINS. No; and the Senator can not for a moment think that I have any such view.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am quite sure the Senator has not, but I do not like to have references made to paid attorneys.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am only saying that when we rely upon the opinion of ex-Justice Hughes we are not relying upon the opinion of a member of the Supreme Court. When we are relying upon the opinion of ex-Senator Root we are not relying upon an opinion that he would render as a Senator. We are relying in both cases on opinions rendered, after retainer, for the respective sides. It is perfectly proper for a lawyer to do that. We all take retainers, and have to take retainers; but the Senator knows as well as I do that when lawyers are retained there is just a shade of inclination toward the views held by their clients, and therefore we must not accept the opinions upon either side as the opinions of entirely impartial people.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course I do not know to what extent Mr. Justice Hughes and ex-Senator Root are influenced by retainers. I do not happen to have the personal acquaintance with those gentlemen which Senators on the other side of the Chamber have. They have served with ex-Senator Root, and Mr. Justice Hughes was the candidate of the Republican Party for President. I rather assumed that these men were quite honest men, of the highest character, and would not attach their names to any document, whether paid for it or not, unless they honestly believed that the statement they made in that document was the law of the land; and I am inclined to think that what they have stated here was a proper legal opinion.

Mr. CUMMINS. They are honest men, and they are great lawyers, both of them; but they can not both be right upon this proposition, inasmuch as they are diametrically opposed to each other with respect to the constitutionality of this provision.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well. We will leave that where it is. Now, I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I simply want to offer this suggestion: The Senator from Tennessee has asked to have printed in the RECORD the opinion of Mr. Justice Hughes. Of course, that is great authority; but it seems to me that if Senators want the full benefit of the constitutional arguments on both sides the opinion of Mr. Johnson, I believe it was, as concurred in by ex-Senator Root and three or four other very able constitutional lawyers, should also be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection. I shall not interpose any objection if the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] or the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] desires to have these decisions printed in the RECORD. I am trying to impress upon the Senate that this remarkable departure from the policies of the American Government with respect to its citizens is not believed by all the great lawyers in this country, at any rate, to be a constitutional departure.

I say that this is a guaranty of 5½ per cent to the railroads of the country; that it is not compensation for service done, because there is nothing in this bill that requires service of the railroads. Instead of requiring service of the railroads, a premium is put upon a lack of service, for you say to the good road, the well-managed road, the prosperous road, the road that looks after its own business, the road that gives the public the best kind of service, "We will penalize you for giving that service. You ought not to give it. We will penalize you, and we will take your money away from you for doing it." And you say to the poorly managed road, the road that has not good purchasing agents, that does not purchase its materials well, that has poor traffic managers and poor road superintendents, that does not keep up its rolling stock and does not keep up its equipment, and does not furnish the public any service, "We will reward you for not doing that by taking away the earnings of the good roads, and turning over an agency for the benefit of you fellows who do not do your duty a portion of those earnings."

I say that any such principle in any bill is wholly un-American, that it is wholly unjust, it is absolutely indefensible, and I do not see how anyone who knows the fact can say for a moment that a policy like that ought to be written into the law of the United States.

I do not know how other Senators are going to vote, but, so far as I am concerned, I shall never vote to take away the just earnings of a railroad that is well managed, that gives the public an efficient service, and turn those earnings, in part, over to another railroad that is not well managed and that does not give the public a good service.

But Senators say that that is a declaration of policy about the 5½ per cent. Why do you not put it in the bill, if it is a declaration of policy? I am inclined to believe, as a matter of law, that if you put in the bill that it is the declared purpose of the United States to furnish to the railroads 5½ per cent income on their capital invested, that would be a legal agreement which they could enforce in any court, and the Interstate Commerce Commission would be required—nay, be compelled—to fix the rates, if they are constitutional.

Why should we do this for any class of our citizens? If we do it for the railroads, why should we not do it for the banks; why should we not do it for the farmers; why should we not do it for the merchants; why should we not do it for labor; why should we not do it for the lawyers? There are many of them making an honest living. Why should we not do it for the doctors? Why should we not give them all a reasonable income of 5½ per cent? Why are we making fish of one and fowl of another? What reason is there? Why should we take this particular class of our citizens and put them in a different class or on a different basis from all other citizens?

You say because they are public-service corporations. If you are going to do that why should you not do it for the street car companies; why should you not do it for the electric-light companies; why should you not do it for the telegraph and telephone companies that deal with interstate commerce? I say that it is indefensible in policy to put this tax upon the American people, and it is nothing in the world but a tax. As a matter of fact, how are you going to apply the law when you pass it, Senators?

We have had a commission trying to value the railroad properties of this country for the last five years, and they have not finished yet; and in this bill you direct the Interstate Commerce Commission to value them in the twinkling of an eye, and give them 5 per cent return upon the valuation. Is it conceivable that they can do it?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the Senator has just made the statement that under this bill we require the Interstate Commerce Commission to make a valuation in the twinkling of an eye. I am sure the Senator does not mean quite that.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will excuse me, I will say this, that in this bill you are directing the Interstate Commerce Commission to fix such a valuation and to fix a rate for the year 1920, and it is not very long until 1920. This bill will not be passed by 1920, and before this bill is passed the duty will be upon the Interstate Commerce Commission to fix a value upon which they are to allow 5½ per cent.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, that question was simply preliminary to another one that I expected to ask. Let us assume that this bill is defeated. The Interstate Commerce Commission has in the past fixed rates, and it will be compelled in the future to fix rates. These rates have some relation to valuation. Presumably they have a relation to the actual valuation. If this bill is defeated, still they are obliged to make their rates for a certain return on a certain valuation, and the difficulty which the Senator suggests under this bill is going to obtain under any system of rate making you may have. So you are not getting away from it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no, Mr. President. There never has been such a direction to the Interstate Commerce Commission. All the law that is now on the statute books does is to direct the Interstate Commerce Commission to fix reasonable compensation for the service rendered. This is the first time in the history of this Government that the Congress has undertaken to direct the Interstate Commerce Commission to fix such compensation as would bring a certain figure to the owners of the railroad property.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. Just one moment. I will yield to the Senator in just a moment. It is not fair for the Senator to ask a question and then to interrupt before I have an opportunity to answer.

Mr. POMERENE. I will not interrupt the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the direction here to the Interstate Commerce Commission is not to fix compensation for services rendered; that is utterly foreign to this bill. It is to fix a tax that will bring a certain return to the railroads. Now, the Senator says that there has heretofore been a valuation, and there has been. I imagine it is a guess. They have never had a true valuation made, but they evidently have guessed at it; and yet what have they done under the guess? They have paid the railroads a net rental of 5 per cent for the last two years, while the war has been going on. I say 5 per cent, because in round numbers there are about $18,000,000,000 invested in the railroad properties, according to the guess, and 5 per cent on $18,000,000,000 is $900,000,000, which we have been paying to the railroads, and that is why I make that statement.

Let us see what we are going to do if this direction is constitutional and we carry it out. The Interstate Commerce Commission has to add immediately another half per cent. They must make an additional rate that will increase the rate we have been paying on the $18,000,000,000 to 5½ per cent. Then, in addition to that, they must increase the rates so as to take care of 1 per cent for betterments, improvements, and equipment. That is a per cent and one-half. Then it will probably take another per cent, not less than another per cent, to take care of the deficiency, because the railroads until recently have been running at a loss. It will mean that instead of giving these railroad companies a rate that will bring 5½ per cent you will have to give them a rate that will bring nearer 8 per cent.

Let us see where that is going to lead us under the terms of the bill. If the bill passes we have got to instruct the Interstate Commerce Commission to fix such rates and charges as will bring 7½ per cent—the 5½ per cent guaranteed, the 1 per cent for equipment, betterments, and the like, and at least another 1 per cent to take care of the deficiency. We have to raise the rates at once for the year 1920 somewhere between 20 and 25 per cent.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. Just one moment. I do not know how other Senators may feel about it, but when I realize that we have already increased the rates on passenger and freight traffic all the way from 25 to 150 and possibly 200 per cent in the last two years, with the other tremendous burdens upon the commercial and business world that have already been placed there by acts of Congress; when we indirectly, as we do in this bill, cause the Interstate Commerce Commission to raise rates from 25 to 50 per cent over what they are now, in the way of taxation, we are going to find that there are many people in the country who object to it and object very seriously, and I am one of them.

I now yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator has stated two or three times that we must levy a tax of 5½ per cent and then 6 per cent and then a half of 1 per cent more——

Mr. McKELLAR. Not 6 per cent. Five and a half per cent, and then 1 per cent for betterments and equipment, and then, to cover deficiency, at least another per cent.

Mr. CUMMINS. That has been stated here many times. I have not seen fit to try to correct all misrepresentations of the bill, because I know they have been unintentional. It is one-half of 1 per cent instead of 1 per cent that may be added to the 5½ per cent, and that is entirely within the discretion of the Interstate Commerce Commission. It need not add one-half of 1 per cent unless it believes that the welfare of the people of the country requires it. I hope the Senator from Tennessee will hold that in mind.

There is no suggestion of levying any tax or creating rates that will raise 8 per cent or 7 per cent or any other percentage save 5½ per cent upon the value of the property, whatever that may be. I am sure the Senator wants to be entirely accurate in his description of the bill, however much he may be opposed to it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to be entirely accurate. I see that one-half of 1 per cent is correct instead of 1 per cent, but in other respects my statement is correct. Nor do I object to the railroads earning 5½ per cent. I hope they will all earn that or more. I want them to prosper. Five and a half per cent is not unreasonable. That is not my objection to this bill. I am against the guaranty.

Mr. President, you are paying 5 per cent now, and have been until recently running at a great loss of several hundred million dollars a year, taking it the year around. You provide that the 5½ per cent net income shall be given to railroads; you have to absorb that loss some way, and there is no way to do it except by taxation, and the Interstate Commerce Commission is compelled by the bill to tax so as to pay all the expenses.

I want to read just a moment what they are compelled to do, because it is pertinent at this time.

Under the provisions of the bill the Government gives the Interstate Commerce Commission power, with the exception of the one-half of 1 per cent—and really that is mandatory, too, because they can require it, it is a declaration of policy that the railroads will be entitled to it if we pass the bill—to tax the people of the United States to pay the railroad owners, first, their operating expenses; second, their bonded interest; third, all their taxes and other charges, and that takes into consideration bad debts; and, fourth, it directs the commission to tax the people enough to pay 5½ per cent and even more on their stock, whether good or bad, watered or unwatered, just so it may be included in the valuation.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. Just one moment. I do not mean by that that the bill directs that it be paid on the present issues of stock, but a valuation is to be fixed, and they are to pay on that valuation. Then, in addition to that, in order to be certain that the badly managed roads, the roads of little value, shall make their 5½ per cent, the commission is directed to fix such rates as will cause the better roads to earn more than 5½ per cent. I understood the Senator from Iowa the other day, in answer to some question that was asked him, not to agree with that statement, but——

Mr. CUMMINS. I certainly do not.

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to read to him from the bill. I read from page 14 of the bill:

> In so changing or modifying rates, fares, charges, and classifications from time to time in the manner provided in the act to regulate commerce, as amended, the commission shall take into consideration the interests of the public, the shippers, the wages of labor, the cost of maintenance and operation, including taxes, the requirements for additional capital in order to enable the carriers to adequately perform their duties to the public, and the conditions under which the same can be secured; and shall, so far as practicable, adjust rates, fares, charges, and classifications that the net operating income of the several carriers shall bear the same relation to the value of their respective properties. For the purpose aforesaid the commission shall from time to time determine the value of the property in each district and rate-making group so held for and used in the service of transportation, and lower or advance the rates, fares, or charges for transportation to produce, as nearly as may be, the net operating income above mentioned.

Mr. CUMMINS. What is the "net operating income above mentioned"?

Mr. McKELLAR. That means that you are going to have some of the roads earn more than 5½ per cent in order to equalize the others that do not make 5½ per cent.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I say to the Senator from Tennessee that the limit for all the roads in any district is an aggregate net operating income of 5½ per cent on the value of the property? That is the maximum which the Interstate Commerce Commission may permit the roads to earn.

Mr. McKELLAR. But listen to this——

Mr. CUMMINS. There is no authority for any possible increase of rates above that net operating income.

It is quite true, of course, and the Senator knows, that under a body of rates based upon a 5½ per cent return for net operating income for all the property some of the roads would earn 2 per cent, some 4, some 6 or 8, and some 9 per cent, and that would be true under any body of rates which the commission might fix. It is true under the rates now in existence and was true under the rates in existence before the Government took possession of the railroads.

Mr. McKELLAR. Listen to this. This is the way the bill takes care of it:

> It being impracticable to establish a level of uniform rates and charges within competitive areas which will sustain sundry carriers indispensable to the communities served by them—

That is, those that can not make the money, or will not make the money, or under your system will not be permitted to make any money, or will be penalized if they do make any money—> without enabling more favorably situated carriers to receive revenue from such rates, negligibly as to each service but in the aggregate substantially and unreasonably in excess of the aggregate over a fair return upon their property, unless regulated in the interest of the commerce of the United States as a whole, it is hereby provided that, subject to the exceptions and conditions of this act, no carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall be authorized to receive and retain for the transportation services rendered—

And so forth, over 5½ per cent.

In other words, the very purpose of the act is to provide for inequality of treatment and penalizing the industrious, ambitious, hard-working, good road, and give bounties to the roads that do not give the public good service. That is the whole sum and substance of the act, so far as the 5½ per cent is concerned, whenever you do that.

What is the reason for any road giving the public a good service? Take the roads from here to New York, one the Pennsylvania and the other the Baltimore & Ohio, both splendid roads and both of which, as I understand it, give the public splendid service. Suppose that one of those roads has an active, young, vigorous, intelligent, competent, and efficient president, who selects for himself a corps of competent assistants; that he is careful in employing his labor; that he has a purchasing agent who is one of the best in the land; that he conducts his railroad economically and fairly and justly; and that he gives the public a perfectly splendid service, a service that can not be equaled anywhere, we will suppose for the sake of the argument. After doing that he makes 10 per cent on his capital stock. Under the provisions of the bill something over 3 per cent of his earnings are taken away from him and given to other railroads, in substance, or put into a fund for other railroads.

Take, now, the other railroad and compare it. Suppose it has a president who does not know anything about the railroad business; that he is put there because of influence of some kind, financial or otherwise; that he has not got good superintendents; that his purchasing agent is not a competent purchasing agent and does not know how to buy materials for the railroad, does not know how to buy equipment, and loses thousands and thousands and perhaps millions of dollars in the purchase of supplies and equipment for his railroad; that he does not care a cent in the world about service to the public, and his railroad only makes 2 per cent.

Under the bill you take away from the well-managed road first described a part of what it has honestly and fairly earned, to the great benefit of the public, and turn it over and put it into the hands of the slovenly, ill-managed road and reward it thereby. I ask the Senator from Iowa what incentive there is on the part of any railroad to furnish the public a good service under such conditions?

I have read the bill, not as carefully as it ought to have been read; I have studied the bill, perhaps not as carefully as I ought to have studied it, because of the treaty that has been pending so long. But from the view that I take of it the public is hardly considered in it. You take great care of the railroad and its property, but there is no provision here to give the public an adequate and efficient service. There is no provision in the bill for any competition in service. Instead of there being a provision for competition in service, the bill breaks down every competitive idea by taking away from the well-managed road that which it has honestly earned and turning it over to the ill-managed road, that does not care whether it earns anything or not. I say that is indefensible.

What will that lead to? If we adopt that principle for all our corporations, if we adopt such a principle with all our people, what sort of service can we expect from public corporations or any other corporations? It is unwise in policy. It is absolutely indefensible in principle when you come to look at it and put the calm light of reason on it. It can not be defended.

Let me ask about the moral question. If I go out and work as a blacksmith and am a good one and earn $10 a day and some other man comes along and is a poor blacksmith and earns only $5 a day, what right has the Government to come along and tell me that the rewards of my work and my ingenuity and my industry shall be taken away from me and given over to the fellow who does not know how?

The principle is precisely the same. How can it be defended? I ask the Senator from Iowa right here and now this question: How does he defend the taking of the earnings of the well-managed roads and giving them to the ill-managed roads?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I am delighted to yield to the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not one of those who think that every road that fails to earn a fair return upon the value of its property is an ill-managed road. That is a fundamental error into which the Senator from Tennessee has fallen. He has just mentioned in high terms the Pennsylvania Railroad and the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. Why does not the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad earn the same rate of return upon the value of its property that the Pennsylvania Railroad does? They are equally well managed, I assume; and I venture to say that nine-tenths, yes, nineteen-twentieths, of the railroads of the United States are managed with as high skill as can be brought to the service of transportation. The difference between the earning power of railroad companies may sometimes, it is true, be attributed to difference in the ability of managers, but that is a very rare case. The difference is usually attributable to the conditions over which neither road has any control whatsoever. I need not mention what they are, for they are obvious to every man who thinks about the subject a moment.

Now, I come to answer the question propounded to me by the Senator from Tennessee, and I am glad to answer it. I have answered it about eight or ten times since I began this debate, but the Senator and I agree that, in order to reach the full body of the Senate, it is necessary to repeat about fifty times everything that is material in a discussion.

I will tell the Senator why I defend this legislation. Suppose we had only one railroad and it was well managed; suppose its investment is $1,000,000—I use those figures merely for illustration, of course—and it is entitled to earn a fair return upon that investment of $1,000,000.

The Senator from Tennessee, when he compares the railroad company with the man who goes out as a woodchopper or blacksmith betrays his real view of public-utility enterprises. He does not see any difference between the blacksmith and the public utility. I see a very great difference between them; and I think that is the real point of departure between the Senator from Tennessee and myself. I believe in regulating public utilities; I believe in restricting their right to earn revenues or returns to a fair return upon the money which they invest in the business.

Mr. McKELLAR. There is no difference between the Senator from Iowa and myself on that subject.

Mr. CUMMINS. There must be a difference——

Mr. McKELLAR. There is none whatever.

Mr. CUMMINS. Because the Senator from Tennessee has just asked what right has the Government to take money from one blacksmith and give it to another. I assume that the Senator from Tennessee thought that was a fair illustration or else he would not have used it. I reply instantly that the Government has no right, either moral or legal, to take the money from one blacksmith and give it to another.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thought the Senator would answer the question in that way.

Mr. CUMMINS. But a corporation which is organized as a public utility or engaged in a public business is subject to very different control. If the Senator from Tennessee had listened to the argument made by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] he would have seen the basis of that control—namely, the company devotes its property, it dedicates it, to a public business in which the public has that interest which gives it the legitimate right to control and restrict the return upon the investment.

Mr. McKELLAR. There is no difference in the world between the Senator and me on that subject.

Mr. CUMMINS. There is no difference between us there?

Mr. McKELLAR. None whatever; but that is not my question. If the Senator will permit me just a moment——

Mr. CUMMINS. I should like to answer the Senator's question.

Mr. McKELLAR. Just one word. That is not my question. My question is, What moral or any other kind of right has the United States Government, under the terms of the bill, to take away the earnings of any of its citizens, whether a corporation or an individual, and give them to another of its citizens who is confessedly less deserving?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am about to answer that question.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is a question I desire to have answered.

Mr. CUMMINS. But it is necessary to precede the answer by what I have already suggested in order to present a fair perspective. If there were but one railroad and there were but one community and the one railroad served but the one community, I assume the Senator from Tennessee would not dispute the right or the propriety on the part of the Government to fix rates that would provide a fair return upon the investment?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, right there let me differ from the Senator. I think that the only power the Government can vest in the Interstate Commerce Commission, even under the illustration cited by the Senator, is to fix a fair and reasonable compensation to the carrier for the service it performs for the public.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely; and when the Interstate Commerce Commission comes to decide what is a fair and reasonable compensation or fair and reasonable rates—and the word "rates" may be used instead of the word "compensation"—how does the Interstate Commerce Commission reach a conclusion upon that point?

Mr. McKELLAR. It does so——

Mr. CUMMINS. Just a moment. It reaches the conclusion by an inquiry into the expenses of operation, the cost of maintenance, the amount of capital invested, or the value of the property, and then it attempts to establish rates that will pay the cost of maintenance and operation and make a fair return upon the value of the property or the investment, as the case may be. That is the way it proceeds.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no, Mr. President; my proposition is that the Interstate Commerce Commission in fixing the rates in the case cited by the Senator is not concerned as to the effect they are going to have; it must fix the rates as a reasonable compensation for the service rendered. I tried to show a little while ago that under the Constitution of the United States the Congress has no power to delegate authority to the Interstate Commerce Commission to tax the public for the benefit of a corporation by permitting that corporation to make money.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the Supreme Court has decided, I think, in a score of cases the real standard to be observed by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. McKELLAR. As a rule of computing compensation, but not as a method of computing taxation for the benefit of another individual or corporation concerned.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not understand quite the distinction between compensation and taxation.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am trying to explain that from my viewpoint.

Mr. CUMMINS. But the Senator asked me a question, and I am endeavoring to answer it. I have answered it up to one point, assuming that we have a single corporation, and I am saying——

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I hope the Senator will not get impatient with me, because I can not answer his question except in my own way.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will not the Senator fix as a basis of his illustration not a single corporation but competitive corporations, for we are not dealing with single corporations, but are dealing with competitive corporations?

Mr. CUMMINS. I will do that in a few moments; but I think that by dealing with a single corporation the Senator will be better able to understand my view. I have already stated the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission or any regulating tribunal in fixing rates for a single corporation. Now, we come to the many corporations which we must regulate and control, and we find that 4, 5, or a dozen—I care not how many they may be—competitive carriers which must do business at the same rate or disappear, for all competitive carriers must carry traffic at the same rate or substantially so.

We find that certain rates would give to the single carrier of which I have spoken a fair return upon its investment or upon the value of its property, but the same rates applied to the business of the remaining half-dozen carriers would not give to them a fair return upon the value of their property. We want to maintain these carriers; the public interest requires that they be maintained, and so we are driven to this necessity: The Interstate Commerce Commission must raise the rates so that they will provide a fair return upon the value of the property of the remaining carriers. Then they are lifted so high that the single carrier of which I have spoken will receive an excessive return. I do not want to put that burden upon the American people, and therefore we are trying here as best we can before the consolidation which I think is necessary shall be brought about, to avoid putting that burden upon the people by lifting the rates or the net operating income just a trifle above those in existence before the Government took possession, and then saying that if upon those increased rates any company earns more than 6 per cent, the excess it receives as trustee; it does not receive it as its absolute property but receives it under an obligation to pay it to the Government for such disposition as the Government may desire to make of it.

I am sorry I have taken so long to answer the question, and I am very much obliged to the Senator from Tennessee for yielding.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the answer is satisfactory to the Senator, I am glad it is so. I am frank to say that I do not think the Senator has answered the question which I put. It was simply how he defended taking away the honest earnings of a railroad that was giving to the public a splendid service and turning a portion of those earnings over to railroads that were not giving the public good service; and I do not think, with all due respect, that the Senator has answered that question.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I should like to ask one question in connection with the statement just made by the chairman of the committee. As I understood the chairman of the committee, he stated that it was impracticable to allow a rate for one company different from the rate of another. I should like a little more information on that subject, if I may, and if it will not take too much time.

Mr. McKELLAR. May I ask the Senator to defer that for a little while?

Mr. CUMMINS. I will defer it, but I am sure a single word will answer it.

Mr. McKELLAR. All right.

Mr. CUMMINS. I said "in competitive business."

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Oh, yes; I did not catch the word "competitive."

Mr. CUMMINS. And of course 85 per cent of the business of any given company of any magnitude is competitive business.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I did not catch the word "competitive."

Mr. McKELLAR. Now, Mr. President, as I understand this bill, it directs the Interstate Commerce Commission in the ensuing year of 1920 to fix the valuations and raise the rates—for that is what it means—to a point where the railroads may be paid net 5½ per cent on their capital invested.

Mr. DIAL. On the value of the property.

Mr. McKELLAR. On the value of the property, which is their invested capital, of course. Then I read this provision:

> That in the year 1925 and in every fifth year thereafter the commission shall determine what, under the conditions then existing, constitutes a fair return upon the value of such railway property, and it may increase or decrease the 5½ per cent basis herein prescribed, or the basis for the determination of excess income.

In other words, as I understand the bill, every five years the Interstate Commerce Commission must make a new valuation and a new assessment of taxation on the public in order to fix this reasonable return.

Now, let us assume that they perform their duty in 1920 at the present high prices—high prices of labor, high prices of material, high prices of everything—and in the year 1922 or 1923 prices fall. They are unable, according to the terms of this bill, to refix the charges until 1925. If so, there is a very great likelihood that an immense amount of money will be collected and turned over to the railroads, by this method of taxation, that ought not to be turned over to them.

Mr. CUMMINS. No; Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Tennessee, I think, is wrong with regard to that construction of the bill. There is nothing in the provision which he read with respect to valuation. The power given to the commission in that paragraph is to change the basis. That is, they can reduce or increase the 5½ per cent; they can reduce or increase the standard of 6 per cent for determining excess income; but if the value of railway property shall decrease within the next year the Interstate Commerce Commission has full authority to put its 5½ per cent basis upon that valuation. It can do that at any time.

Mr. McKELLAR. The wording of the act does not say that; and I think the Senator will find that whenever this bill passes just as it is, and it is attempted by the commission to decrease the rates or to decrease the valuation except at the five-year intervals, it will be replied that the statute has fixed the five-year period of assessment of rates and of values.

Mr. CUMMINS. If it were so replied the commission could instantly say that it was an unsound position.

Mr. McKELLAR. It depends on the law. This law directs the commission what to do, and it must comply with the law.

Now I will pass to something else.

Mr. President, I have been concerned about the public in this legislation. I do not know where the public comes in. There is very little difference in principle between this bill and the Plumb plan. There is just one general difference between the Plumb plan and the Cummins plan.

[At this point Mr. McKELLAR yielded the floor for the day.]

Friday, December 12, 1919.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, when I discontinued yesterday afternoon I had referred to the similarity between the bill now before the Senate, known as the Cummins bill, and the Plumb plan, dealing with the same subject. There is not very much difference between plans. One is a little more direct than the other, but both are paternal and both bolshevistic. Under the Plumb plan the United States virtually buys the railroads and turns them over to the railway brotherhoods for operation. That is substantially the Plumb plan. Under the Cummins plan the Government becomes virtually responsible for the value of the railroads. It does not buy them outright, but makes them all good—it makes the bad good and the good bad—and then turns them over to certain of the railroad owners to be run through the political board of five to be appointed. In neither bill is the public protected; in neither bill are the public interests safeguarded.

In the one there is a guaranty that the earning capacity of the railroads to their owners shall be without question, while under the Plumb plan management and control for the benefit of those who actually operate them is guaranteed and at the same time pays the owners a big price for them. In principle they are identically the same; the Government becomes responsible for the roads in either event, in one case paying for them outright and in the other becoming guarantor of them.

The pending measure is about as nearly a Government-control bill or a Government-ownership bill as can possibly be arranged without providing actually for Government ownership. We may as well face the fact about it. If we pass this bill we are going to have all the elements of Government ownership without any of its benefits. Why do I say that? Mr. President, the railroads to-day are earning their own way under the present rates. They have been doing that since August last, I am informed. Do not let us forget that. Under Government control and operation they have been making money for the last three months, and are several million dollars to the good each month.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. In just a moment I will yield to the Senator. They are earning their own way now under present rates. No man will dispute the fact that if the railroads are returned to their owners under the Cummins plan there must be an increase in rates. What excuse can Congress give for turning them back with the consequent necessity of increasing rates 25 to 50 per cent, when under present conditions the railroads are now paying their owners 5 per cent on the investment and earning their own way? If we have no choice between the Cummins plan and the Plumb plan it is the part of wisdom and the part of good sense, it seems to me, to pursue the plan that we already have by which the roads are sustaining themselves under the present rates. Surely it will be not to the interest of the shipping public and of the business public in this country to adopt another plan, which is virtually a plan of Government ownership and control, and which will require an immediate increase in the rates.

I now yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator has just stated that the roads now and for a short time past——

Mr. McKELLAR. Since August, I believe.

Mr. KING. Since August have been making a profit. My information is quite the reverse. It is possible the books may show some profit; but I assert that the Railroad Administration is not maintaining the roads as they ought to be maintained and that they are taking money from the maintenance column and crediting it to profit. I know of roads in this country that have deteriorated very greatly under the Railroad Administration; and I have no doubt in the world that the statement of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] is true that there will be claims against the Government for millions and tens of millions of dollars, which it may take years to decide, for unliquidated damages because of deterioration of the roads through the maladministration of the Railroad Administration of the country.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no possible doubt about claims being presented by the railroad companies; they are certain to come in. That is the inevitable consequence of the policy that we have pursued, and just as inevitably is it the consequence of the proposed policy in dealing with the railroads. What we ought to do is to restore the railroads to their owners and let them work out their own programs of dealing with their own property. It is not the duty of the Government to furnish beforehand a program and a guaranty of the program, whether a guaranty is to the best business interests of the country or not. Those who believe in the principles of the Adamson law may well be for the Cummins proposal; those who believe in the Plumb plan may well be for the Cummins proposal. It just needs a little diplomacy to make the Plumb plan almost identical with the Cummins plan. That brings me to the so-called provisions for arbitration in this bill.

The board of transportation created by the bill passes upon disputes between the labor in the employ of the railroads and the employers. It is true that there is a committee appointed by the railroad transportation board, a committee of eight, four of whom shall represent labor and four of whom shall represent the carriers. If they differ the matter is to be certified to the transportation board that controls the carriers, and three out of the five members of this transportation board will settle the difficulty. Why, no one can be deceived by that. That is not arbitration. That is submitting the question to the representatives of the railroad owners, this transportation board of five, and their decision is final.

I say that there is no difference between this plan and the Plumb plan. Why? Well, surely under the Plumb plan the railroad operatives have to deal with the railroad owners. It is just as simple under the Cummins plan. Here comes a request upon the part of the operatives for, say, a $50,000,000 increase. It comes to the board. Well, now, what are the members of the board going to do? Are they going to decide that question against the operatives and disrupt the whole railway system, which is now by this bill combined into one? Are they going to do that? Which will be the line of least resistance? Which will be the easiest horn of the dilemma for them to take? Why, it is as simple as it can be. They will do just what Congress did in the case of the Adamson law. They will say, "All right, we will just let your wages be raised $50,000,000, and we will certify the matter to the Interstate Commerce Commission and let them raise the rates on the public to pay for it."

They are not interested in whether the wages are high or low. They have no interest in the question of wages any more. What interest have they in the wages? None whatever. Why? Because they are guaranteed their 5½ per cent, whatever the wages may be. The 5½ per cent is net.

I believe in the arbitration of differences between employees and employers, especially in the case of the railroads. They ought to be arbitrated; there ought not to be a tie-up of the country's business; but there ought to be a fair, just, and comprehensive arbitration of the differences by an impartial body, and not by the body that runs the railroads. This political board, three of one party and two of another, necessarily political—it can not be anything else but political—is not the proper body to pass finally upon the matter of arbitration of differences between railroad employees and their employers.

Mr. STANLEY. What board does the Senator refer to?

Mr. McKELLAR. The transportation board.

Mr. STANLEY. That is the board of appeal.

Mr. McKELLAR. Well, of course it is; but surely with the board that does the examining and makes the report in the first instance, being composed of four representatives of the labor unions and four representatives of the carriers, the Senator can not for a moment think that that body has any authority in the premises. The only board that has any authority in the premises is the transportation board.

As I said before, I believe in arbitration. I am rather inclined to think that I would consent to some proposition like this if the final power of arbitration were placed in the Interstate Commerce Commission, a representative of the Government, that has nothing to do with the railroads except the fixing of rates as laid down in this bill, and a body that is known to be fair.

Mr. STANLEY and Mr. NORRIS addressed the Chair.

Mr. McKELLAR. Just a moment. I would much prefer it; but as it is now, the final control being vested in a political body of five men, three of whom are to belong to one political party and two of whom must necessarily belong to the other political party, I am unwilling to give my approval to that system of arbitration where that board is the manager and controller of the entire railroad system.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator from Nebraska excuse me a minute? The Senator from Kentucky first asked to interrupt.

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, as I gather from the Senator's statement he is under the impression that the board of wages and working conditions, being composed of two representatives from the railroads and a like number from the labor organizations and crafts, and not being an odd number of men, will necessarily fail of agreement, and that all of these disputes will finally be determined by the transportation board.

Mr. McKELLAR. All of them that amount to anything.

Mr. STANLEY. I am inclined to concur with the Senator in that opinion.

Mr. McKELLAR. Why, of course.

Mr. STANLEY. One other question right at that point. If the crafts and labor unions name expert representatives, and the railroad organizations name capable and loyal representatives, and this alleged board of conciliation discusses the matter for five or six months, does the Senator think that will make it any easier for the board with final jurisdiction to settle the matter than if it came to them ab initio?

Mr. McKELLAR. It is possible that publicity may have some effect on the final decision of the transportation board. Publicity always has an effect; and this committee, composed of four representatives of labor unions and four representatives of the carriers, unquestionably ought to do some good in the matter of publicity only; but, so far as the ultimate right is concerned, they have none. But it is wrong in principle for another reason.

Mr. STANLEY. May I ask another question right at that point?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. STANLEY. In that event, does not the Senator think it would be better to adopt the principle which has worked, while this never has worked—the Canadian system of conciliation? There boards similar to those the Senator has described—nonpartisan, disinterested boards—have the right to hear these labor disputes. Strikes are forbidden while the disputes are pending before these boards. When the determination is made, whether for or against the labor organization, a copy of the report is furnished to both sides; it is furnished to the leading labor journal of Canada; it is furnished to certain other channels of publicity; it is furnished to any newspaper requiring it; it is furnished to any person, any private citizen interested in the matter, at the absolute cost of publication. That character of publicity has tended to bring this powerful force of public opinion to bear upon the party that is obdurate or in the wrong; but there is no such provision in this bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. None at all. This is based on an entirely different principle. I am rather inclined to think that a provision along the line suggested by the Senator, such as Canada has—and it is well known—is right and proper. I believe the same principle has been put into a bill that has been introduced here by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]. But even then, with limitations, this bill recognizes the rights of the labor unions and of the railroads, but it does not recognize the right to be represented of the great body of labor that is not in the labor unions. I am not advised as to just how many employees of the railroads are not incorporated in the labor unions, but there are a great many. There are thousands of clerks who labor with their hands just like any others who are not members. I venture to say that quite a respectful number of employees of the railroads are not connected with labor unions at all. They should have representation in this arbitration body, in any body of arbitration or conciliation; and surely neither class of the employees should be compelled to submit their differences to the five men that are given the control and the absolute management of these railroads. I do not think it is fair in principle, and I know it will not work in practice. It will cause disturbances from the very beginning and result in the only possible method of settling those controversies, namely, that the board will certify the increase asked for by the employees, and the Interstate Commerce Commission will be compelled, under the mandatory provisions of this bill, to transfer the burden to the people of the United States. Now, that is my judgment.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. STANLEY. The Senator has been very patient, and I hesitate to interrupt him again——

Mr. McKELLAR. That is all right.

Mr. STANLEY. But while the Senator is on that subject in his very elaborate and able argument, I wish to call his attention to this matter, because I presume he has given it careful study:

The excellence and power of the Interstate Commerce Commission has been due in great measure to the fact that it has been free from political alliances and free from the suspicion of outside influences. Now, if you create this transportation board, which will assume powers hitherto exercised by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and clothe it with this power, it will be the most powerful organization, outside of the Government, in the United States. It will hold in its hands the industrial life and the hopes of the labor unions and of the railroad companies. This power to fix wages is an enormous power. Both sides of the controversy will necessarily be interested in the personnel of this board. Has the Senator considered any way by which such a board can be appointed whereby it will not be selected either at the instance of the labor movement or at the instance of the owners of these transportation systems?

Mr. McKELLAR. No, Mr. President. I realize the force of the suggestion made by the Senator from Kentucky; but neither I nor any other man, I believe, can arrange any such board that will give any such guaranty. The reason why I said that I should be inclined to support an amendment substituting the Interstate Commerce Commission for the transportation board as the final arbitrator in this matter, if we can not secure a better method of arbitration, is because of the very fact the Senator mentions, that it is well known that the Interstate Commerce Commission is not controlled by the railroads on the one side or the union or nonunion men on the other; but that as a whole that body has the confidence of all fair-minded men in this country; and having such a board already in existence, having the confidence, as I believe, of both sides, and having the confidence of the people of this country that it will do what is fair and square and just and reasonable, if we are to have final arbitration we had better leave it to that body which has done so well in the past.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the statement just made by the Senator from Tennessee presents a question on which there may be very fair difference of opinion. I think that I can recognize the matters within the range of fair differences, and I readily grant that that is a subject upon which men may differ. But if that is true, the Senator from Tennessee could very easily test the sentiment of the Senate and the judgment of the Senate upon the question by offering an amendment that would transfer that jurisdiction to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

However, I want to call the Senator's attention to what seems to be a very strange delusion upon his part. The relation of the transportation board to the railroads will not be any more intimate than the present relation of the Interstate Commerce Commission to the railroads. They occupy exactly the same attitude toward the railroads as a regulating, governing body. If a President of the United States were to select as members of the transportation board either incompetent or dishonest men, men who did not understand that it was their duty to protect the public within the limits of the law, then all the consequences suggested by the Senator from Tennessee would follow. But this bill is composed upon the theory that the President of the United States will select for a transportation board men who are just as competent, men who are just as impartial, men who are just as well disposed toward the public interest as the Interstate Commerce Commission can possibly be; and one is no more a political body than the other, because they both come from the same appointing power.

I hope the Senator from Tennessee will not make up his mind with regard to the bill upon the theory that we are to have a President who will appoint a transportation board simply to do the bidding of the railroad companies.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, in so far as the substitution of the Interstate Commerce Commission for the board is concerned, I think it would be a very great improvement, and I had intended to offer an amendment to that effect. As to the other matter, that brings me to a point where I desire to discuss for a few minutes this transportation board.

We have lately had a very apt illustration of the double board system in the United States. It has cost the American people probably a billion dollars to have a double-barreled board doing the same thing in another department of Government. I refer, of course, to the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation. Instead of establishing one board, in the stress of war times the United States Congress established two boards, with varying jurisdictions and with doubtful lines of demarcation between them, just as in these two boards. It was a failure from almost the beginning. The president of one board immediately became unfriendly, from the standpoint of service, at any rate, with the president of the other board. Their jurisdictions were so interwoven that one of the boards claimed jurisdiction of one subject and the other board of the same subject; and the differences between these two boards got to be almost, if not quite, a public scandal, to the immense loss of the American people.

With that sort of an experience before us, why should we, as reasonably sensible people, want to establish two other boards of like kind to handle the railways? The President was forced to compel a consolidation of the work of those two boards before it was over with, such was the scandal in reference to it, such were the differences. Now, the committee in this case comes right along and gives us another such proposal. I want to read just a moment from the act by which the transportation board is established:

There is hereby created a transportation board, which shall be composed of five members, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate—

And so forth.

The chairman shall be selected—

And so forth.

Each member of the board shall receive a salary of $12,000 per year, and be provided with suitable offices in Washington and elsewhere.

Now, listen to this:

And shall have power to employ such assistants, clerks, stenographers, attorneys, and experts as may be necessary to perform the duties hereby imposed upon it, and the compensations of such assistants, clerks, stenographers, attorneys, and experts shall be fixed by the board—

And so forth.

Then it goes on and transfers a very large proportion, probably the greatest proportion, of the business of the Interstate Commerce Commission to this board of five members. What is the object? What is the purpose? Why should we have two boards to run the same business with equal jurisdiction? Why should there be such questions raised? We found that it was a failure in the past in regard to the shipping interests of the country. Why should we think it would be a success if applied to the railroads? What is the underlying purpose of it? I do not know, and I make no charges about it. But it is remarkably peculiar that to a transportation board of this kind shall be turned over so large a part of the duties of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Why should there be set up this other large and expensive organization, with its thousands of employees and its millions of overhead expenses? We will be soon building expensive buildings for its separate use, and the taxes upon the people will be even more enormous. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] is a member of the Interstate Commerce Committee. Could he tell us why this board was established?

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, as far as that provision of the bill is concerned, I am not of the opinion that there is a necessary conflict of authority or in any material degree a duplication of work. The taking over of the railroads by private enterprise and the reorganization of the whole system will necessitate an additional amount of labor that I believe it is rather generally admitted would entail upon the Interstate Commerce Commission, as at present constituted, greater labors than it is humanly possible for that very overworked and very busy body to perform. For that reason, as the Senator knows, the House bill has increased the personnel of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The Interstate Commerce Commission performs two distinct classes of duty. One might be called judicial in a way. In fact, it was contended for many years, as the Senator well knows, that the fixing of rates and the like was a judicial function that Congress could not delegate to a commission. Then they perform other duties that are technical and ministerial, for instance, the enforcement of the safety-appliance act and the car-service act.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand that.

Mr. STANLEY. And things of that kind, which require a technical knowledge of railroading, but are entirely different from the duties involved in the fixing of rates, and in the determination of capitalization, and in this bill, and duties of that character have been turned over to this board. They have separated by a very natural process the two distinct and entirely different businesses now conducted by the Interstate Commerce Commission, all of which require the highest technical skill and a knowledge of this very intricate business, and they allow the Interstate Commerce Commission to exercise a simpler although a more extended authority, and allow this board to perform other duties that are essentially different.

That part of this bill is not, to my mind, especially objectionable, if objectionable at all. But to make either one of these boards a court of final jurisdiction in labor disputes is to involve it in all character of troubles, and to subject it to every character of criticism, for there is no way to decide labor disputes without making one side or the other mad.

Mr. McKELLAR. I agree with the Senator in his last conclusion, and I disagree with him, of course, in his argument about the necessity of these two boards. I know that in the Military Affairs Committee during the war, when we had an officer whom we wanted to displace by reason of his inefficiency, and we wanted to do it diplomatically, we promoted him so as to get rid of him, and put a good man in his place. I was wondering whether the Committee on Interstate Commerce was not pursuing some such policy here, whether they did not want to get rid of the Interstate Commerce Commission, as far as possible, and to put something else in its place. Whether that was the purpose or not, I can not say. But there is one thing I do say, that whatever the purpose, any attempt to take away the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission or to destroy its influence in this country is improper and wrong, and not a sound public policy, and will not be a popular policy in this country.

The Interstate Commerce Commission was organized in 1887 after a tremendous fight; but it has so conducted itself, taking it by and large, that it has been a benefit. I do not mean to say errors have not been committed; of course there have been errors committed. No board can get along without committing errors any more than no man can get along without committing errors. A man is of no account unless he does commit them sometimes; but for the most part it has been a commission that has been of great benefit to the transportation interests of the country, to the shipping public, to the commercial world, and to the railroads themselves. In many instances it has been the very bulwark of the rights and the interests of the railroads themselves. Why dispose of it by giving this sugar-coated pill? Why dispose of the great body of its functions? Why divide its jurisdiction? Why take away its power? What is the reason for doing so? I think the reason is shown just a little later.

Senators, this bill provides for one of the most gigantic trusts that was ever created in the history of the world. It provides for the consolidation, within a period of seven years, of the entire railroad interests of this country under the supervision of this one board. It provides for the consolidation of probably $20,000,000,000 worth of property.

Mr. FLETCHER. These interstate roads?

Mr. McKELLAR. These interstate and intrastate roads, because it combines them all, whether intrastate or interstate. Not only that, at first it starts out by what might be called what President McKinley, I believe, called many years ago "benevolent assimilation."

It provides that there should be not less than 20 railroad corporations and not more than 35. They are all absolutely under the control of the transportation board. They are controlled and managed as one institution, as one great railroad. I say that is a wrong policy and ought not to be permitted. No other railroad corporation in the country can be organized without the consent of the board. Not a foot of railroad can be built without the license and privilege to do so is extended to the person or the corporation by the board.

In the great part of our country that is undeveloped, so far as railroads are concerned, there ought to be new railroads built, but can they be built? If there are three out of the five members of the board here in Washington, or wherever they have their offices, who say that no railroad corporation can be formed in Tennessee or in Kentucky or in Texas or in Arizona or in Minnesota or in Wisconsin or elsewhere where they are needed, then, however great the necessity of those localities for a railroad, the corporation can not be organized and the railroad can not be built unless this political board so decrees.

The bill provides that every enterprise of that kind may be crushed out by the board if it is to the interest of the general railroad situation in the country. That is too much power to grant any board. It is contrary to American institutions and American policies. It ought not to be permitted, and I, for one, am not going to vote for it.

Railroad corporations now have very large powers. They are given even greater powers under the bill. All railroads that are constructed and existing at all are to be chartered by the United States Government under the provisions of the bill. A State government has no right to charter a railroad under its laws and constitution. The right of a State legislature directly or indirectly to give corporate existence to an enterprise to build a railroad is taken away from it by the bill. Not only that, but under the terms of the bill a railroad company, if it gets the permission of three of the five members of the transportation board, can run a double-track railroad right down the center of Salt Lake City, I will say to the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]; they can run a double-track railroad right through the principal streets of Jacksonville, Fla., I will say to the Senator from Florida, or of Memphis, Tenn. They have a right under the enormous power given them under the provisions of the bill to run a double-track railroad down Fifth Avenue in New York City, if it is to their interest to do so, and if they can get the permission of three members of the transportation board, by paying fair and just compensation.

I do not know how it is in other States, but in my State the Supreme Court of Tennessee has held—and I think it was an opinion that was delivered by my colleague [Mr. SHIELDS] when he was on the bench—that the resting places of the dead were sacred, and that a railroad could not run its tracks through a graveyard. That decision and every other law of like kind is set aside by the provisions of the bill. Listen to it:

Specific power is given to enter into any State or Territory of the United States in which there are lines of railroad of the system which it owns or into which extensions may be authorized and transact therein the business of a common carrier of passengers and freight without respect to the assent or dissent of any such State or Territory.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. Just one moment. Under the power granted by the provisions of the bill the homes or the streets of the living and the resting places of the dead can be desecrated by any railroad that gets the permission of three of the five members of the transportation board, and they can do it without regard to the people themselves first, to the local authorities, to the county authorities, or to the State authorities. All power is given them to go and take what they see fit. If they want to put railroads directly through the various cities of the country because it will be to their interest, a majority of the transportation board clothed with that power have the right to grant it, regardless of State law.

I now yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I was about to suggest to the Senator from Tennessee that I am inclined to think the view expressed by him as to the power of the board to determine the termini and the routes of railroads is correct; but, of course, it would be subject to the constitutional limitation that the property must be paid for, because it is taken for a public purpose.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, of course.

Mr. FLETCHER. Reasonable compensation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. KING. I am not sure, if the Senator will pardon me further, whether under the bill they would invoke the laws of the State as the modus operandi of ascertaining damages and being put into possession, or whether it would call for some act of Congress to determine that question, or whether it would be left to the whim and caprice of the board itself.

Mr. McKELLAR. When we pass the bill we will have passed a law which authorizes the railroad companies to do that. For instance, my home city of Memphis, Tenn., is built right along the bank of the river where what is known as Main Street, the principal street of the city, runs 4 miles north and south. Manifestly it would be to the advantage of a railroad company to have one or more lines of railway along that street through the city. If they want to use it they can take it under the provisions of this bill without let or hindrance. The fact that it may have been turned over to another use—a street car use or to the public under the eminent domain for use as streets or any other fact in connection with it—may be overridden by three of the five members of the transportation board. They have the unqualified right to go into any State and take what they want. That applies to every State in the Union, and I say that it is too much power to give this board or any other board.

Mr. GAY. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. GAY. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Tennessee, while he is speaking of the situation along the water front of the city of Memphis, whether the city control the water front and the dock facilities and whether they have any belt railroad along the river? Does the city of Memphis itself own the dock facilities there and the terminals and is there a belt railroad there?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; there is a belt railroad, and the city either now owns or is in the act of purchasing the dock facilities. But the railroad chartered under this bill can come along and take the belt railroad and the dock facilities under the provisions of the bill. They do not have to ask anybody about it except the transportation board. We have a perfect right to legislate on all features of interstate commerce, and a law enacted by Congress on that subject is paramount to any other law. Armed with the opinion or license of three members of the transportation board they have a perfect right to go into any State, into any community, into any city, either where the living or the dead rest, and take what they desire.

Mr. GAY. I desire to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that I have introduced an amendment to the bill in regard to control of the terminal facilities owned by the State or any subdivision thereof. I believe it is in line with the views he expresses.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, I shall be for the Senator's amendment, but this whole bill should be defeated. I want to say to the Senator that if he will carefully examine, as I know he either has or will, the terms of the bill, he will find it is filled with just this kind of power, that means the upsetting of business and local conditions in every State and in every city of the Union. It is an absolute departure from all precedent. All the powers of a paternalistic government are centered in a transportation board of five men, which board, in effect, supersedes and is superior to the Interstate Commerce Commission in the management and control and supervision of railroad affairs.

What is the reason for that? What is the reason for these vast powers? Our country has grown splendidly under the present system. While the European war was going on railroads have not multiplied in the United States, but in normal times they multiply and do the business of the country and do it well. Our country is prospering as never before. What is the reason for forming this gigantic monopoly and putting it in the hands of three men to run ruthlessly over the people of the country where they will?

I do not know how Senators are going to defend the powers granted to railroads or to the transportation board when they go back home and are confronted with the proposition that they have yielded to the railroads all rights to go into their cities and into their States and take whatever they may desire, only having to pay a reasonable compensation therefor under the Constitution.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I ask the Senator from Tennessee whether he is certain that the action would not be based upon the recommendation of the board and to have the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission? In a good many of the clauses, particularly on page 48, section 9, dealing with the subject of physical property, it is provided—

That neither the physical property nor the securities of another corporation already engaged as a common carrier shall be acquired through the powers of eminent domain except upon the recommendation of the board and approval of the commission.

Mr. McKELLAR. That refers to another thing entirely. If the Senator will examine it he will find that it refers to the consolidation of railroads. All the railroads are required to be consolidated within seven years. If they do not do it voluntarily, if the trust does not benevolently assimilate them within seven years, then the Government comes along and forcibly consolidates them and puts them into this gigantic trust. There can not be any question about that. If the Senator will read paragraph 5 of section 21 of the bill, on page 46, he will see that the language is clear and unmistakable. The power is perfect, and we have the perfect power to grant it if we desire to do so. It is not unconstitutional. It is directly in line with the Constitution. There can be no doubt about our authority to do just what is authorized in the bill or to grant to the railroad corporations the right to do just what is authorized in the bill.

Fifth. To enter any State or Territory of the United States in which there are lines of railway of the system which it owns or into which extensions may be authorized and transact therein the business of a common carrier or passengers and freight—

Not of passengers alone, but of freight also—without respect to the assent or dissent of any such State or Territory.

Of course, as we all know, that includes every subdivision of the State. It is a complete, arbitrary power. I am not a prophet, but if we enact it into law I desire to say that we shall all hear from it not once but frequently in the future from our various constituents.

I come now to another provision of the bill which is known as the long-and-short-haul feature. We all recognize that for freight which is hauled a longer distance or for passengers that are hauled a longer distance the railroads should have a greater pay, other things being equal; but there has been built up in this country a system of rate making, and there are certain physical conditions in the country that make it necessary that the principle of the long and short haul should at times be modified. The Interstate Commerce Commission, as it is, now has the right and power to enforce the long-and-short-haul policy; it does not need any other power; it does not need any other direction. As now constituted, it is already enforcing that provision in proper cases. This power ought not to be in this bill; it ought to be left to the Interstate Commerce Commission to do what is fair and right and just and reasonable in the premises. I think there is where the power ought to be left. There are many inequalities that ought to be remedied. There are some in my own State. There are localities in my own State where there are gross inequalities. Some of the inland cities of Tennessee like Jackson are sufferers from discriminating rates; but the Interstate Commerce Commission can and will remedy these discriminations.

Section 43 of the bill does away with the State railroad commissions.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFICER (Mr. CAPPER in the chair). Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. In order that everybody may understand precisely the change that is made in section 4 of the interstate commerce act, I think I ought to say, if the Senator will allow me——

Mr. McKELLAR. I did not go into that, for I do not think it is of a great deal of importance, one way or the other, but I think probably the matter ought to be left entirely to the discretion of the Interstate Commerce Commission. However, I shall be very glad to have the Senator from Iowa explain the effect of the provision.

Mr. CUMMINS. If the Senator will permit me, I think I ought to state just what change is proposed, in that respect, by the pending bill.

At the present time the Interstate Commerce Commission has the power to authorize the road to charge more for a shorter distance than for a longer distance over the same line in the same direction, of course for the same commodity. There is no limit now upon its authority; no guide to the Interstate Commerce Commission in the exercise of that authority. The change that is made in this bill is to provide that the Interstate Commerce Commission may still authorize a higher charge for the shorter haul, but the rate for the longer distance which is less than the rate for the shorter distance must be a compensatory rate. That is the change and the only change. Personally I think we might well have made more changes than that, but it was the opinion of the committee that we ought not to go further than that at this time. I think no one can contend that a railroad carrying commodities over a longer distance should charge less for doing that work than a compensatory rate. That seems to me to be pretty well founded in reason and in justice.

Mr. McKELLAR. Well, there are facts to be taken into consideration in regard to that matter. Take the Seaboard Air Line, as an illustration. That line parallels the Southern and the Alantic coast lines; it has a longer line to Atlanta and to Birmingham than the others. If that were absolutely and unequivocally fixed upon as an unvarying rule of measure of compensation for service the Seaboard Air Line, by which the haul was so much longer, would manifestly get no business to those cities. Questions of that kind and similar questions which may not now be enumerated should be left just where they have been left heretofore—to the sound discretion of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

While I am on the subject of the Seaboard Air Line, by the way, I desire to say that I can understand why some railroads desire to be consolidated with the others and want a 5½ per cent guaranteed rate. Take conditions which existed in the late war—I am speaking wholly from memory—and if I am wrong I hope the Senator from Iowa, who knows the facts, will correct me. There are three virtually parallel lines of railroads to the South—the Atlantic Coast Line, the Southern, and the Seaboard Air Line. The Atlantic Coast Line and the Southern have made large profits during the last several years, while the Seaboard Air Line has not been able to make expenses. The effect of the Senator's bill—and it is a good illustration of its effect—will be to take away the earning capacity of the Southern and the Atlantic Coast Line and to help out the Seaboard Air Line. It will probably make a great deal of worthless stock of the Seaboard Air Line very valuable stock; just how valuable I do not know, for I am not an expert in railroad finance; but the inevitable effect of the bill will be to give value to the Seaboard Air Line that does not exist under present conditions. Why? Because the Southern Railway and the Atlantic Coast Line have built their lines through populous, industrious, and prosperous parts of our country and are reaping the benefit of having done so.

The other line, my understanding is, was built, to a large extent, by speculators through a thinly settled country, and the business is not there. If gentlemen undertake to invest their money in a project of that kind, why should Congress authorize the Interstate Commerce Commission to tax the American people to pay for the mistakes of those gentlemen in building a line of that sort? Surely Congress ought not to be asked to guarantee gambling debts.

Mr. CUMMINS. The reply to that suggestion is that the bill does nothing of the kind. That seems to be the fundamental error into which the Senator from Tennessee has fallen.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator will certainly admit that those three lines will go in one group; that the rates are to be fixed on the average earnings of the various railroad lines composing the group; and that under the very provisions of the bill the excess earnings of the roads that are prospering are taken away from them and loaned to or turned over to the roads that are not prospering in order to help them out. I consider that that is pure bolshevism and communism, and is an improper, unjust, unfair, and un-American policy, and I am not for it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, if the Senator intends that remark to be taken seriously—and I have no doubt he does—will he tell me how much the earnings of the Seaboard Air Line in the southern district—and that is one of the districts into which I presume the Interstate Commerce Commission will divide the country—would be increased by this bill?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; no living human being can tell that; but the bill does this: It puts all the railroads under the management and control of a central board here in Washington, or its subagents, and what this board can do and what it will be its duty to do under this bill is to route freight going South or coming North in such quantities as will keep afloat all the lines; in other words, it will be its imperative duty in the routing of freight and passengers to protect the interests of all the lines. This will be taking from two good roads and giving to one bad one.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator is referring to a different part of the bill entirely.

Mr. McKELLAR. I know that, but there are so many parts of the bill that cover the various matters that they have to be referred to.

Mr. CUMMINS. The part of the bill to which the Senator now refers was prepared by the body of men to which he seems to give his confidence completely, namely, the Interstate Commerce Commission. The bill was prepared by the Interstate Commerce Commission in that respect, and was introduced in the House by Mr. ESCH, and was introduced in the Senate by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE]. I am prepared to defend that proposal anywhere at any time; but it has nothing whatever to do with consolidations or with the features of this bill to which the Senator from Tennessee has been giving his attention.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. Just a moment. I think it has; I differ from the Senator very materially about that. I think we have to consider every provision of this bill—how its various provisions are going to dovetail one into the other, what is going to be the effect on the country, what is going to be the effect of the rates on roads that are not now paying, and how much it is going to affect other roads that are paying. I do not believe in the principle. If the Seaboard Air Line is not making money, it is the fault of the Seaboard Air Line and not the fault of the Government, and it is not the duty of the Government to make that line earn money whether it can or not. If it earns money, it can only earn it by force of law, not by reason of merit under existing conditions.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, so far as this point is concerned, the Seaboard Air Line will have just the same opportunity to earn money that it has heretofore had. There will be no difference in that respect, unless the basis of 5½ per cent upon the aggregate value of all the property in the district shall have the effect of increasing rates. I do not think it will have that effect; I put my judgment against that of the Senator from Tennessee upon that point; but, so far as the earnings of the Seaboard Air Line are concerned, they will be just such as the management of that company can secure through the body of rates which the Senator from Tennessee has just said must be competitive and must be the same, at least to all terminal and competitive points. If any of the lines earn more than 6 per cent or 7 per cent, not one penny of it is to be taken and given to any other line or to any person.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from Tennessee permit me to ask a question?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield first to the Senator from Ohio, who has been desiring to be heard for several minutes.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I merely wish to make a suggestion in confirmation of what the Senator from Iowa has said in discussing the provision with regard to the routing of freight, and so forth. I can fairly state that it has been the judgment of the Interstate Commerce Commission for rather a long while that greater power should be given to the commission in that behalf. As a war measure we gave that power to the Interstate Commerce Commission; and it was largely because of the very beneficial results during the period of the war that these provisions were adopted.

With all due respect, I do not believe that the Senator from Tennessee fully appreciates the very great importance to the country of permitting some governmental body to route freight, particularly during seasons of the year when some railroads have not the capacity to accommodate their business.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. Just one moment. In answer to what the Senator from Ohio says, I think I do appreciate just what is proposed in this bill. It is a bill in every sense to strike down competition in service, to put a premium upon lack of attention to the public's business, to keep afloat the present peculiar policy by which they can treat the public without any consideration and draw a dividend on their investments just the same. For my part I think a bill ought to pass this body that is fair and just to the railroads, but at the same time one that will put them all on their mettle to conduct their operations as economically and as much to the public interest as possible. They should not look to the Government for their earnings. We ought to see to it that the well-managed road and, in fact, every road has the opportunity by prudent, careful management of its business to make money, and when it does make money we ought to permit it to enjoy what it makes. Whenever we proceed upon any other principle we tear down the structure of service to the public. We can only have service to the public by competition. We can not have it by penalizing good service and by putting a premium on poor service, by putting a premium upon poor service such as is done in this bill.

I now yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, may I reply in just one sentence before the Senator from Utah asks his question?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Tennessee has characterized this bill as a bill to destroy competition in service and to penalize the efficient and the well-managed road. That is his conclusion. Of course, I have no way of reaching or overtaking that conclusion, because I do not know upon what he founds it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I found it on the bill as I read it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I want to put my judgment against that of the Senator from Tennessee in another generalization. I say this bill is to increase competition, to render it more effective than it has ever been before, and that it is not a bill to penalize efficient and skillful management; but when efficient and skillful management succeeds in earning more than is a fair return upon the value of its property, then it shall render an account of the excess to the Government. That is my judgment with regard to this bill, and I put it in juxtaposition to the judgment of the Senator from Tennessee. I have no doubt he is entirely sincere in his conclusion. I hope he will grant that I am equally sincere in mine.

Mr. McKELLAR. I not only grant it, but I know that every position that the Senator from Iowa takes in the conduct of this bill and his attitude toward this or any other bill in this body is always characterized by the utmost fidelity to the interests of the Government and the public that he so well serves. My conclusion is not meant to be any criticism whatever of the Senator from Iowa. We differ about the provisions of the bill. We differ about the effect of the language used. Inasmuch as we do differ, however, I believe it will help us to reach a just conclusion if the Senator will answer this question.

This bill fixes the reasonable income at 5½ per cent. Now, let us assume that a railroad running from here to New York or from here to St. Louis, or to both places, is just earning, with all the charges, 5½ per cent. If it earns any more, it will be taken away from it and transferred to this fund.

Mr. CUMMINS. No.

Mr. McKELLAR. Wait just one moment. If it earns any less, it will not make it. What incentive is there to go forward with that railroad, to make its earnings larger, to give better service, so as to attract business to it, if it is to be struck on the one side by taking away its excess earnings and having them transferred to a board or, on the other, by the Interstate Commerce Commission or the transportation board which says, "We will take away a part of your freight that you have built up here; you have built up too big a business, and we are going to take part of it away from you and route that freight along another line"? Thus attacked from both sides and, perhaps, from the rear by the labor unions, that will say, "We want an additional slice of what you are making"—attacked all around—what incentive has that railroad to go forward and give the country a better service?

Mr. CUMMINS. I will answer the Senator's question. In the first place, the railroad which he has in mind is not limited to the 5½ per cent. That is the first answer to his proposition.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not understand the bill, then.

Mr. CUMMINS. That railroad, if it earns 7 per cent, retains 6½ per cent of it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand that, but I was excepting that. I do not want the Senator to make that mistake, because I have assumed that the one-half of 1 per cent for betterments and equipment and all that was taken out and everything like that and that the 5½ per cent is net.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am assuming it, too. That has nothing whatever to do with the earning of the company—the one-half per cent to which the Senator refers. That may or may not be added by the Interstate Commerce Commission, according to its discretion. But we will assume that the commission does not add it, but establishes rates upon a 5½ per cent basis for all the railroads of the district—that is to say, upon the aggregate value of all the railroads of the district. The railroad the Senator has in mind would then proceed to do business. Now, it would need all the skill that it has, all the efficiency which it can employ, we will say, to earn more than 6½ per cent, and it goes forward and earns 7 per cent, we will say—and many of them will. One-half of that above 6 per cent is left with the company. The company has the benefit, then, of one-half of 1 per cent above 6. If it earns 8 per cent, then the company has the benefit of one-half of 1 per cent between 6 and 7 and one-fourth between 7 and 8, and so on.

Mr. McKELLAR. To what figure?

Mr. CUMMINS. It furnishes all the incentive that men can feel to make their properties as efficient and with as high an earning power as possible. I can not conceive that men are going to be inefficient or disregardful of economies if by practicing economies and employing efficiency they can earn more money and keep more money than though they were careless and indifferent with regard to the management of the properties; and, of course, I think most of the railroads of this country have in operation been managed with efficiency always. They have been very criminal in some respects, in capitalization and in exploitation; but with those things the Senator is not now dealing, and I will not enter upon them.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, unfortunately nature has so constituted men and enterprise that they can not just stand still. It is an impossibility for the physical man to reach a place where he stops, and does not progress, and does not go back.

Perhaps unfortunately for some of us, perhaps unfortunately for a theoretical management of certain corporations, that rule of life is absolute—as absolute in corporations as it is in individuals. You have either got to go forward or you go backward. It is a law of nature. There is no such thing as standing still, even for an instant. And so, when it comes to railroads just earning up to the amount specified by law, it is not in the same situation that the Kentucky darky's dram was in.

His old friend and employer, who was supposed to be a very close-fisted man, called him in one morning and said: "Jake, would you like to have a drink?" Jake said he would, and his employer poured out some liquor in a tumbler and gave it to him, and Jake drank it with a good deal of satisfaction. When he got through his employer said, "Jake, did you like that liquor?" "Yes, sah; jes' right—jes' right—jes' right." "Why do you call it 'just right'?" "Well, sah, jes' because it is jes' right, sah—jes' right, sah." "Well, why do you call it 'just right'?" The darky said, "Well, if it had been any wuss, I couldn't have drunk it, and if it had been any better you wouldn't have give it to me; and so it's jes' right." [Laughter.]

Now, unfortunately, in railroading that can not happen. We can not just reach a point where there is neither retrogression nor progression. There is no standing-still point. We have got to go on, if we keep up the service, or we have got to go backward; and when you put a limit on the earnings of a corporation you put a limit upon its service to the public, necessarily.

Mr. CUMMINS. Do I understand from that observation that the Senator from Tennessee is opposed to all regulation that would interfere with the earnings of railway companies?

Mr. McKELLAR. Quite the contrary. I will state to the Senator in just a moment, in concluding what I have to say on this bill, just what I do believe in. Before doing it, however, I want to make my position perfectly plain.

I have no antagonism at all to railroads or to railroad companies. They are absolutely necessary to the prosperity and the well-being of the people of this country. They should be encouraged in every proper way. They should be protected in all of their property rights. They should be encouraged by the Government to render their very best service. At all times they should be treated absolutely fairly by Congress, by the Interstate Commerce Commission, by the State commissions, and by every regulatory power.

I do not believe, I never have believed, in this so-called baiting of the railroads. It is not right. Business could not go along a day in this country without them. They are the great arteries of all business and all commerce. We must protect them in their lawful rights. We must see to it that they get a proper income. There is no desire upon my part in anything that I have said, or any inference that can be drawn from what I have said, that I am opposed to railroads; not at all. They are the builders up of communities, they are the builders up of States. A State full of railroads is a State of prosperity; it is a State of happiness; it is a State of progress; and I say that we ought not to pass any bill that will stop the building of railroads, as this bill does, in my judgment. We ought not to pass any bill that stops enterprise upon the part of the railroads themselves, as this bill does. We ought not to pass any bill that does away with competition in service, as this bill does. We ought not to pass any bill that does away with individual initiative, as this bill does. We ought not to pass any bill that allows all of these splendid corporations to gather together under one head and throttle all other railroad companies that it might be necessary to form in the future, as this bill does. I believe in the railroads. I believe in their necessity and their value, and that is why I am making this statement.

The Senator asked what I would do with them. I have prepared with some care just what I would do with them, and having prepared it with some care, I am going to read it rather than to attempt to state it. My idea of railroad legislation at this time may be set out as follows:

First. Terminate Federal control and restore the railroads to their several owners in a manner by which active competition in service may be restored and maintained.

Second. For the purpose of enabling carriers by railroad subject to the commerce act properly to serve the public during the transition period immediately following the termination of Federal control; provide for new loans to the railroads under the direction of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and with reasonable limitation upon these loans, together with a temporary guaranty of present income for a period not longer than six months, the House bill provision on the subject of loans to the railroads being deemed a wise and proper provision.

I may say in that connection that I doubt the wisdom of a six months' guaranty, but we might let the present rate of 5 per cent continue, say for 90 days, until they can secure these loans and go out and make their own way, as every other citizen goes out and makes his own way. I continue reading:

Third. Give to the Interstate Commerce Commission increased powers, including a supervisory jurisdiction over arbitration of labor troubles; the issuance of railroad securities and the chartering of additional lines, to the end that railroad securities may be stabilized and rendered a safe investment to the public; all dealings of the several railroad corporations with their employees; all subjects arising out of Federal control; refunding the carriers' indebtedness to the United States; and the establishment of minimum as well as maximum rates.

Fourth. Provide that existing rates—

I call special attention to that. The "existing rates," that are now making 5 per cent on the value of these roads, under Government control; not an increase, as provided in this bill, from 25 to 50 per cent, but existing rates. I resume:

Fourth. Provide that existing rates shall be continued with full power vested in the Interstate Commerce Commission to raise or lower them and thereby fix reasonable rates, to the end that both the railroads and the public shall be fairly treated and that each road that is efficiently, economically, and well managed shall be permitted to earn a just and reasonable income, but without Government guaranty.

Also, that railroads rendering the best service to the public and the greatest efficiency in management and operation shall be entitled to make the greatest income and that all railroads shall have and retain such incomes as they may rightfully earn without dividing any portion thereof with the Government or with other less favored railroads.

I say, Mr. President, that if this bill were recommitted to the committee with instructions to prepare a bill along those lines, it would be for the manifest benefit of the American public, and the manifest benefit of the railroads themselves. In turning the railroads back—and we ought to have done it long ago—we should make the terms fair and just toward all—toward the public, toward the railroad owners, toward the security owners, toward the operators, toward the men, both union and nonunion men. We should not put any theoretical plan on the statute books. We must not let the Government continue to hold the bag. We should not put it in the power of any railroad organization to exploit the American people.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS].

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Harris	McNary	Smoot
Bankhead	Harrison	Moses	Spencer
Beckham	Hitchcock	Myers	Sutherland
Brandegee	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nelson	Thomas
Capper	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Townsend
Colt	Jones, Wash.	Newberry	Trammell
Cummins	Kellogg	Norris	Underwood
Dial	Keyes	Overman	Walsh, Mass.
Edge	King	Page	Walsh, Mont.
Fletcher	Kirby	Phipps	Warren
Frelinghuysen	La Follette	Pomerene	Watson
Gay	Lenroot	Ransdell
Gore	McCormick	Sheppard
Gronna	McKellar	Smith, S. C.

Mr. WATSON. I have been requested to announce the absence of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT] in attendance at a meeting of the subcommittee of the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS].

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, the pending amendment has been explained and debated twice prior to to-day, but as there are some Senators here now who were not present on either of those occasions, I will simply say, by way of explanation, that the amendment is designed to take out of the bill the provision which authorizes the appointment on the board of directors of each railroad corporation coming under the provisions of the bill two directors from the employees of the railroad and two from the public, who are not stockholders and have no pecuniary interest in the railroad.

I think that feature of the bill is unwarranted paternalism. I can see no necessity or excuse for it. The matter of wages and working conditions is amply taken care of by other provisions in the bill, where a tribunal is provided for the settlement of those things, in which the employees will have a voice and before which they will have a fair hearing. I can see no reason for putting in the bill this paternalistic feature. Therefore I have moved to strike it out.

[Mr. LA FOLLETTE addressed the Senate in continuation of the speech begun by him on Tuesday. After having spoken for nearly two hours, he yielded the floor for the day.]

RECESS.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Saturday, December 13, 1919, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, December 12, 1919.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite Spirit, our God and our Father, never far from any of us, we would draw near to Thee and receive that spiritual momentum sufficient unto the hour, that we may meet the conditions of life faithfully and efficiently, act wisely, do justly unto others as we would be done by and thus promote larger life, a finer influence with our fellow men, reduce injustice, right the wrongs and make the world a sweeter, nobler, more generous dwelling-place. In the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PANAMA CANAL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, the annual report of the Governor of the Panama Canal for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1919.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, 11 December, 1919.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bills:

H. R. 3754. An act to amend sections 8 and 21 of the copyright act, approved March 4, 1909; and

H. R. 9822. An act to authorize the President of the United States to arrange and participate in an international conference to consider questions relating to international communication.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SELLS. Mr. Speaker, under the rules of the House this is the day set apart for the consideration of pension bills on the Private Calendar. The Committee on Pensions has two omnibus House bills and also one Senate bill on the calendar for consideration. I have been advised, however, that it is the wish of the House to proceed with the consideration of the military bill. I therefore ask unanimous consent that should the consideration of this bill be completed on or before 5 o'clock this afternoon it shall be in order to call up the private bills.

The SPEAKER. That would be in order without any unanimous consent.

Mr. SELLS. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that these bills be in order on next Friday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that in case the pension bills are not considered to-day they be in order to be considered on next Friday. Is there objection?

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SELLS] how he obtained the views of the House as to its wishes to-day? Has the gentleman conferred with the chairman of the Committee on Claims, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS].

Mr. SELLS. I understand that under the rule that was adopted making this military bill the order of business the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs really has the right to call up this bill and to have it considered.

Mr. SINNOTT. I think there may be some question about that. I for one am not willing to concede that right.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes in order that I may have read in my time a telegram of resolutions adopted by the House of Representatives of Massachusetts relative to the sugar situation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes for the purpose indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read in my time the resolutions referred to.

The Clerk read as follows:

(Telegram.)

BOSTON, MASS., December 11, 1919.

Representative ALLEN T. TREADWAY,
Washington, D. C.:

The Commonwealth of Massachusetts in the year 1919.

Resolutions memorializing Congress in relation to the deficiency in the supply of sugar within the Commonwealth.

Whereas the great deficiency in the supply of sugar within the Commonwealth is a hardship upon and harmful to the health and comfort of its people and prejudicial to its business interests; and

Whereas the supply and distribution of sugar being within the control of the Federal Government, it is not within the power of the general court to pass legislation which would increase the supply of sugar in this Commonwealth; and

Whereas it appears from the report of the special commission on the necessaries of life recently submitted to the general court that the deficiency in the supply of sugar within the Commonwealth is due to the fault of the National Sugar Equalization Board; and

Whereas there has been presented to the National House of Representatives by Hon. FREDERICK W. DALLINGER, Congressman from Massachusetts, a resolve to prohibit the exportation of sugar from the United States: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be, and hereby is, respectfully requested to investigate at once the actions of said National Sugar Equalization Board in order that the reasons for the deficiency in the supply of sugar may be ascertained and the responsibility therefor determined and placed where it belongs; and be it further

Resolved, That the Congress be requested to at once take every action possible to insure an adequate supply of sugar by prohibiting the exportation thereof from the United States, or by any other means that will give to the people of the country and of this Commonwealth the amount of sugar needed for their health and comfort to maintain the business of the Commonwealth; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the Commonwealth be instructed to send copies of these resolutions by night letter to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from Massachusetts.

House of Representatives December 11, 1919.

Adopted.

JAMES W. KIMBALL, Clerk.

A true copy.
Attest.

ALBERT P. LANGTRY,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARD. Do I understand that the telegram as read is an instruction from the Massachusetts Legislature?

The SPEAKER. It is a respectful request.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD a proclamation of the governor of Kansas convening the Kansas Legislature to deal with the coal situation in that State.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a proclamation by the governor of Kansas relative to the coal situation. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, replying to the question asked by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD], I call his attention and the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], who had this telegram read, that the language of the telegram does say as follows:

Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be, and is hereby, instructed respectfully——

Mr. MADDEN. Why not? Why should they not do that?

Mr. BLANTON. And now that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] has been instructed as a Member of Congress, I want to ask him what he is going to do about it?

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I would be very glad to answer the gentleman's question if I have the time.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object to the request of the gentleman from Kansas—and I shall not object to this request—I desire, if permitted, to call the attention of the House to the condition of the supply of print paper upon which the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is printed. It is now costing about $60 per page to print it, and I trust that Members will refrain from asking for extensions of remarks unless the remarks pertain to measures under consideration. The Government Printing Office has men out all over the country endeavoring to secure a supply of print paper for the RECORD, and I believe that in such a stringency as this Members should be willing to cooperate by refraining from asking an extension of remarks for all sorts of communications and documents unless they pertain directly to matters under consideration.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, does that mean that the gentleman gives notice to the House that after this request is granted he is going to object to any extraneous matter that does not pertain to the business of the House?

Mr. WALSH. I have indulged in that in the past, and when present shall think it my duty to object. If these various extensions are asked for, I think I shall exercise that right.

Mr. GARNER. I hope the gentleman will do so.

Mr. WALSH. I am just now asking Members to bear that in mind, so that objections may not be necessary.

Mr. GARNER. As a Member of the House I hope the gentleman will object and take that burden upon himself, unless the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] will do their duty and see to it that the RECORD is taken care of. I think they ought to do it as leaders of the House.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have been impressed by the arguments brought forth by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]. I have not embarrassed myself nor been handicapped by any recent similar requests, and in this instance, therefore, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan objects.

AMENDMENT TO THE ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. EDMONDS. I would like to make a parliamentary inquiry. I would like to ask the Chair whether the bill before the House yesterday comes under the head of a general appropriation bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand the question.

Mr. EDMONDS. I would like to know whether that bill will be considered by the Chair as a general appropriation bill?

The SPEAKER. No. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 8819.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a preferential motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the question. The gentleman from Kansas moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 8819.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a point of order against the motion, and also to make a preferential motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar——

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. SINNOTT. And I would like to be heard.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. SINNOTT. Upon both those points of order. Mr. Speaker, the Speaker ruled last Friday that the rule before the House on last Friday displaced the bills upon the Private Calendar.

Now, the rule relating to the bill which was before the House yesterday is an entirely different rule. That rule merely authorized the motion to be made to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering that bill. But the rule before the Speaker last Friday directed the House to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill H. R. 9755. Now, in the absence of some specific rule setting aside to-day, this day, being Friday, is devoted to bills upon the Private Calendar, pensions having the right of way.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SINNOTT. Now, there have been rulings, there have been decisions, cited to the Speaker and cited by the Speaker last Friday, to the effect that unless Friday was excepted from the operation of a rule that Friday would be eliminated. Those are in volume 4 of Hinds' Precedents, sections 3201 and 3202.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SINNOTT. Not for the present. I have examined all those rulings and all those decisions. The decision by Speaker Keifer and the decision by Speaker Carlisle were under a rule making a particular bill a continuing order of business. Not only that, but they were under a rule excepting from the operation of the rule revenue bills and appropriation bills. Mr. Speaker Carlisle held, in addition to the reason that the bill in question was made a continuing order, that because revenue bills and appropriation bills, and nothing else, were excepted from the operation of the rule, the rule indicated an intention on the part of the House to make no other exceptions. Those rules intended the exclusion of all other matters not expressly excepted, on the maxim expressio unius exclusio alterius, that when one thing is expressed that all the others are excluded, and it was upon that point as well as on the point of a continuing order that Speaker Carlisle overruled the point of order made by Mr. Reed. Now, Speaker CLARK has held that when there is a seeming conflict between the rules, as there may be to-day, between a rule presented by the Committee on Rules and the regular rule of the House, that it is the duty of the Speaker, so far as possible, to make the rules a consistent and harmonious whole—to reconcile one with the other in an endeavor to expedite the business of the House—and it seems to me that that principle should be maintained and followed by the Speaker to-day. Here is the Private Claims Calendar, having some 50 or 75 or 100 bills, deferred from time to time, and it seems to me that the Speaker might well rule to-day that because the rule which was adopted yesterday does not expressly eliminate Friday, that then the regular rules of the House should obtain.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SINNOTT. I do.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does the gentleman maintain that the House has not the power to determine for itself what order of business it will take up for to-day?

Mr. SINNOTT. Oh, certainly the House may have that opportunity later on.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Precisely. But the gentleman can accomplish what he desires by voting down the motion of the gentleman from Kansas, and surely he can not maintain the Speaker can not recognize the gentleman from Kansas to make the motion?

Mr. SINNOTT. I have made the point of order against the motion, contending that that motion is out of order to-day until the motion to consider bills on the Private Calendar is disposed of.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SINNOTT. I will yield.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman contend that the following rule—

That it shall be in order to entertain a motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House to consider business on the Private Calendar in the following order on Friday of each week—precludes the consideration by the House of a bill made in order under a special rule?

Mr. SINNOTT. Well, the gentleman is begging the question. I contend that the bill is not made in order for to-day; that the Private Calendar first has the right of way.

Mr. WALSH. The rule provides that after the adoption of the resolution it shall be in order to move to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider that bill.

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes; I concede that, and the motion was made yesterday. Now, if the gentlemen in charge of the bill desired to protect themselves yesterday their motion should have been, instead of a motion to adjourn, a motion for a recess, and then the legislative day of yesterday would continue to-day. That was their protection.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SINNOTT. I desire to quote another authority——

Mr. WALSH. Before the gentleman does that, will the gentleman kindly translate the Latin expression he used?

Mr. SINNOTT. When this matter was up yesterday the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] stated that to-day would be pension day. You will find that at the end of yesterday's proceedings on page 434 of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the rule that was adopted yesterday making the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs in order put that in a status where the motion to consider it could be recognized to-day by the Chair, if the Chair thought it wise. It was also in order to-day, according to the permanent rule, to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House to consider bills on the Private Calendar. Both of those motions are in order, and other motions might be in order. And it is the purpose of the Chair to recognize whatever motion the Chair thinks represents the desire of the House. Of course the Chair can not be certain what the desire of the House is, but the Chair has consulted different individuals who are interested in the various bills, and other Members, and has come to the conclusion that it was wise to recognize the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY].

Of course, the Chair can only guess what the House desires, and it is entirely in the hands of the House to determine what business it shall take up. If it votes down the motion of the gentleman from Kansas, then the next preferential motion would be in order by the chairman of the Pension Committee. The Chair overrules the point of order and recognizes the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY], who made the motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 8819. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. BLANTON. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demands a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 73, noes 27.

So the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 8819) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1919, with Mr. MADDEN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 8819, which the Clerk will report by title.

The bill was reported by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

At Camp Normoyle, Tex.: For construction for the completion of main shops, $30,000; for the purchase of real estate, $2,500.

Field Artillery—

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BROWNING] is recognized for the purpose of offering an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Michigan rise?

Mr. FORDNEY. I want to ask permission to address the House for five minutes out of order on the sugar question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BROWNING] has the floor.

Mr. FORDNEY. Pardon me. I did not understand.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BROWNING].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BROWNING: Page 6, line 20, insert:

"ORDNANCE.

"To complete the purchase of real estate at Oldmans, Salem County, N. J., for Delaware ordnance depot, $250,000."

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, on August 29, 1918, the Ordnance Department requisitioned a number of farms in Salem County, N. J., for the site of an ordnance depot. I do not recall just the number of acres taken on that date, but it was the major portion of 1,825 acres totaled, a small tract of which was taken in April, 1919, for railroad purposes.

This land was requisitioned from farmers of that district, and it has never been paid for; thus has great hardship been suffered, some of the farmers having been practically bankrupted.

The department established the Delaware general ordnance depot there and expended $4,236,650 in improvements, including expensive concrete foundations. The Government holds at this time 1,545 acres in the tract, all of which they now desire to retain permanently; 279 acres only have been returned to the original owners, leaving the 1,545 acres referred to, the buildings upon which are being used as a depository for various ordnance materials.

The farmers affected are my constituents, and I have been informed of many of the hardships to which they have been subjected. I saw a department letter written to one of the original owners, asking him to go back upon his land and submit an inventory of the damages sustained. This he did. He was also instructed to state in detail the damages to the property, which he did, and all was satisfactory except one very small item. After he had sent the matter to Washington and believed it was all settled he received another department letter, telling him to get off the land. He had by that time replanted his peach orchard which had been entirely destroyed, had fixed up his dwelling house, and placed a tenant therein. When he came to see me he asked my advice as to what he should do. I said to him, "Stay where you are. You can obey the first order, but you can not obey both orders; and so far as I can, I will protect you in what you do." I presume the man is still in possession of his property.

Mr. Chairman, those people had to give up their farms; they have practically no place to live, except in out-of-the-way locations, for farms can not be obtained except at very high prices, and it seems very unjust for the Government, after taking their land, never to have paid the owners one single penny.

I received the information only yesterday from the War Department to the effect that they wish to retain those 1,545 acres, and I was also informed that it will cost more to remove the Government's property, pay damages, and return the land to the owners than the purchase would cost at $250,000.

I therefore offer this amendment to appropriate $250,000 for the purchase of the land being held and used by the United States Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt but that the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey is a meritorious one. It is one, however, that the committee has not considered. The reason it was not considered is that in the limitation that was placed upon the appropriation bill last July, the object of which was to prevent the department from going ahead and acquiring further real estate, specifically eliminated manufacturing plants and industrial propositions. So there has been no limitation on the power of the War Department at any time to go ahead and purchase this real estate providing it was necessary in order to protect the interests of the Government. That was the language of the bill. If the department has not already gone ahead and paid for that real estate, it is due undoubtedly to the negligence of the department and not to the limitation imposed by Congress.

Mr. BROWNING. I just want to say, in answer to the gentleman, that the department has taken up the ground, but on account of that limitation it is impossible for them to pay for it. They can not pay even, in this instance to which I am referring, the award for the ground turned back.

Mr. ANTHONY. The committee does not doubt the figures submitted by the gentleman, but it would like it better if it had verified figures, signed by the Chief of Ordnance or the Secretary of War. The gentleman will admit that it is rather dangerous to make large appropriations without such a foundation.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, I want to say, in answer to that, that on yesterday I called up the department, and the information which I have here was gotten from the department. I am told that they need that land and propose to keep it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 17, noes 35.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I move an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Delaware offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report. The Chair would state to the gentleman from Delaware that the amendment offered is not in order now. We have not yet reached that point. We are now on page 6, and we are considering the bill by paragraphs. The gentleman's amendment is written to be inserted on page 10. The gentleman will have to wait until we reach that point in the bill.

Mr. LAYTON. I move it as an amendment to page 6.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's amendment reads on page 10.

Mr. LAYTON. I ask that it be modified in that respect.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAYTON: Page 6, line 20, as a new paragraph insert:

"For payment for land purchased by the United States for right of way for the railroad connecting the munition plant at Port Penn, Del., and the Delaware Railway at Mount Pleasant, Del., $32,270.90."

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the item on the ground that it does not appear in the bill. It is not germane to the bill. It is not in any part agreed to as being permissible as an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Delaware wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. LAYTON. I wish to be heard in this way. I will ask the indulgence of the committee——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will have to confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman wants to make a speech I will reserve the point of order to let him make a statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York reserves the point of order.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have a proposition here which is on all fours with that of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BROWNING]. While the war was in progress it was necessary, of course, to build munition plants. The Government built a munition plant at Port Penn, on the Delaware Bay. In order that it might have more facile ingress and egress, they wanted a communication by rail between Fort Penn and the Delaware Railroad. This was for purposes of transportation both north and south. The Government proceeded in the Federal court at Wilmington and used the orderly processes of law. Viewers or adjusters, or whatever the proper name is, viewed these lands, condemned these lands, and made the award for these lands, and the Government took the lands over. It used the land. It graded them for railroad purposes. It cut through hills, it filled up dales, it put down the ties and laid the rails and built culverts, and on completion used the track, using locomotives and cars. It stands there to-day, a railroad track 8½ miles long by from 60 to 100 feet wide.

This is not a postwar proposition. This is a proposition where the Government took it over under process of law before the armistice was declared. That land is destroyed for all agricultural purposes. It runs through the most fertile and beautiful section of our State. The Government takes the position, on account of the bill passed here on the 11th day of July, 1919, that it can not pay for this land, and it says also that if it had the money it would not pay for the land, because it has another alternative, that alternative being that it could scrap the railroad, take up the ties and the iron and remove the ballast, and hand back the land to the original owners.

This is an obvious hardship of an inexcusable kind, obliging these people to employ lawyers, go into the Court of Claims, subject them to that interminable delay which characterizes such proceedings. I have found, Mr. Chairman, a curious contradiction on the part of Members of the House relative to the act of July 11, 1919, relating to Federal contracts. I recollect very well that the sole purpose of that act was to forbid the War Department from purchasing any new land or to erect any new buildings for war purposes. And it was not intended to prevent the department from paying awards already determined by due process of law. I do not believe that Congress would have been willing to pass a law bearing the interpretation that the War Department now places upon that act; neither do I believe that a department has any right to annul the proceedings lawfully and duly had in the condemnation of these lands between Mount Pleasant and Port Penn and compel the landowners to begin new proceedings to affect the same purpose, namely, to ascertain the amount of damages due to the confiscation of these lands.

I append hereto a letter from G. F. Woods, Director of Real Estate Service of the War Department, bearing out the facts which I have given relative to the lawful procedure had in the condemnation of these lands and other matters.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Delaware has expired.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Delaware asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

WAR DEPARTMENT REAL ESTATE SERVICE,
OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR,
Washington, December 12, 1919.

Hon. CALEB R. LAYTON,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. LAYTON: In response to the request made by your secretary to-day, I transmit the following information concerning the right of way for railroad connection to the Government's loading plant at Port Penn, Del. The right of way is about 8¼ miles long and varies in width from 66 feet to 100 feet, and contains 21 parcels having a total area of approximately 66¼ acres.

The acquisition of title to the above-mentioned right of way was requested by the Ordnance Department August 1, 1918. Condemnation proceedings for the title were filed August 19, 1918, in the United States court for the district of Delaware at Wilmington, Del. The following jury was empanelled: Frank N. Overdeer, James B. Oberley, Albertus B. Stayton, B. Frank Walls, Joshua J. Lambden, Leonard V. Aspril, jr., Alexis P. Clark, Harry K. Fooks, William G. Williams, Harry S. Woodkeeper, Thomas I. Bird, and John H. Peach. The court ordered jurors to view on October 29, 1918, five of the tracts of land under condemnation.

Awards by the jury October 29, 1918, total $32,270.90, including damages of the five tenants. Verdict was rendered by the court October 30, 1918, as above.

January 11, 1919, the award of $32,270, from which $826 awarded as damages to certain tenants was to be deducted, was agreed to by the War Department. Figures furnished by the Ordnance Department indicate that the construction work on the railroad connection over the above-mentioned right of way cost $300,293.69 and the cost of the construction work of the plant at Port Penn was $410,521.57.

The Ordnance Department has been requested to advise this office the date construction work was commenced on the railroad connection and the date the construction work was stopped, and as soon as this information is received it will be transmitted to you.

Respectfully,

G. F. WOODS,
Director Real Estate Service.
By EDWARD W. TURNER,
Lieutenant Colonel, Coast Artillery Corps.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York renews the point of order. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Chair believes that the amendment is not germane to the item pending.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes on the question of sugar.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes on the sugar question. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will agree to produce some sugar that I can buy for my family I will not object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan for five minutes out of order.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the petition just filed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] is out of order, for this reason: There exists to-day a corporation created in the Food Administration office by the Government, a Government corporation known as the Sugar Equalization Board, which last year entered into a contract with Cuban sugar producers to purchase all export sugar from Cuba. That contract is in existence and extends over this year, expiring on the 31st day of December.

That corporation further entered into a contract, copies of which I have, with the sugar refiners of this country to the effect that the refineries would take that sugar purchased by that corporation from Cuba at a given price, yielding to this corporation, as I now remember it, 38 cents a hundred pounds, a profit to this corporation, which money was supposed to take care of the expenses of the corporation.

It was further agreed between the corporation and the Governments of Great Britain and France that Great Britain and France would not bid in the market for Cuban sugar during that time, provided the corporation distributed equitably and equally between the people of the United States and the people of Great Britain and France the sugar so purchased. Those contracts have been strictly complied with and are being complied with to-day.

We produce in this country about 25 per cent of our consumption of sugar, both from beet and can sugar. We import from our insular possessions—Porto Rico, Hawaii, and the Philippine Islands—another 25 per cent of our consumption.

The remaining 50 per cent of our supply of sugar is imported, chiefly from Cuba. No refiner of sugar in this country exports sugar produced in the United States, for the reason that on the exportation of refined sugar a drawback of 90 per cent of the duty paid on imported unrefined sugar is given to the refiners of the country. On all raw materials or any materials imported into this country and converted into a finished product, when the finished product is exported 99 per cent of the duty paid is returned to the manufacturer and exporter as a drawback. Therefore no sugar produced in this country is exported. The only sugar exported by anybody in the United States is such sugar as is imported, and to-day under these contracts we are in duty bound to export to Great Britain and France an equitable proportion of that Cuban sugar that is imported into this country from these purchases made by this board this year. Therefore a resolution coming at this time directing Congress to prohibit the exportation, or putting an embargo on the exportation of sugar, is in violation of the contract now existing between this Government corporation and the Governments of Great Britain and France.

Mr. KITCHIN. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. FORDNEY. Certainly.

Mr. KITCHIN. What is the gentleman's opinion about this matter: Does he think it wise that the Government should authorize the President to purchase the Cuban crop now?

Mr. FORDNEY. I wanted to add that I have been urging members of the Committee on Agriculture to extend the power to this corporation to purchase the Cuban crop for the coming year and control again the price of sugar in this country for the coming year. If we do not, my friends, in my candid opinion, the consuming public of this country will pay more for their sugar than they will pay if it is controlled by this Sugar Equalization Board.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. I would like two minutes more.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Make it five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. FORDNEY. The reason I say that is that this corporation has fixed the price, in addition to the price that the refiners must pay for that raw sugar, and they have also fixed the price that refiners can charge for the sugar, and therefore the price at which the refiners are selling sugar in this country to-day is absolutely controlled by this Government corporation in the food department and the Food Administrator's office. Now, the taking away of that power to fix the price for the coming year is going to cause such competition in the sugar markets of the world, because of a shortage of the world supply of sugar of some 2,000,000 or 3,000,000 tons out of a total of 16,000,000 or 17,000,000 tons world's production, that in my opinion the price of sugar to the consumer will go to from 25 to 30 cents a pound. I believe this power to fix the price can be extended under the Lever Act, and if it is extended for another year in my candid opinion this Government corporation will purchase the remaining amount of sugar produced in Cuba not already sold, where practically 90 per cent of all the export sugar brought to the United States is produced, and it will be purchased at a price and sold to the refiners under such conditions as now exist for this year, and the price fixed by this corporation will be such that the refiners can charge wholesalers a price so that the consumers of this country will get sugar at a less price than they otherwise would.

Mr. MONDELL and Mr. KITCHIN rose.

Mr. FORDNEY. I will yield first to the gentleman from Wyoming and then to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. MONDELL. Is the gentleman informed as to the present selling price of the Cuban crop?

Mr. FORDNEY. No.

Mr. MONDELL. I was told yesterday that it was 13¼ cents a pound in Cuba.

Mr. FORDNEY. The price of last year was around 7 cents.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. FORDNEY. But now, as we have delayed the purchase of the crop until a portion has been sold, we must go into the market and compete with other people on that sugar at a price based on what the owner can sell it for to the people of the whole world.

Let me say that when I left my home in Michigan a week ago last Monday the price of sugar fixed by the Government for beet sugar was, I believe, 12½ cents a pound, wholesale. That price prevailed last week, fixed by the Government.

Mr. MONDELL. But the Government fixed the price of 17½ cents on Louisiana sugar, unrefined. Why does the Louisiana sugar producer get 17½ cents and the beet-sugar producer get 12½?

Mr. FORDNEY. It may be that the price of sugar in Michigan has been advanced by this corporation since that time. I do not know.

Mr. MONDELL. But they did not advance it.

Mr. FORDNEY. But let me say to you that our sugar crop began in the State of Michigan—began to be ground out—about 30 days ago. The beet-sugar refineries east of the Mississippi River began grinding out beets about 30 days ago, and that season lasts about 120 days. While that beet sugar is upon the market it supplies more than 50 per cent of the total consumption of sugar in the United States for four or five months or more.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman know why the Equalization Board held the wholesale price of Colorado and Michigan and California sugar down to 10 cents while they have allowed Louisiana planters to charge 17½ for their unrefined product?

Mr. FORDNEY. No; I do not know about that.

Mr. MONDELL. Having done that, how do they expect we are going to maintain a low price for sugar in America for a part of the crop?

Mr. FORDNEY. We can not maintain a lower or higher price in this country than is fixed by that corporation that has the power to fix the price; they have absolute control.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. REAVIS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan may proceed for five minutes more.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I have no idea of being unduly severe on the gentleman from Michigan——

Mr. FORDNEY. That is very kind of the gentleman.

Mr. ANTHONY. But I submit that we ought not to take up any more time on other things while the bill is under consideration.

Mr. FORDNEY. I will not occupy any more than five minutes.

Mr. ANTHONY. With the understanding that no more time will be asked on this matter, I withdraw any objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the gentleman is recognized for five additional minutes.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, does not the gentleman think that Congress, now, before December 31, ought to pass some legislation by which the equalization board, or the President, can, for the benefit of the people of the United States, buy and distribute the Cuban crop?

Mr. FORDNEY. I have asked certain members of the Committee on Agriculture, which has this very thing in charge, to recommend to the House that authority be given to this corporation, which is a division or a part of a division of the Food Administrator's office, extending their power for another year in order that they may control the price of sugar in the United States, as they have during this year just passing out. I have asked that. I think it is wise.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. I was called out of the Chamber while the gentleman was talking, and I do not know whether he has adverted to what I had in mind or not, but does the gentleman not know that last September the equalization board, with the desire to continue its functions, asked the President for permission to buy the Cuban sugar at 6¼ cents per pound and he refused that permission?

Mr. FORDNEY. However that request, I am informed, was made by that board, the President, I am told, has not replied.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. And in addition to that, let me say to the gentleman that the President has not yet, as I am informed, answered either of two letters addressed to him by that corporation. In addition to that, the beet-sugar manufacturers held a convention some 60 days ago in Chicago and requested by resolution to the Government that this corporation be given control over the price of sugar for the next year.

Mr. REAVIS. But if the President had replied to that letter in the affirmative last September we could have purchased all of that crop at 6¼ cents.

Mr. FORDNEY. Absolutely; yes.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, I just want to state, in answer to the question asked by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] in regard to legislation, that the Senate just a few moments ago passed the McNary bill, authorizing the equalization board to purchase the Cuban crop.

Mr. FORDNEY. I am very glad to hear that.

Mr. MARTIN. I want to say something more in regard to fixing the price of Louisiana sugar at 17 cents. Neither the Department of Justice nor any one else has ever fixed the price of sugar in Louisiana at 17 cents. What did take place was this: The Louisiana crop is about 25 per cent of the normal crop, and, owing to the shortage of sugar in this country, when we began to harvest our crop people from all sections of the United States came down there and offered us from 20 to 25 cents a pound for every pound of sugar in Louisiana. We were then told by the Department of Justice that this would be profiteering. It would not have been profiteering, for the reason that at 25 cents a pound a great majority of the sugar planters in Louisiana would not have made a profit on this year's crop, and there could be no profiteering when a profit does not exist. However, in order to avoid any friction with the Department of Justice the sugar producers of Louisiana agreed that they would not sell their clarified sugar at a price exceeding 17 cents per pound, and the Department of Justice stated that any price in excess of this figure would be considered as prima facie evidence of profiteering. For the purpose, therefore, of avoiding friction with the Department of Justice, the sugar producers of Louisiana have sold their sugar for much less than they were offered for it. I shall go into this matter fully when the McNary bill comes up for consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has again expired.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. LEHLBACH: Page 6, after line 19, after the figures "$2,500," add the following as a new paragraph:

"RIFLE RANGE.

"At Caldwell, N. J.: For the purchase of the site known as Great Peace Meadows and the completion of the rifle range thereon, $200,000."

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment, or reserve it, if the gentleman desires, in order that he may discuss it. It is not germane and it is not a part of the matter stricken out of the original bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York reserves the point of order.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me to be germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman reserves the point of order.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I know, but I do not want to discuss the matter if the point of order is to be sustained.

Mr. CALDWELL. I suggest that the gentleman go ahead and discuss it on the merits. If he makes a good speech I may withdraw the point of order.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Then, Mr. Chairman, I shall discuss the merits of the proposition. Under paragraph 113 of the national defense act the War Department is authorized to establish at various points rifle ranges, to be available not only to the military forces but also to the National Guard and to civilians under proper limitations. In 1917 an exhaustive examination was made of the terrain known as the Metropolitan District in and about the city of Greater New York and that section of the country for a suitable range. This was done because of the numerous military posts and the naval forces stationed in that vicinity, the National Guard, and also because of the large number of civilians who desire to avail themselves of the opportunity afforded by this paragraph in the national defense act.

At Caldwell, N. J., a site was found, about a square mile in area, suitable for such use, which could be purchased at a very low sum of money. A bill to that effect was passed by the Senate, but because of the great stress and quantity of military legislation in the Sixty-fifth Congress it was not reported in this House. However, the Navy Department, acting in cooperation with the War Department, did establish on this property, without the acquisition of the land, however, such a range. This rifle range is the greatest range in the country. It has 250 targets. There are 100 targets with a range of 1,000 yards, 100 targets with a range of 500 yards, and 50 targets with a range of 200 yards. There are over 25 buildings erected on the property, and the range is completely equipped. Last summer the national rifle match was held there, and over 5,000 marksmen participated. Thousands of visitors came there daily. The bill now under consideration was drawn and introduced on or about August 25, 1919. The rifle-range proposition was under consideration by the War Department, but its recommendation to the Committee on Military Affairs did not come in until under date of September 25, 1919, after this bill had originally been introduced.

As I understand it, the letter of recommendation by the Secretary of War was not transmitted to the subcommittee having the matter in charge, being addressed to the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], and for that reason the project was not included in this bill. As far as I am informed, I understand there is no opposition to it, and in the opinion of some it ought to have been included.

The Government has spent in labor and materials on this rifle range over $600,000. The purpose of this amendment is to authorize the acquisition of the land upon which the range and its attendant improvements are located. The property is now being held under options or leases, and unless the Government acquires title within a reasonable time the project will have to be abandoned and the $600,000 already expended will be scrapped. This range is located accessible to a population of 10,000,000 people. It may be reached by two railroads or trolley or by roads from all directions. It is, in direct line, about 18 miles distant from the city hall in Manhattan Borough, the heart of Greater New York. It is 14 miles distant from the city of Newark, which, with its suburbs, embraces a population of half a million. Within Greater New York and northern New Jersey, which this range is designed to serve, there are at least 41 rifle clubs and associations regularly chartered and maintaining membership in the Associated Rifle Clubs of New York and New Jersey. The benefits that will flow from the maintenance of this range are so obvious and its abandonment will be so disastrous that the willful waste of $600,000, although important, becomes a minor consideration.

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I will.

Mr. CALDWELL. Does the gentleman know the price per acre at which the land is to be acquired?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Much of it at a nominal sum. A great part of the land is waste, but there are possibly two arable parcels.

Mr. CALDWELL. Can the gentleman state of his own knowledge the price the Government is expected to pay for it?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEHLBACH. May I have two minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CALDWELL. Can the gentleman say from his knowledge that the price the Government will be expected to pay for the land is a fair price?

Mr. LEHLBACH. It is fair.

Mr. CALDWELL. Then I will withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. LEHLBACH) there were—ayes 14, noes 20.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request, to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 20, insert before the words "field artillery" a new paragraph, to read as follows: "Coast Artillery. To complete purchase of real estate for Coast Artillery school at Camp Eustis, Va., $42,198.23."

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the figures that are contained in that amendment are identically the figures which are shown on the photostatic copy which was sent to the Senate in the hearing on real estate purchases and to which I referred yesterday. I understand that this amendment is acceptable to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs. The land has been taken possession of, it is in use, and while I said yesterday that all land was under process of condemnation I find from the records that there was one tract of 50 acres, involving $2,500, which was not involved in condemnation proceedings and upon which the Government, as I am reliably informed by the Construction Division this morning, has constructed about a million dollars' worth of improvements, so that it is necessary for the Government to acquire that tract. The largest tract involved, approximating $8,000, belongs to a widow. The widow has a life interest in it, and the property was taken possession of some time ago. It was necessary to condemn this land in order to acquire full title. The land ought to be acquired, and I hope the amendment will be accepted.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of having read a telegram from Representative UPSHAW about Camp Gordon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the telegram.

The Clerk read as follows:

ATLANTA, GA., December 11, 1919.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

Gen. Pershing, who is on tour of military camps at request of Secretary of War, has carefully inspected Camp Gordon to-day. He expresses conviction that this great property, so recently bought by Government and so well suited for recruiting and distribution camp, should not be hastily disposed of, and naturally feels that Military Committee should wait until he submits his report. Courtesy to him and courtesy to Atlanta calls for postponement until both can be heard. Having been assured by members of committee that nothing would be done for several months, I came home to get facts during Pershing's visit. No harm can come from temporary postponement. Hope you will urge Congress in fairness to all concerned to strike Camp Gordon proviso from pending military bill.

W. D. UPSHAW.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, at this point, following the reference to Gen. Pershing, I desire to suggest that the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL]——

Mr. CALDWELL. I told the gentleman I would put it in.

Mr. LITTLE. Put in the telegram from Gen. Pershing.

Mr. CALDWELL. I could not get my hands on it last night. I will some time during the day.

Mr. LITTLE. If the gentleman pleases, I believe it is better to put Gen. Pershing on record.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, in regard to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Virginia, I think it very proper we make provision for the purchase of the parcels of real estate covered by the amendment at Camp Eustis. The figures for the purchase of these parcels was presented to the committee, and it is undoubtedly necessary that the Government make provision to complete the contract, whether we continue that camp in its entirety or not, so that the committee has no objection to the amendment. But I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia if he would be willing to make the language of his amendment conform to the other provisions for the purchase of real estate, making it simply read for purchase of real estate at Camp Eustis, Va., whatever the amount is.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. I accept that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment in what respect?

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. In the manner indicated by the chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the modified amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modified amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND]: Page 6, line 20, insert before the words "Field Artillery," a new paragraph to read as follows:

"Coast Artillery: For purchase of real estate at Camp Eustis, Va., $42,198.23."

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman this question.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SNELL. I understood yesterday the committee had decided to cut out and oppose all of these extra amendments which are going to be presented on the floor of the House, and it was one reason why they wanted to present the bill in the amended form. I would never have voted for the bill coming out of the Committee on Rules to make this bill in order if I had not understood the committee were going to stand by it as presented here and not allow any of these additional matters to be brought in on the floor of the House.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will say to the gentleman this amendment is asked for by the War Department, and in the opinion of the committee it is absolutely necessary.

Mr. SNELL. Why did not the gentleman put it in in the first place? Nearly all of these were asked for by the War Department, and I understood that only matter carried in the bill would be considered at this time.

Mr. ANTHONY. We desire to eliminate the entire project at Camp Eustis.

Mr. SNELL. Why not stand for it now?

Mr. ANTHONY. But whether they continue it or abandon it, we will have to pay for these parcels of land.

Mr. McKENZIE. I would like to ask the gentleman another question. I want to understand this matter before we vote on it. If I understood the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] correctly, he and his associates on this subcommittee favor the abandonment of Camp Eustis as a military project.

Mr. ANTHONY. We do.

Mr. McKENZIE. Now, then, if that is true, why shall we authorize an amendment here to spend $48,000 on a proposition to abandon?

Mr. ANTHONY. Let me explain to the gentleman and he will see the point. Camp Eustis is a war-time proposition. A great many millions of dollars have been expended there. Most of the land had been purchased, except these two tracts, which are under contract; the Government is in possession and has a million dollars worth of property on these tracts, and so it is obvious, I know, to the gentleman that we must make the purchase for the purposes of salvaging.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I arise to inform the House of Camp Holabird, Md., perhaps the greatest motor-truck camp in the world, certainly the largest automobile repair shop in existence. Camp Jesup, at Atlanta, Ga., and Camp Normoyle, at San Antonio, Tex., are about two-thirds the size of Camp Holabird, while Camp Boyd, on the reservation of El Paso, is about one-third the size.

According to the testimony of Gen. Drake, there are 80 officers and 2,000 employees at Camp Holabird. It is located about 4 miles from the old city limits of Baltimore, on Colgate Creek; has large truck facilities and railroad connections. You will see, therefore, that it is admirably located from every economic point of view, being in close proximity to a city of 700,000 people, with its vast number of mechanics, having railroad and water connections which lead to all parts of the country and to every country of the globe.

There have been purchased at Camp Holabird 97.74 acres of land, costing $340,000, and upon construction, $4,933,000, making total expenditure of $5,273,000. I am thankful to say that this bill provides for the completion of the purchase of land at that camp, 43.53 acres having already been contracted for, the price agreed upon, and the people promised their money. They have been waiting for a long time for the payment, and the $140,000 which the committee gives under this bill will allow the Government to settle with these people who have long since parted with their property in the hope of prompt payment. We are very thankful that the committee has granted this appropriation. We feel that it is not alone the appropriation that is granted, but that the appropriation signifies that the camp has been adopted for continuation. That we shall look forward to great work of the Government in that section. I say we are pleased with this. We congratulate the committee upon its good judgment, and we know all Baltimoreans are thanking them for having given them their attention in this bill.

I am disturbed, however, over the fact that two very important items were not included. I realize the absolute futility of attempting to amend the bill, and will therefore not engage in an attempt which I know would be impossible of accomplishment. I want this House to know, however, Camp Holabird for their future information, and I hope to guide them in making the necessary appropriations in the very near future.

The two items which have been omitted from the bill as amended and which were originally carried in the bill when introduced are: First, for construction of railroad, receiving and storage yard, $53,000; and, secondly, for construction of steel storage building, $120,000. If the committee had made these two appropriations, as was originally contemplated, we would then have had a complete motor-truck camp in every particular. There has been great criticism of the Government for not taking better care of the vast number of automobiles at this camp. It is true that the officials have not been able to care for the machines as well as they would have liked. The trouble is there has not been sufficient shelter afforded by the Government for storage and protection. There have been several acres of valuable automobiles and trucks at this camp, and storage space has been absolutely unavailable. The $120,000 I spoke of was intended to build a storage warehouse for machines and those parts which it is necessary to carry for the supply of the territory embraced by this camp. It was intended to build five buildings at the camp, four for aviation hangars and one large steel building 250 feet by 400 feet. This would have given ample accommodation for the protection of all the valuable material belonging to the Government and located at this camp. It would have given excellent accommodations for the carrying of a large supply of parts and equipment for automobiles and trucks, and these buildings certainly should have been appropriated for.

The fact is the main building was started in the early part of this year and a large part of the material for its construction was gathered and contract awarded. The contract would have been completed and the building erected had it not been for the act passed by Congress on July 19 of this year, which prohibited further construction by the War Department.

No further criticism can be made of the Government when Congress absolutely refuses to carry out a contract for the erection of storage facilities which would care for the Government's property in the best manner. There should be no criticism otherwise, because the officials in charge of this camp have cared for the automobiles in the best possible manner. They have been covered wherever possible, and just so often they are examined and gone over so that time and weather will not seriously affect them; this, however, is only partial care at best, and had Congress not prevented the construction of this warehouse in July all the automobiles and repair parts would long since have been under cover and vast sums saved for the Government in preventing the deterioration of its property. I should say that a sum far in excess of the appropriation would have been saved many months ago by the construction of this building and the proper care of the property.

The other item for $53,000 was for the purpose of construction of railroad, receiving and storage yard. This would have given the camp much better railroad facilities. This item embraced trackage and grading and storage building. When the legislation of July of this year stopped construction work at this camp, all the grading for the railroad had been done and the ties and a part of the rails had been placed, and the $53,000 which was asked for would have completed the work. As it is, it now remains in an incomplete state, and the Government is deprived of the efficiency of the camp to the extent that the railroad and railroad storage house has not been built. These items were both recommended by the War Department, and it was impressed upon the committee how important and essential they were to the proper operation of the camp and protection of Government property. I say therefore that while we appreciate the appropriation of the money for closing contracts for the land, we feel that the committee has not placed this camp in position to do the very best work by lopping off the other two appropriations.

We must realize that the Government having a vast number of automobiles and trucks in its service ought to have the very best equipped and most up-to-date repair shop that can be procured; its property ought to be sheltered and cared for; its railroad facilities and railroad storage ought to be ample in order to be economical and efficient. It is therefore regretted that the committee has not seen its way clear to make these two appropriations.

I bring these matters to the attention of the House so that when the subject comes before us again we may be informed and act in the interests of the camp and the Government by embracing the two items omitted in this bill.

Certainly Baltimore, with its close proximity to the West, the coal and iron fields of the country and the cheap railroad rates, the doorway to the Southland, and with a harbor second alone to that of New York, is an admirable location for such a camp; that it should be fostered and enlarged as requirements demand is self-evident.

I sincerely hope that this camp, which has performed such a valuable service in salvaging and handling automobiles and trucks and has meant such a vast saving to the Government, should be dealt with liberally and well, so that its usefulness may become greater and more abundant as the demands upon its capacity require.

I do hope that the members of this committee may see the wisdom of granting the other two items of the appropriation, and that they may use their influence with the Senate committee in having them restored to the bill as was originally intended and as the War Department has so strongly advocated. [Applause.]

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Is it not a fact that these automobile trucks have stood out in the open so long now that they are practically absolutely worthless, and would it not be another waste of money to put up a building to put them in?

Mr. LINTHICUM. The gentleman is wrong in that. If he should go there and inspect them, he would find they have been carefully covered up; that they have been cared for to the best advantage possible, and they are now in as good condition as you could possibly keep an automobile when out in the weather. And while they have taken the very best care of them, they could not continue to keep them in proper condition unless this appropriation of $120,000 is made to preserve them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, the committee considered the item covered by the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] and did not consider it advisable to place it in the bill, for the reason that the practical operation of this $5,000,000 motor plant up at Baltimore is in some doubt, as to whether the plant can be economically and profitably operated by the Government. So we declined to make provision for the appropriation for storage purposes. The War Department had from November 8 of last year to July 11 of this year to erect proper storage facilities for the service automobiles stored there. In all that time they had all the money they desired, but refused to afford proper protection to these vehicles, and instead of building sheds to further protect them, many of the committee believed that the trucks and automobiles should have been disposed of to the best advantage to the Government.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will.

Mr. REAVIS. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM], in reply to the question of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE], stated that these machines had not deteriorated to an appreciable extent.

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. REAVIS. I have here a letter from Col. J. W. Furlow, colonel of the Motor Transport Corps, written on the 10th of this month, where the inquiry was made of him as to the deterioration of 2,100 machines that have been standing in the open for a year without protection, and in reply to that inquiry he writes the following:

> Considering the 2,100 vehicles that may be covered by the proposed construction, the saving from deterioration on items named in the preceding paragraph covering that number of vehicles is estimated at the approximate value of $250 per vehicle.

Or $525,000 deterioration annually on 2,100 machines. Seventy thousand have been standing in the open, just as these 2,100 machines have, and if you have time you may compute the loss to the Government by such neglect.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last four words, the amendment being withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is recognized.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes out of order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I find in the Washington Times to-day, December 12, 1919, the noon edition, on page 1, the following statement, with headlines as follows:

> Would teach redism in school as unrest cure. Teaching of bolshevism in the schools is advocated by Congressman RAKER, of California, who declares that this is one way in which the danger of bolshevism may be impressed upon the Nation by education.

Yesterday the Committee on the Judiciary of the House had under consideration the bill H. R. 10379 and held hearings on that bill. I appeared before the committee advocating the passage of the bill.

I suggested the following amendment:

> On line 10, page 1, after the word "Government," insert as follows: "or to advise and advocate the overthrow or destruction of the Government of the United States."

The bill says:

> Those who advocate or teach the overthrow of the Government of the United States by violence or force.

I wanted to go a step further and make it the law that those who advocate the overthrow of this Government should be punished, and that all such publications should be made nonmailable.

The Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, of which I am a member, have been having this subject under investigation for the last month, and I have been strenuous in my efforts to amend the law and do all I can to eradicate radicalism and to deport all those who teach doctrines against this country, and particularly to enforce the present immigration laws and amend them so as to make them more stringent, to the end that those people who have been arrested and those that may be arrested on these charges, wherever sufficient, might be deported. In substance both before the committee and elsewhere I have said that there is no more important subject before the American people to-day than that of eradicating radicalism, doing what we can to prevent I. W. W.ism and to overthrow the doctrines of bolshevism and the doctrines advocated by the soviets of Russia. That it is our duty as American citizens to teach patriotism and Americanism in our common schools, and to use that great forum for that purpose, together with every other resource at our command. I have contended that all good American citizens, men and women, should give their time and ability to efforts for the eradication of these pernicious doctrines against our Government.

Now, that is the attitude I took on that subject and the attitude I take. I thank the House for granting me this courtesy at this time simply to make this statement. I am satisfied the paper tried to get me right, but it just twisted the words. I hope they will make the correction in the next edition, so as not improperly to represent me before the country, inasmuch as I am one who has been strenuous in my efforts to procure proper legislation, particularly as the author of the provision in the immigration bill that makes deportable one who teaches the unlawful destruction of property in the United States or who belongs to an organization that teaches and advocates it. [Applause.]

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the motion. I simply desire to second the suggestion made by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

I was very much interested in the remarks of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] on the question of automobile trucks that are left out of doors. I have never understood why they could not be sold. Why should the Government keep them? Perhaps there is some reason for it, but I never have quite understood the reason.

I want to call the attention of the committee to the pending bill. Many of us had supposed that when the war was over it was over, but I find this bill contains many items to purchase land. I thought instead of buying land we would be selling land which we had bought for the purpose of carrying on the war, but it seems we are buying more land.

Perhaps it is necessary to pass this bill. I expect to vote against it simply as an object lesson. You know we are appropriating billions of dollars this year. We spent billions of dollars to carry on the war, and the people of this country stood for it. They stood patiently by and saw these great appropriations made. They stood for these bond issues and this high cost of living and things of that kind. But now that the war is over, the people look to us to economize and cut down every single item of expenditure that it is possible for us to cut down, and if there is any item in this bill that can be cut out it should be cut out. If every item in it can be cut out, then it should be cut out.

I want also to speak of the effect of these great appropriations on the country. We have got to begin to reduce taxes, to take taxes off the backs of the people of this country, and we can not do it if we continue to pile up these large appropriations. If we continue to pile up these large appropriations, it will increase the burdens on the people, not only in the matter of taxation but also in the matter of living costs and such things as that. They are always reflected throughout the entire industrial system of the country, and I for one stand here ready to vote against every appropriation that can possibly be eliminated at this time.

The sugar situation in this country is a disgrace to this Government, and some one somewhere is responsible for it. Either there is a hoarding of sugar for higher prices or the Government has neglected to look out for the interests of the people of this country.

We have been devoting too much time to the welfare of other countries and too little time to the welfare of the people of this country.

The Attorney General informed us that when we amended the food-control act that he could reduce the high cost of living, but instead of the cost of living being reduced it has been greatly increased.

The people of this country stood patiently by and submitted to high prices during the war, but the people of this country feel that over a year after the war there should be a settling down to peace conditions.

The Government must take some drastic action so that the food prices may not only be reduced but that an equal distribution may be made of foodstuffs, and especially sugar.

I have known of a sugar shortage in Cleveland when there was none in Washington. Such conditions should not be tolerated, and the people of this country will not tolerate it much longer. There is more unrest in this country right now because of the food situation than there is because of the coal strike or the steel strike. There is no reason in the world for eggs being over a dollar per dozen or apples 10 cents apiece and other food products 100 per cent higher than they were before the war.

We must do a little house cleaning here at home, and take this food situation in hand and use some strong-arm methods if they are necessary.

I believe that sugar is being hoarded for a higher price, and I believe the Government should go after these hoarders, as I supposed they were when we passed the amendments to the food-control bill. I realize that the Government is very busy, but the most important thing now for this Congress and the Government to attend to is this food situation.

There seems to be no way to stop this steady increase in the price of food products unless the Government takes a hand. If the Department of Justice has not enough power to prosecute these profiteers, we should give it to them. If they have it and are not exercising it, we should get after them.

I consider the high cost of food products a more dangerous menace to this country than the I. W. W. or the Bolsheviki, and God knows they are bad enough.

Complaints come from all over the country of an increased price in food products. This high cost is because of a lack of sufficient supply or too much demand abroad, or it comes from cornering food products and forcing up the price. If there really is not enough supply, the Government should encourage it. If it is because the supply is held from the people and cornered, the Government should take hold of the matter and regulate the supply.

In any event, the Government is to blame, and unless we do something the people will hold us responsible.

If we would reduce the high cost of living in this country we would eliminate 98 per cent of the unrest in this country. The foundation of the argument of all these peace disturbers right now is the high cost of living.

Workingmen have stated over and over again that if we reduced the high cost of living they would be satisfied with their present wages, and I believe most of them would. Unless this gradual increase in the cost of living is stopped the time is not far distant when we will be in the same condition they are in in Russia. The Revolutionary fathers when they went to market were obliged to fill the bottom of their carts with money, and unless we do something to stop this manipulating of food prices we will be in the same condition.

I am in favor of the Government doing whatever is necessary to choke off this control of food prices and the distribution of the same, even though we have to use some unusual methods.

The Clerk read as follows:

To complete Field Artillery training centers:
At Camp Knox, Ky.: For the purchase of real estate, $811,338: Provided, No land shall be purchased west of Illinois Central Railroad tracks for construction as follows: For general construction work, $50,000; for completion Dixie Highway, $100,000; for plumbing, heating, and refrigeration, $25,000; total for Camp Knox, $986,338: Provided, That no part of the unexpended balances of appropriations heretofore made for the support of the Army shall be expended for construction at Camp Taylor, Ky., and the Secretary of War is hereby directed to sell the real estate and buildings of such camp to the best advantage of the Government, the proceeds of such sale to be covered into the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. OGDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. OGDEN: Page 7, line 8, after the word "Government," insert: "When Camp Knox is prepared to take over the Field Artillery School now being conducted there."

Mr. OGDEN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I offer does not interfere with the policy of the Military Affairs Committee to salvage Camp Taylor; it only defers or suspends the salvaging of that camp until such time as Camp Knox can be prepared to take over the activities thereof.

The committee in providing for the ultimate salvaging of Camp Taylor is following the trend of the military policy of the War Department, which is to abandon not only the small camps of recent construction, but the small post as well and to concentrate the troops in divisional camps. A large school of Field Artillery, assisted by an Artillery regiment, is being conducted at Camp Taylor, and, to avoid the interruption of the school and the necessary entailing of a large expense in relocating temporarily at some other place the present activities of this camp, it is wisdom to retain Camp Taylor during the time that will be required to complete Camp Knox. I might add that there are now at Camp Taylor three regiments of the First Brigade of the First Division, in command of Maj. Gen. Summerall, and that the closing down of the camp would require these regiments to be transferred to some other place not so conducive to the contentment and welfare of the personnel of that famous division.

Mr. Chairman, although Camp Taylor, of all the camps throughout the United States, has become the most popular with the soldiers, chiefly by reason of the interest which the citizens of Louisville have manifested in their comfort and condition, and although the camp has been made historic by the presence there of "the mighty" First Division and its distinguished commander, Gen. Summerall, whose personal opinion is, by the way, that the camp has a military importance and should not be abandoned, I shall not ask the Congress to go further than as indicated in my amendment.

Gen. Snow, Chief of Field Artillery, has advised me that Camp Knox is not ready for the transfer thereto of the Artillery School, and it is his opinion that, besides the fact of Camp Taylor being, of any camp in the country, the best adapted for the conducting of the school, the transfer of its activities to some other place while awaiting the completion of Knox would not only seriously interfere with the progress of the work, but would incur a much greater expense than would be entailed in retaining Taylor until Knox is ready. Therefore, my amendment is in the interest of economy to the Government and of the efficiency of the School of Artillery.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as to Camp Knox. This reservation is located in Kentucky, but is not in the district which I have the honor to represent. It comprises an area of a little less than 40,000 acres. After the establishment of the Chief of Field Artillery, it was recognized that, in divisional cantonments, Artillery brigades could not be efficiently trained as a component part of a division, and to correct this condition four Artillery brigade firing centers were established, and one of them was located at Camp Knox. As plans for training called for an increase in the number of brigades at Camp Knox, it was quite obvious that the original tract would be insufficient in area to accommodate same, and as a result the reservation was expanded to include the acreage I have mentioned. The construction of this camp was strictly a war-time project, but its retention as a permanent post is essential to the reorganization plan of the Army. Prior to the war our permanent construction was limited to six regiments. We then had six regiments of Field Artillery. This number was increased by the national-defense act to 21, an augmentation of 15 regiments. Now, the additional regiments must be provided with barracks as well as training fields; they are permanent regiments and a part of the Regular Army under the national-defense act. We have at Camp Bragg capacity for six regiments of Field Artillery, and at Camp Knox capacity for nine such regiments. If Camp Knox were to be abandoned the Government, besides losing millions of dollars in salvaging it, would be required to expend many millions of dollars in the construction of another camp. It is not a choice between Knox and no camp, but a decision between Knox, upon which an expenditure of $17,985,212.52 has already been made, and a new camp, the building of which would require a disbursement of eight or ten millions of dollars. Is there a Member of the House who would favor the junking of such valuable property in the presence of the Government's imperative need of same? A solution for the problem of reduction in public expenditure can not be found in salvaging property that is necessary for public use. And, in the case at hand, such action would clearly not be wisdom, when salvaging the camp at salvage price would necessarily be followed by building another camp to fill the identical purpose designed for the one dismantled.

But, Mr. Chairman, the $17,985,212.52 would not represent the Government's total investment, even should the camp be abandoned. The Government has entered into contracts and assumed obligations which we must carry out, irrespective of the destiny of this camp. Four hundred citizens have been dispossessed of their property. Some of these hold contracts evidencing our Government's solemn promise to pay them a fixed price; others have been brought into courts in condemnation actions to have the awards fixed for their lands. All of these people have meritorious claims and are entitled to be paid. No doubt many of them have suffered for want of means with which to purchase other homes.

Assuming that the Government would have the right to return these lands, which approximate in acreage 17,000 acres, in my opinion the bills for damages would approach the half-million dollar mark, and the Government would have nothing to represent this outlay of money.

The artillery practice, which extended over a period of more than five months preceding the signing of the armistice, was calculated to and did destroy valuable property. The destruction of woodlands and orchards by this means and the dismantling of the houses and buildings on these farms, together with the tearing of great holes in the fields, will enter into the bill for damages for which, under every rule of equity, the residents are entitled to be compensated. Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, the area of 19,000 acres which the Government now owns could not be used advantageously without acquiring the lands which I have been discussing, because these parcels or plats of land are scattered through the reservation, most of them being entirely surrounded by the land owned by the Government.

I have heard the suggestion that it would be economy to concentrate the Field Artillery regiments in one camp, and that Camp Bragg, in North Carolina, has sufficient area to serve the purpose. I wish to say in answer to this that our Army experts are not in accord with such a plan. It is their position that the area at Bragg is not extensive enough to afford the training accommodations, and also that it is necessary to have several locations in order to enable that branch of the service to take care of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, the Reserve Officers' Field Artillery, and the National Guard Field Artillery. We have 22 regiments in the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, and they are scattered throughout the United States. It is the plan to take the officers from the colleges which they are now attending and in the summer time send them to the Artillery camps, where they can receive practical work. We have over 7,000 Reserve Officers' Field Artillery, and these officers must be kept in touch with training.

By maintaining the camps at their present locations these officers can be taken care of better.

There is another potent reason for not concentrating these regiments in one camp. Whether Fort Sill, Okla., or Camp Bragg, N. C., or Camp Knox, Ky., should be decided on as the camp of concentration, the facilities which now exist at the two abandoned camps would salvage 90 per cent loss to the Government, and the providing of increased necessary constructions at the camp retained would entail an expenditure of many millions of dollars. These reasons are sufficient, in my opinion, for supporting the bill under consideration, which makes an appropriation to carry out the War Department's plan.

In passing, I wish to say that the Military Affairs Committee deserves to be congratulated on bringing before the House a bill which bears the earmarks of economy. The camps which are considered as being without military importance are directed by the bill to be salvaged and the appropriations made for the camps which are to be retained are more than one-half less than the amount asked for by the War Department. Camps Gordon and Jessup, in Georgia; Camp Pike, in Arkansas; Camp Eustis, in Virginia, and many others are to be salvaged.

I believe it is the sense of the people that all unnecessary and useless war-time projects should be abandoned and the expenditure of money limited to the activities and the construction indispensable to peace-time conditions. I am in full accord with legislation which has in view the reduction of public expenditures and the resultant lessening of the burdens of taxation. Camp Knox is a useful and necessary project.

Mr. TILSON. What have they as to artillery-range facilities at Camp Knox? Is there sufficient ground in the first place?

Mr. OGDEN. About 39,000 acres of ground in the reservation.

Mr. TILSON. Is it so located as to be suitable for artillery practice?

Mr. OGDEN. I understand from the War Department that it is one of the best locations that we now have—well adapted for artillery practice and the other uses in connection with a field artillery camp.

Mr. CANNON. How about West Point? Is not that a military proposition?

Mr. OGDEN. That is a part of this reservation.

Mr. CANNON. I thought it was right out of Louisville.

Mr. OGDEN. It is not a great distance.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Does the gentleman want to supplement his remarks to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] by suggesting that very likely the difference in ranges between Camp Knox and Camp Bragg is indicated by the proposed policy of the department to make the artillery practice at Camp Bragg of the brigade and heavier formation order, whereas Camp Knox will be the base school for batteries and regiments?

Mr. OGDEN. I thank the gentleman for his suggestion. I also understand that Camp Knox will be limited to the guns with ranges from 2,000 to 8,000 yards and Camp Bragg to the larger guns—the railroad artillery.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I did not mean to indicate that there would be absolutely nothing done in heavier calibers at Camp Knox, but that the general proposition was of a more limited character.

Mr. OGDEN. Yes; that is my understanding.

Mr. Chairman, I have addressed myself mainly to showing the necessity for the camp rather than to the amount of the appropriation required to complete it. I have chiefly concerned myself with the policy which ought to be declared toward the camp, feeling that if the amount appropriated should prove insufficient to carry out the policy to complete the camp the policy itself would take care of that part of it. I wish, however, to speak briefly upon the great need for the early completion of the Dixie Highway and the moral as well as the legal obligation resting on the Government to complete it.

We will hear in the debate on this section of the bill severe arraignment of those responsible for the expenditure of so much money on this highway. I would remind my colleagues, however, that the citizens of that vicinity were not responsible for any of the waste or extravagance in the building of the road, and the citizens are the ones who are suffering and who will continue to suffer until the road is finished. When the Government went there it found one of the best highways in the State of Kentucky, and, owing to the fact that 10 miles of this road was in the range of fire of artillery practice, the Government summarily closed the road to public travel and agreed to build another road at another location to take its place. It can not honorably decline to finish the work. It is bound by every right known to mankind to provide a highway equal to the one which it took possession of and destroyed.

But, Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to be understood as upholding the enormous expenditure of $1,485,430 which has already been made by the Government on the building of less than 8 miles of the road. Slightly more than 2 miles of the road remains yet to be built. I understand that some investigation is to be conducted into this expenditure, and no doubt in the course of time all of the facts will be developed and brought to the attention of the people. Whatever the facts may be, they have no bearing upon the obligation which the Government has assumed to build this road. The expenditure of the appropriation of $100,000 carried in this bill should be safeguarded against waste and extravagance, to the end that it may be sufficient to complete the road without an additional appropriation.

I submit that Camp Knox should be retained and the appropriation carried in the bill for its completion approved, and that the amendment which I have offered to retain Camp Taylor, pending the completion of Camp Knox, should be adopted.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition. I desire to call the attention of the committee, and to get some information from the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee relative to the figures carried in the committee amendments, as compared with those introduced in the original bill. I notice that the original bill calls for an expenditure for land for $1,200,426. The committee advises an expenditure of $811,338. Will that provide for the purchase of all of the land that we intend to buy in this place?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will say to the gentleman that it provides for the purchase of those tracts which are under contract east of the Illinois Central Railroad which bisects the original reservation taken possession of by the Government. The committee came to the conclusion that about 8,000 acres of land, which are under contract, which lie to the west of the Illinois Central Railroad, could well be dispensed with. They wanted to provide a short artillery range there, which we thought would be a duplication of ranges upon the east side, and at the suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] who made a personal investigation of the matter, the committee eliminated all land west of the Illinois Central tracks.

Mr. SNELL. Then the committee will not come before the House and ask for any further appropriations with which to buy further land in connection with Camp Knox?

Mr. ANTHONY. Not if we can get by with the elimination of all west of the railroad, as we are trying to do.

Mr. SNELL. The committee is going to stand upon that?

Mr. ANTHONY. Unless the Government is involved in such contractual obligations that it finds it can not get away from them.

Mr. SNELL. Then the committee is undecided?

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not know. We are trying to get away from it in this bill by reducing the appropriation.

Mr. SNELL. Coming to the appropriation of $50,000 for construction work, the original bill was $331,485. Does that mean that the $50,000 is just a starter here and that you will have to appropriate the full amount asked for later?

Mr. ANTHONY. There has been, I think, about $17,000,000 expended for construction at Camp Knox.

Mr. SNELL. I understood that it was a very large amount.

Mr. ANTHONY. Of course, these buildings are all of the temporary cantonment type. A great many were in partial stages of completion, from 10 to 50 or 65 per cent complete. The committee felt it unwise to provide for the building and completion of all those structures, and we have allowed the minimum sum of $50,000 with the idea that it would allow them to complete a few of the absolutely necessary temporary propositions.

Mr. SNELL. Does the gentleman think that that will carry it for some time without additional expenditures for construction?

Mr. ANTHONY. Of course, the gentleman understands that all construction done during the war was of a temporary type. We might get by for from three to five years with the expenditure only of money for repairs at the Army camps and cantonments, but at the end of that time it would be necessary to replace all of these temporary buildings by permanent buildings.

Mr. SNELL. That is what I want to find out. Will it be necessary to have permanent buildings for as many as were provided for by the temporary structures?

Mr. ANTHONY. Probably not as many at that specific camp, but let me say to the gentleman that when the Congress is brought face to face with the proposition of replacing the temporary construction at all of the National Army camps and cantonments which we are retaining with permanent construction the expense bill will be appalling, for it will run up to many hundred million dollars.

Mr. SNELL. That is what I want to get before the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is as near any figure as I can arrive at. The construction department has already notified us that if we keep in proper repair the temporary buildings at the Army camps and cantonments which we are retaining for the use of the Army of the size which we contemplate to make it, with proposed training activities, our repair bill will alone amount to about $60,000,000 a year.

Mr. SNELL. That is one reason why I want to keep the number of these camps under Government control as low as possible, because I know the expense is going to be enormous.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. SNELL. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CALDWELL. I would call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that in his reply he has overlooked the fact that part of the expense of this $50,000 is to make some of those houses which were on the land when we bought it habitable for our Army officers—to put in the necessary plumbing and sewerage.

Mr. SNELL. Here is an appropriation of $100,000 for the Dixie Highway, which originally was $226,100. What is the Dixie Highway, how long is it, and how much have we already expended upon it, and what is this additional $100,000 for?

Mr. ANTHONY. I would say to the gentleman that he has now struck a proposition which, in the opinion of the committee, smells to high heaven—if not of graft, at least of the most wanton waste and extravagance of any single proposition the committee ran across in all of its investigations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I yield first to the chairman of the committee, and then I will yield to the gentleman from Kentucky. Will the chairman of the committee give us the balance of the information in respect to the Dixie Highway and the money that has been expended upon it and the number of miles constructed?

Mr. ANTHONY. When the reservation was first taken possession of at Camp Knox there was a State highway which ran through the grounds, 8 or 10 miles in length. Because of military necessities it was decided to relocate that State highway. I think it was originally a macadamized road. When it was relocated the men who had charge of the relocation relocated it through a section of hills, where the expense of constructing the road was brought to a figure that is almost unbelievable in highway construction.

Mr. SNELL. What is the amount?

Mr. ANTHONY. The 8 or 10 miles constructed by the Government was at a cost of $155,000 a mile for construction when ordinarily in most of the States it could be built for $35,000 a mile. They asked for $250,000 to finish a mile and a half which is yet unfinished. The committee thought they ought at least to be ble to do it for $100,000, and so cut the appropriation.

Mr. FIELDS. Two and a half miles.

Mr. SNELL. The balance the gentleman thinks can be built for $35,000 a mile and——

Mr. ANTHONY. The balance is completed. The new survey is completed, all except 2½ miles or a fraction over that. That is around places almost solid rock and, of course, very difficult construction.

Mr. SNELL. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. McKENZIE. I would like to ask my colleague on the committee whether or not this road construction was inside the reservation or outside of it?

Mr. ANTHONY. It was inside, as I recall; the land taken over by the Government. Is not that correct? I may be mistaken.

Mr. OGDEN. A larger part of that was in the reservation.

Mr. SNELL. And some of it outside the reservation?

Mr. FIELDS. The original road was entirely in the reservation, but it runs through the firing range.

Mr. SNELL. Who had charge of the road that cost $155,000 a mile?

Mr. ANTHONY. The construction department of the Army.

Mr. SNELL. Built on a cost-plus contract or day labor? I would like to have one of those contracts if they happen to be floating about.

Mr. CALDWELL. No; they were not built on a cost-plus contract. They were built under the supervision of Army engineers.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman from New York inform me whether Wall Street was interested in this enormous expenditure for road building? I would like to find some place where Wall Street was not interested. Wall Street never got anywhere near like this——

Mr. SNELL. Well, if it is $155,000 a mile for the construction of a highway, we never had any such easy graft as that up in New York.

Mr. McKENZIE. May I ask the chairman of the committee another question?

Mr. SNELL. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. McKENZIE. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee to put in the RECORD somewhere something showing the amount of this road within the military reservation, and the amount outside of this reservation, and I would like to ask him now if he knows of any law on the statute books authorizing the construction of military roads outside of the military reservation?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; but I will say to the gentleman that during the war the War Department built roads inside and outside of military reservations wherever it served a military purpose for the Government. For instance, from here to Camp Humphreys, Va., the Government built 18 miles of concrete roadway on a public highway of Virginia.

Mr. McKENZIE. It is also true that they used soldiers at a dollar a day on that construction, working alongside of negroes at $3 or $4 a day.

Mr. SNELL. Was there any such reckless waste as this in the other work carried on at Camp Knox?

Mr. FIELDS. If the gentleman will permit, I will say that the Dixie Highway is a national highway, built in part out of Federal funds, and the War Department went in there and destroyed 11 miles of this road and they felt it was only right, and I think the people felt it was only right, that they should reconstruct that road.

Mr. OGDEN. It was necessary to abandon that part that interfered with the rifle range.

Mr. SNELL. I do not yield further. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee one more pertinent question; that is, if there is any other place where there was such reckless extravagance and waste of money in building highways as on this Dixie Highway?

Mr. ANTHONY. The committee found no such specific instance.

Mr. SNELL. This is one specific instance of reckless waste on the part of the War Department that I hope the investigating committee will investigate and bring all the facts before the House at an early date.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the situation in reference to the Dixie Highway it is this, that when it was determined to locate this camp at this particular place there was no idea the Dixie Highway would be destroyed. On the other hand, it was thought that the highway would be a great benefit to the camp and that it would give the means of getting in and out of it and was one of the reasons for selecting the site. It soon developed that a piece of this road was going to fall within the area of fire, and if they permitted the general public to use the road it would probably result in the killing of a great many of our people. It was a national highway partly built by national funds, and a board was sent down there to relocate the highway. In order to relocate they had to have the consent of the State authorities and the approval of the county authorities. After considerable negotiation it was finally agreed that the road was to be built along the line as it is now being constructed, and to do that they had to make a great cut through a hill. It was a gigantic piece of work, but it is one that will last for all time, and as long as the United States is the United States it will be an aid and assistance to the people who live along the great Dixie Highway, one of the greatest arteries of highway transportation in the United States, and while it has been expensive no graft has been found, and I do not believe any will be found.

Mr. FIELDS. The main road ran from the city of Louisville to the camp.

Mr. CALDWELL. It is the main road from the city of Louisville into the camp. It was necessary for the camp and will be necessary for the camp as long as the camp stays there. If this bill is passed and Camp Knox is taken, we will always use the Government road and material needed for the camp will go over it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALDWELL. I will.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Did the gentleman see the enormous cut which he mentioned?

Mr. CALDWELL. The gentleman from New York did, but the gentleman asking the question only saw it from a height of 5,000 feet in the air, for he was flying over it while I rode over it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. How deep a cut was it?

Mr. CALDWELL. I did not measure it with a foot rule.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Was there any cut at all?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Did it not run around the side of a hill and only for a short distance?

Mr. CALDWELL. It was for a considerable distance, and they had to cut off the side of the mountain.

Mr. FIELDS. The gentleman from Iowa will remember that the road is cut around a rocky hillside.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. How far was it?

Mr. FIELDS. Four or five miles.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They built about 40 miles of road, and paid $150,000 a mile for it, and a school child knows that it did not cost that much. And every member of the committee knows that there was graft there.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I challenge that statement.

Mr. CALDWELL. I will challenge that statement, too. I do not know and nobody else knows that there was graft there. If the gentleman knows it, he should have the men prosecuted.

Mr. KNUTSON. You can build a No. 1 road for $25,000 a mile.

Mr. FIELDS. I will say that if I knew of graft I would point out the individual connected with that graft, and I think the gentleman from Iowa ought to do the same thing.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I have asked the investigating committee to find the man.

Mr. FIELDS. If there is graft, I hope they will find him.

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to oppose the amendment.

We built cantonments and camps in this country for about two and one-half millions of troops. Now, I would like to know from this committee how many troops they are proposing to take care of in this country now. Are we going to have 596,000 of the Regular Army, which the War Department recommended to be taken care of, or are we going to have only 509,000, which, I understand, the chairman of the Military Committee wants? It seems to me that when we have had so much of this work done for the accommodation of at least two and one-half millions of troops who were better taken care of than any other army in the world, so far as cantonments are concerned, it would seem that this is a mighty good time to sell about three-fourths of all these camps that we have and apply the proceeds to the payment of such claims as the gentleman from New Jersey spoke of awhile ago, or all these other claims where the Government has taken over private property. That would seem to be the plain businesslike way, instead of putting more money into the plans and notions of the War Department.

Mr. CALDWELL. I am prepared to answer the question if the gentleman would like me to do so in his time.

Mr. HULINGS. If the gentleman knows.

Mr. CALDWELL. If I understand it, it is the policy of the committee to report a bill for only approximately 300,000 men in the Army. Personally I think it ought to be over 500,000 men, unless we have some kind of universal training. So far as disposing of all of this war material——

Mr. HULINGS. I prefer to take the opinion of a man like Gen. Wood, as to the number of soldiers, rather than the opinion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL].

Mr. CALDWELL. I am not far from Gen. Wood on that subject, although I do not agree with him in many things. But I do agree that we ought to have some kind of universal military training.

In reference to these camps——

Mr. HULINGS. I refuse to yield further.

Mr. CALDWELL. That is in keeping with all the Republican majority. Whenever they ask——

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman was going to reply to a question, and he makes a speech.

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Chairman, I know that many people on this side of the House ought, in his opinion, to go to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL] for information about military affairs, and those who seek him will probably secure a great fund of information. If I do not go to learn from him what I ought to believe and know about military matters, I hope he and the House will excuse me.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I believe the debate has been exhausted on this amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky.

The CHAIRMAN. The debate has been exhausted.

Mr. ANTHONY. Then I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALDWELL. I have a perfecting amendment in the matter of punctuation of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment.

Mr. CALDWELL. On line 24, after the word "tracks," insert a semicolon.

Mr. ANTHONY. The correction should be made.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will make the correction. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. TINCHER: Pages 6 and 7, line 25, after the word "work" strike out "for completion Dixie Highway $100,000."

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I do not care to discuss this amendment. I think it has already been discussed to such an extent that every member of the committee feels that it is time to stop graft on the Dixie Highway, and the only way to stop it is to stop appropriating money for that graft. And the only thing this amendment seeks to do is to strike out "$100,000" appropriation for work on the Dixie Highway.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to oppose the amendment of the gentleman of Kansas [Mr. TINCHER]. I stated here awhile ago that the Dixie Highway runs through this reservation. It was necessary to change it, because the original highway through the reservation passed through the range of fire. Hence the necessity of a new survey.

They have completed all but 2½ miles of this new survey. This $100,000 is for the completion of the 2½ miles. It is not only a State highway but an interstate highway, and traffic is blocked because of the uncompleted part of it, which was of great inconvenience to the people of the entire country. It is an important road. The Government has destroyed the road, and I appeal to the reason of the Membership of the House as to whether or not it should complete this small gap of 2½ miles which is still uncompleted.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIELDS. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman states there is yet 2½ miles of the road to be completed, and this bill proposes to appropriate $100,000 to complete this road?

Mr. FIELDS. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. What is the nature of the topography of that country which makes it necessary that this road should cost such an unheard-of amount?

Mr. FIELDS. I will say to the gentleman that the unfinished portion must be constructed along the side of a steep hill, which is almost solid rock.

Mr. KNUTSON. In that event could we not save money by putting an airplane service across that cliff instead of finishing this road? [Laughter.]

Mr. FIELDS. I will say to the gentleman that we in Kentucky have not learned to operate aeroplanes, as have the people in the gentleman's State, so that we could not ride across that cliff in aeroplanes.

Mr. KNUTSON. But this is up in the moonshine country, is it not?

Mr. FIELDS. Not altogether.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIELDS. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him whether there is not, in addition to this Dixie Highway, railroad transportation from Louisville to the post or some convenient site adjacent to it?

Mr. FIELDS. Yes. The Illinois Central Railroad runs through or near the post.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. So that it is a convenient location, where the traffic and supplies intended for the Army may be taken from Louisville over the railroad?

Mr. FIELDS. Yes. Supplies may be taken by the railroad. But that is not the question involved here. The Government has destroyed or changed 11 miles of the Dixie Highway, and 2½ miles of the new survey is unconstructed or uncompleted.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. And they have replaced the other part of the road with the small Monte Cristo contribution that has been made?

Mr. FIELDS. They have replaced all but 2½ miles.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. That 2½ miles is part of the 11 which they promised to replace?

Mr. FIELDS. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, referring alone to the cost of construction under the most favorable circumstances on alluvial soil, with no rock or anything of the kind, it is costing about $40,000 per mile to build a 16-foot wide cement road.

Mr. FIELDS. Yes. The engineers agree upon the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I demand a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 17, noes 58.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

At Camp Bragg, N. C., for the purchase of real estate, $1,128,000; for construction as follows: For hospital, painting and carpentry, $5,000; for glazing one hangar, $1,000; for siding on administration building, $1,500; for gravel roads in reservation, $10,000; for gravel road to Fayetteville, N. C., $25,000; for incidental work and miscellaneous, $2,500; total for Camp Bragg, $1,173,000: Provided, That no part of the unexpended balances of appropriations heretofore made for the support of the Army shall be expended for construction at Camp Eustis, Va., and the Secretary of War is hereby directed to sell the real estate and buildings of such camp to the best advantage of the Government, the proceeds of such sale to be covered into the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I am very sorry to see disputes arising between members of this great committee over that road, and the difficulty they have had in adjusting the matter and of finding the man who got away with the $150,000. I suppose there is a man on the committee who can find that fellow, because he is evidently a mind reader. I find here in the RECORD of yesterday a statement by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], in which he says:

I can not quite agree with my friend from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] that we do not need any training of soldiers in time of peace or that any training that we may be able to give them in time of peace is practically useless, nor am I quite willing to go with him so far in the other direction as to take all of Mexico for a military training or drill ground for the training of our soldiers.

Inasmuch as I never made any statement of either kind, the gentleman must evidently be a mind reader, and as I never had such a thought, the gentleman evidently made the mistake of reading the wrong man's mind. [Laughter.] If he will get after the right man he may be able to find the one who got away with that $150,000.

Mr. TILSON. "The gentleman from Connecticut" is not a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, in the first place. In the next place he was following the gentleman from Kansas immediately, and had the impression fresh in his mind that the gentleman from Kansas had said something like that in effect, and also what the gentleman has just quoted in regard to Mexico.

Mr. LITTLE. The gentleman from Connecticut is an emeritus member of the Committee on Military Affairs and a past master in all its methods of information. I am sorry he is off the committee now, because when he was on the committee he was a very useful member. I said yesterday, before the gentleman spoke, that every boy ought to have an opportunity, before he goes to war, to learn how to march, and learn how to carry a gun, and learn how to take care of himself. I said there were certain things necessary to make a soldier, and that it takes time. I excepted from that general rule those in the Engineer branch and in the Artillery, who, of course, require exceptional technical training. I think it is the fact that we are not as far apart from each other as we sometimes think in our views on military matters, because I am convinced that the ultramilitarist, when he is toned down, is found not to want to kill everybody, and those who are accused by the ultramilitarist of being pacifists are really just as much concerned in having the country prepared for war when it comes as are the militarists. The gentleman from Connecticut went on to say that in the Spanish-American War his own regiment never had a chance to fire a rifle until it had been in camp for months, and the war was over. Now, one of the first things I did——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LITTLE. The first thing I did when our regiment got to San Francisco was to go to general headquarters and ask that we be put upon target practice. I think the principal thing for the soldier is to learn how to shoot people, and hit them, and hurt them. I talked with a young man last night who was a top sergeant in the Argonne, and he said that one of the great difficulties there was that they never established any connection up and down the line. He said that if they put up a telephone, down it went the first thing you knew. An orderly would be told to go back and find the brigade headquarters, and the boy would say, "Where is it?" and his superior would say, "I don't know; go back and find it." That is the way that battle was fought. But the boy said something that I have been trying to tell you people for two years. He said, "If we had had one more fight like the Argonne we could have maintained our liaison and maintained our relations with headquarters and whipped the world," for then they would have learned by that battle how to fight the next one. And the boy was as right as a rabbit. That is the point I am trying to make. But as it was that battle was just a continual jumble. I heard the division commander of that boy's division tell about it, and he did not know nearly as much about it as the boy whom he had been training did.

You have got to have some preparation, gentlemen, and I do not like people to put me in the attitude of saying you have not, when I spent six months doing nothing else but training men for war in 1898. The boy explained the point exactly, that the first battle would have been a preparation for the second battle and they would have known how to fight. Just because I spent a couple of thousand dollars during the last two years on military schools it does not necessarily follow that I think the American taxpayers should spend a billion dollars a year on such enterprises, when we have 4,000,000 of the best-trained soldiers the world ever saw with us now.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLAND of Virginia: Page 7, line 18, strike out the colon and insert a period. Strike out the remainder of the paragraph to and including line 25.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, this amendment eliminates that portion of the bill which provides for the abandonment of Camp Eustis.

Before entering into a discussion of that proposition, I want to say that on yesterday the impression may have been obtained from my remarks that no further sum would be necessary for this camp if it were to be used as a permanent garrison point. That impression is erroneous. The information in my possession from Gen. Hagood, who is in charge of this camp, shows that for permanent garrison purposes there would be required from $2,500,000 to $3,000,000 or $4,000,000.

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. Yes; although I have only five minutes.

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. This amendment does not affect Camp Bragg in any way?

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. Not in the slightest. It simply strikes out the remainder of the paragraph.

The point I want to make is this: You have an act of Congress which prohibits the War Department from expending any other moneys on this camp. That is not affected in any way by this bill except as the payments are specifically authorized under this act.

In the second place, there is not a provision in this bill for the expenditure of any other money than is absolutely necessary to make effective the amendment that was adopted this morning for the purchase of land.

If you strike out this provision in the bill, you leave Camp Eustis as a proposition to be considered in the future.

Now, gentlemen, I submit to you that with all due respect to the distinguished gentlemen of the Military Affairs Committee, for whom I have the greatest respect, it is a little hasty to order that this camp shall be salvaged, when not 10 per cent of its value will be recovered, and convert the proceeds into the Treasury, without once going upon the land or without procuring the testimony of an officer of the War Department. All in the world that my amendment does now is to provide that you shall give the Military Affairs Committee an opportunity to investigate this thing, as you would investigate any business proposition that was to be considered by you in your personal affairs.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. In one moment. I have very little time. The strategic importance of this camp will be shown when you remember that it is located in a vicinity that has participated in every war that has ever been fought in the history of America. [Applause.] It was here that the Revolutionary War was won, within 7 miles of this camp. It was here that there was great fighting in the Civil War. It was here in 1898 that you established one of your camps from which to send troops to Cuba. It was from this point or near this point that you sent your troops to Cuba when they had the intervention there. It was from a point in this immediate vicinity that more soldiers went to France than from any other point in America save the port of New York.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I regard the amendment which the committee has made for the salvaging of Camp Eustis, in connection with the appropriations that we are making for Camp Bragg, as one of the most important provisions we have put in this bill. The reason for it is that the operations for which they propose to use Camp Bragg and for which they propose to use Camp Eustis are, in my opinion, so related that they can be consolidated at one point.

At Camp Bragg we are providing the longest artillery range that they will be able to have at any place in this country. The distances there are so great that they will be able to fire the artillery of large caliber which has been developed during this war over ranges of 28 miles and still have a back stop of 10 or 12 miles against a range of mountains for safety purposes.

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. Gen. Pershing was at Camp Bragg last week, and he made the statement that it was the most delightful location of any camp in the service for long-range firing.

Mr. ANTHONY. At Camp Eustis the Coast Artillery propose to establish a school for the training of certain sections of the Coast Artillery in handling large-caliber guns mounted upon railroad mounts. We believe that these guns can be handled and training received in firing at Camp Bragg. We want, if possible, to eliminate the necessity of maintaining two large establishments for practically the same purpose. The only argument for the retention of Camp Eustis is that water targets may be afforded for the large 14-inch guns mounted on railroad mounts.

Now, if the statement made to me by high authority in the War Department is correct that our coast defenses are now practically obsolete and must in the future be supplanted by large-caliber guns mounted on railroad mounts to make them mobile, able to be transported to any part of the coast that is threatened, there is no reason for anchoring at any one place the use of these large guns mounted on railroad mounts, because in the process of modernizing our coast defenses there will be spurs of railroad track run into available positions at every coast defense point where such construction is possible, so that the railroad mounts can be used for target purposes at any number of places.

As a result of the war and as a result of the policy of the War Department we are completing the building of 90 of these big 14-inch guns to be mounted on railroad cars, in addition to about 40 immense 12-inch mortars that are to be mounted on railroad mounts.

I do not believe it is necessary for this Government to waste money by keeping all of those immense engines of war in active commission or in active practice. I suggested to the chief of the Coast Artillery the other day that instead of keeping them in active use they should be stored away at some available point, all except a few of them, which may be used for the practical work of training and practice. They propose, if we allow them to go ahead with the development of Camp Eustis, to first call upon us for $4,000,000, as I read it from the estimates, for further construction. I think we would better look into the matter further before going into such expense.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken, and the Chair declared that the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard upon the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already put the question, and the gentleman is too late.

Mr. CALDWELL. Then, Mr. Chairman, I demand a division, if the gentleman from Virginia is not to be permitted to speak.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York demands a division.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, are we voting for or against Camp Eustis?

The CHAIRMAN. To vote aye would be to vote for Camp Eustis.

Mr. CANNON. The ayes are for it and the noes against it?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I just wanted to know when to stand up.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 20, noes 54.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York demands tellers. Those favoring tellers will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HARRISON: Page 7, line 25, after the words "receipts," insert: "But such action shall not be taken by the Secretary of War until there shall be provided at some other place now owned by the War Department, facilities, including water ranges for moving targets, for the training of railway artillery, and for other Army activities now at Camp Eustis."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, on that I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. ANTHONY. That it is legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think that that point of order would lie.

Mr. ANTHONY. Then that it is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia wish to be heard upon the proposition?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, this simply provides that until the activities now carried on at Camp Eustis are provided for at some other place, Camp Eustis shall be continued. It is in exact accord with what the committee has already done in respect to Camp Taylor, I think it was, or Camp Knox.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia is in order. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment is simply to carry out what has already been done in regard to the provision respecting Camp Knox and Camp Taylor. I provide for continuing activities at Camp Eustis until suitable provision has been made elsewhere for such work. The fact about the matter is that the work at Camp Eustis has never been investigated by the subcommittee. Furthermore, the Committee on Military Affairs has never heard a word of testimony in regard to the abandonment of Camp Eustis. The camp is utilized by the Coast Artillery, an entirely different branch of the Army from any other branch of it. It is in no way connected with the Field Artillery. It is a branch unto itself. It is a highly specialized branch of the service, requiring special training. I am informed by Gen. Coe that the camp is essential for the use of the Army without regard to the number of men that we propose to have. There is no money asked; not a dollar. The only proposition that is now up for this committee to consider is whether or not until the Army shall have an opportunity to establish a training base for the Coast Artillery elsewhere, the activities at Camp Eustis shall be continued.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. ANTHONY. Does not the gentleman think that the whole matter is largely dependent on whether we consider these big guns on railroad mounts mobile artillery, coming under the jurisdiction of the Field Artillery of the Army, or whether they are considered as fixed coast-defense guns, and properly under the Coast Artillery?

Mr. HARRISON. I think the gentleman from Kansas may be right, but why pass on it now? Why not have the opportunity of securing expert advice?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The function of the Coast Artillery heretofore has been harbor defense.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Coast defense is a misnomer. Our defenses are really harbor defenses and are fixed. This railroad transportation for artillery to ply between posts on the coast is comparatively new, is it not?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If they say they need Camp Eustis where they may practice railroad artillery firing, why can they not do that at many of the points between the posts that we have now where there is railway connection?

Mr. HARRISON. They may be able to do it, but I think we ought to at least have testimony as to what is necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARRISON. The point I make is that we ought not here, haphazard, in this sort of way, without any consideration or advice upon the part of the military authorities of the country, to cut down their training. That is what it amounts to.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. What particular function does the Coast Artillery perform that renders it necessary that it should have training apart from that which it can get in the posts where it is now assembled?

Mr. HARRISON. It wants water target practice. I have been informed that to remove these big guns from Camp Eustis would cost over $500,000.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. But it is the very function of the Coast Artillery to defend the coasts, and our posts are located on the coast.

Mr. HARRISON. This is simply a training camp——

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Yes; but why do they not train at the places which they now have?

Mr. HARRISON. They have got the training facilities here; why move them?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The point, as I understand it, in the practical use of coast artillery is that it is not a mobile arm. It does not move itself in divisions and similar units for field evolutions. Its larger purpose is served by its fire control and its gunnery.

Mr. HARRISON. But it is not practiced at Camp Bragg, where it is intended to carry it.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. But the purpose is served by giving——

Mr. HARRISON. If the gentleman will permit, does not the gentleman think before we destroy Camp Eustis that we ought to have a place provided where this work can be carried on?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. That is the point I am trying to suggest by my question—that we seem already to have provided it. The experience of coast artillery in this World War, when they went to the field and took charge of the heavier calibers of field artillery, is not a fact upon which we should base future legislation, because the purpose of coast artillery is for coast defense and not for field artillery——

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. They went to the field at that time because we were short of field artillery.

Mr. CALDWELL. Is it not a fact that the matter of shooting on water and the matter of shooting on land are two different things, and that it is more deceptive on water than it is on land——

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Oh, exactly, but——

Mr. CALDWELL. Well——

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman has asked a question; now let me answer it. When distances are known, the question of whether you can see the objective point with your eye is not involved, because it becomes a mathematical proposition. They might be firing at indefinite distance——

Mr. HARRISON. I can not yield further.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield further.

Mr. HARRISON. I want just a few minutes of my time to conclude what I have to say. The point I desire to bring to the attention of the committee is this, that we are interfering with the organization of the Army as advocated by the generals of the Army, the experts of the Army. It is something more than abandoning a camp field; it is breaking up a branch of the service and impairing its efficiency. At least, it may be; and we have made no personal investigation nor received any testimony from any source to guide us. I understand Gen. Pershing will visit this camp in a few days on an official inspection, and it seems to me to be the part of wisdom and common sense to hear what he may have to say. Furthermore, my amendment simply postpones the removal of the Army activities at Camp Eustis therefrom until the War Department has provided a more suitable place where these activities can be carried on. Now, I can not understand why there should be any objection to that proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. HARRISON) there were—ayes 39, noes 51.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SIGNAL CORPS.

To complete Signal Corps camp at Camp Alfred Vail, N. J.: For the purchase of real estate, $110,000.

Mr. EAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. EAGAN: Page 8, after the period in line 7, insert the following:

"That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to expend such portion of the unexpended balances of the appropriations made by the second urgent deficiency act dated October 6, 1917, for terminal storage and shipping buildings as may be necessary for the payment of awards to cover the acquisition of the following described real estate which has been requisitioned under the provisions of section 10 of the act approved August 10, 1917 (40 Stat. L., p. 276), to wit: Two thousand and eighty-nine acres of land, more or less, and appurtenances thereto belonging, situated near Metuchen, in townships of Woodbridge and Raritan, county of Middlesex, State of New Jersey, and now occupied as an ordnance depot and known as Raritan Arsenal.

SEC. 2. That where the title to the above-described real estate sought to be acquired by such requisitions, already served, proves to be defective by reason of the fact that all necessary parties in interest were not served with requisitions or for any other reason, the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to purchase or to acquire by condemnation or otherwise such outstanding titles as are necessary to completely vest the fee simple title to such real estate in the United States of America."

Mr. EAGAN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is in the same language as the bill H. R. 9144, introduced by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. KAHN] on September 9, 1919, in compliance with a letter from the Secretary of War dated September 6, 1919, which I read:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, September 6, 1919.

To the CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
House of Representatives.

SIR: There is submitted herewith the draft of a bill to provide for the completion of the purchase of certain real estate for ordnance storage at Raritan Arsenal.

The act approved July 11, 1919 (public No. 7, 66th Cong., H. R. 5227), will prevent the payment of awards in requisition proceedings for the acquisition of titles to lands embraced within the site of Raritan Arsenal and Ordnance Depot, situated near Metuchen, N. J., where the Government has expended approximately $9,500,000 for permanent improvements. The completion of the purchase of this site is essential for the protection of the Government's costly investment. The payment of the awards, made or to be made, in cases where the land has been requisitioned, is necessary in order to protect not only the interests of the Government but also to afford relief to the original owners of the property, possession of whose lands and whose titles has been taken under the requisition proceedings. The titles of the claimants of many parcels of the land embraced in this site have been found to be so defective that in all probability it will be necessary hereafter to institute condemnation proceedings in order that a fee-simple title may be vested in the United States.

Raritan Arsenal can not be considered an industrial plant in the sense of the exception in the provision of H. R. 5227, which prohibits the purchase of real estate. Therefore it will require congressional action to permit the consummation of this transaction, which has been delayed principally on account of the difficulty of ascertaining the true owners of the property.

Favorable consideration of the legislation proposed is earnestly requested.

Very truly, yours, NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

I understand that the materials in the buildings on the ground embraced in the Raritan Arsenal are worth upward of $340,000,000, ordnance, ammunition, and so on. I also understand the Raritan Arsenal is to be permanent, in which to put reserves for ammunition and ordnance in case of emergency. I am told by the officials of the War Department that unless provision is made for this storage to be continued there that it will be very expensive, if not impossible, to consider the removal and provide elsewhere for the storage of such ordnance and ammunition.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman a question. How much money—I understand this is to utilize some appropriation that has been made?

Mr. EAGAN. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I would like to know how much it is contemplated?

Mr. EAGAN. I asked that question, and they tell me approximately $650,000. Of course, an accurate estimate can not be made, because some land must be acquired by condemnation.

Mr. CANNON. How much of the five or ten millions appropriated would be available under the amendment of the gentleman?

Mr. EAGAN. I take it, of course, whatever would be required would be available. I do not know there is enough available for the purpose.

Mr. CANNON. Then nobody knows whether it is $600,000 or $100,000 or $6,000,000?

Mr. EAGAN. The War Department advised me that they believe that will be the amount—$650,000.

Mr. CANNON. Six million dollars?

Mr. EAGAN. No; $640,000 or $650,000.

Mr. CANNON. That is just a guess, I take it, at present prices. Is there any reason why we could not wait a year or two and let the Democrats and Republicans fight out about the increase of taxation and the increase of the dollar as compared with other credits? If we do not make this appropriation now, will we be defeated in a war hereafter?

Mr. EAGAN. Of course, the lands of these owners have been requisitioned, and it would seem to me some effort should be made to enable them to get their money when the War Department determines that they are entitled to it.

Mr. CANNON. This is to care for land that is to be condemned?

Mr. EAGAN. The land to be condemned, of course, is that to which they will be unable to get, I suppose, a clear title.

Mr. CANNON. You would not need this appropriation until after the condemnation was made?

Mr. EAGAN. Frankly, I am not advised as to the details of this matter. This was to be handled by my colleague from New Jersey, Mr. ACKERMAN. I do not know whether he is on the floor now or not.

Mr. CANNON. I am seeking the information. I have not the floor. The gentleman has it.

Mr. FIELDS. Have the landowners been dispossessed? Have they been moved off their land?

Mr. EAGAN. I am not informed as to that. But it may be, of course, that that is the case.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. EAGAN and Mr. CALDWELL demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 20, noes 28.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

CHEMICAL WARFARE SERVICE.

To complete the purchase of real estate at Salt Well site, Midland, Mich., $3,072.

Edgewood Arsenal, Md., for reservoir and pipe lines, $7,500.

Total for Chemical Warfare Service, $10,572.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, is not the question now on agreeing to the committee amendment, which strikes out and inserts?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. The question now is on agreeing to the committee amendment, which strikes out and inserts the language we have just adopted.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

AIR SERVICE.

To complete Air Service fields, as follows:

For hangars for storage at Aviation General Supply Depot at Fairfield, Ohio, $5,500.

For hangars for storage at Aviation General Supply Depot at San Antonio, Tex., $23,000.

For completion of barracks and quarters at Fords Island, Hawaii, $35,000.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman as to this appropriation at Selfridge Field, if that is for the purchase of the field or is it to spend more money on land that does not belong to the Government?

Mr. ANTHONY. The item provides for general construction.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I want to state to the chairman, for the benefit of the committee, that we have spent millions of dollars on Selfridge Field; that the land is below the level of the lake; that we built dikes around it and have an expensive drainage system to keep it dry; that the title of the land is not in the Government. We are paying a high rental for this property, and I advise strongly against any more expenditure on Selfridge Field until we know what we are going to do with it.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Certainly.

Mr. SNELL. What do we own there if we do not own the land?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. We rent it. We own the buildings.

Mr. SNELL. How many buildings?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I think it runs two to three million dollars' worth. I do not know.

Mr. ANTHONY. There have been $2,325,000 expended for construction.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That does not include the drainage of land or the building of the dikes.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is entirely new matter which the gentleman has suggested. I will say the land involved there is 640 acres, and the present status is that it is in court. So they have not come to us yet for authority to purchase the land and provide the money.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I will state to the distinguished gentleman that we are supposed to pay an enormous price for this building after spending a high price to improve it, and paying high rental.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. What is this field?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It is a flying field.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Why did they expend money for expensive buildings?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. They do not need it at that point. There is no reason for spending millions of dollars on Selfridge Field.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is what occurred to me.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It is one of the outrages of the $640,000,000.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Certainly.

Mr. ANTHONY. In the plan for the retention of a certain number of air fields I understand that Selfridge is on the list for retention. It is one of the most northernmost of the flying fields that has been retained in the Central West, and it occurred to some of the members of the committee that it would be advisable to have a flying field somewhere in that locality. And because of its location, and from the fact that we have spent two or three million dollars on the land, we thought it would be a better thing to proceed there.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Because we have spent so much let us hold this back until we find we will have to buy this land. Let us hold back the $35,000 until we find we will have to buy this land.

Mr. ANTHONY. The $35,000 that is provided in the bill is for the purpose of continuing work on the sewage disposition plant, which they regard as absolutely necessary.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Suppose we spend that, do you want to present them with $35,000 more?

Mr. ANTHONY. The War Department is not to return it. They are going ahead to determine the legal status of the land.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. There is no question as to the legal status of the land.

Mr. ANTHONY. Oh, yes; there is. It is now in the court.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. For condemnation proceedings?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. There is no question of the legal status. I have information that they are asking an enormous price for the land even after we improve it.

Mr. LAYTON. Does the gentleman from Kansas think that he knows the mind of the War Department as to what they are going to do in this respect?

Mr. ANTHONY. We have their recommendation.

Mr. LAYTON. They say that they are going to scrap this Delaware railroad proposition.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I press my motion to a vote. I moved to strike it out. I moved to strike out lines 5 and 6 on page 9.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 19, noes 30.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For Chanute Field, Rantoul, Ill., $208,000.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do this, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of making an inquiry of the chairman as to the necessity for this field. This is another flying field?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes; at Rantoul, in the State of Illinois. It is one of the most important flying fields that the Government has. It is located immediately adjacent to the University of Illinois. The scientific portion of that university has taken a great interest in aviation. Its college professors and scientific men have been of great aid in the development of aviation there. The field is regarded as an ideal one. Geographically it is well located. I believe the department has wisely concluded to retain it as part of the chain of flying fields from east to west.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I know the lay of the land in that vicinity, and it is level, of course. It is nearly as level as a floor. But is not that pretty high-priced land to take for a flying field? I should judge it is worth several hundred dollars an acre. Is it not?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes; $305, I understand, they are proposing to pay for it. In our investigations we found that invariably the aviation people picked out these level pieces of land, frequently in river bottoms, and often they are the richest and most fertile lands in the neighborhood.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think I could find land in Illinois that was not worth one-fourth of that.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not know of any land in Illinois that could be bought for one-fourth of that.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; and places where the land is practically nothing but sand. I do not think that such an expensive location ought to have been taken for a flying field in the first instance.

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Chairman, I see in the report here, as to the present status, that the land to be purchased there is 640 acres, at $305. That is an aggregate of $208,000. Then the cost to complete the project, the amount to complete the purchase of the land, is $208,000 more. Is not that $416,000 for 640 acres of land?

Mr. ANTHONY. It is my understanding that the purchase of the land completes the project.

Mr. HULINGS. How much land?

Mr. ANTHONY. Six hundred and forty acres.

Mr. HULINGS. That is over $700 an acre.

Mr. ANTHONY. Oh, no.

Mr. HULINGS. It is $460,000 for 640 acres.

Mr. ANTHONY. No; $305 an acre.

Mr. HULINGS. It will not take more than half that.

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman perhaps confuses the duplication of language in the line. It means that is the last appropriation that is asked for to complete it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I am an alumnus of the University of Illinois, and am very much interested in the work which it does. I have been very much interested in the Aviation Service in the Army from its inception. But I can not imagine anything more ridiculous than for the Aviation Service to go out in the best corn belt in the world, where farm land is higher priced than anywhere else in the world, to buy land for the purpose of preventing them from raising corn on it, in order to have an aviation field not large enough for aviation service.

For this land it is proposed to pay $305 an acre. If the Government gets the land it is advisable to carry out the contract, because undoubtedly with the present increase in prices this land is worth in the market from $490 to $500 an acre. But how ridiculous it is for the Government, for the purpose of having an Air Service, to seek out land which is the most expensive in the world, and which could be better used to raise produce. The Air Service does not care how much corn is worth or how much it costs, or how much wheat is worth or what it costs. They do not care anything about the high cost of living except as it applies to themselves individually, and they go out on the prairies of Illinois, right in the midst of the corn belt, and buy land at these high prices, and then say that it is because it is close to a university. Well, about the last thing that the University of Illinois ought to do is to take an interest in the Aviation Service. There are many things that the university can do more profitably than that. Their help during the war may have been advisable, as everybody's help was, but to locate a permanent flying field in this place is the very height of foolishness.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For Brooks Field, San Antonio, Tex., $140,446.
For Kelly Field No. 2, San Antonio, Tex., $349,686.33.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. TILSON. I wish to ask the acting chairman of the committee the reason for these large appropriations for two flying fields in the same locality. There is one at Brooks Field, San Antonio, $140,000 plus, and one at Kelly Field No. 2, San Antonio, Tex., $349,000 plus.

Mr. ANTHONY. As is well known, during the war Texas was liberally endowed with the establishment of flying fields. They were scattered all over the State.

Mr. TILSON. These seem to be somewhat concentrated in one place.

Mr. ANTHONY. Three of them were concentrated at San Antonio. We went there to visit those establishments, and we found they were some of the best located of any that we had seen, with millions of dollars on permanent improvements already expended thereon; and inasmuch as the Government had spent this money on land which it had contracted to buy, it was obviously a businesslike thing and a sensible thing to do to go ahead and complete the purchase in order to protect the interests that the Government already had there. It is now proposed to use Brooks Field as a balloon station.

Kelly Field will be used as one of our principal flying centers. There are $4,000,000 worth of buildings already erected on Kelly Field.

Mr. TILSON. What kind of a balloon school is to be established there?

Mr. ANTHONY. Not a balloon school but a balloon station. They intend to construct beds for the balloons. I believe they call them beds. It is to be a station both for dirigibles and for observation balloons.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I yield to the gentleman from the San Antonio district to explain.

Mr. BEE. I am not going into a defense of the appropriation, because we believe that the propositions are absolutely meritorious and do not need any defense. But in answer to the question of the gentleman from Connecticut, Brooks Field is separate and distinct from Kelly Field. Aviation has been carried on at Kelly Field since 1917. Brooks Field is a balloon school. It was used as a balloon school during the entire period leading up to the armistice. It was not a proposition that came up at that time. It was in use for some time prior thereto.

I present this fact to the judgment of the committee, that it has been demonstrated that under existing conditions the dirigible is considered the most useful aerial machine for the character of warfare that might be contemplated on the Mexican border, because of the topography of the country and the large timbered areas and the land covered with mesquite and cactus in that country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BEE. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion has already been made.

Mr. BEE. I just wanted to make this explanation.

Mr. KITCHIN. I should like to ask what became of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to strike out Chanute Field, at Rantoul, Ill.?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I did not offer the amendment, Mr. Chairman, because just a moment before the gentleman from New York had offered an amendment to strike out the appropriation for Selfridge Field, Mount Clemens, Mich., of $35,000, and we had had a division on it, and every Democrat in the House voted to retain it, and every Republican except three or four voted to strike it out, and I did not want another such pitiable exhibition in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. KITCHIN. Nobody made out as good a case against Selfridge Field as the gentleman made out against Chanute Field, at Rantoul.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, yes; they did. The gentleman from North Carolina was not here. A better case was made out.

Mr. KITCHIN. We are all with you on this point after the strong argument made by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am in favor of striking it out.

Mr. KITCHIN. I am, too.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If the gentleman had been here, he would have voted to keep it in, just as he did before on Selfridge Field in Michigan.

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, no; I voted against Michigan.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No; the gentleman did not vote against Michigan. The gentleman voted in favor of keeping it in. The Republicans voted to strike it out, but you gentlemen on that side, who had never had any idea of economy, voted to keep it in.

Mr. KITCHIN. I ask unanimous consent that the committee return to the item for Chanute Field at Rantoul, Ill.

Mr. CRAGO. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. SNELL. I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill in regard to the price that we are paying for this land for Kelly Field No. 2 near San Antonio. Perhaps the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAGO] can tell me.

Mr. CRAGO. All the information I can give the gentleman is that when we were at this point we made investigation as to the price of land and were assured by people in whom we had confidence that this was a reasonable price. In fact, land around San Antonio is increasing in value very rapidly.

Mr. SNELL. Has it increased because we have located these fields there?

Mr. CRAGO. That may be part of it, but there are other activities there. The city of San Antonio is growing very rapidly.

Mr. SNELL. What is the assessed valuation of property in this vicinity?

Mr. CRAGO. I do not know, nor do I think that would be any fair criterion, because you never know on what basis the assessment is made.

Mr. SNELL. Would it not be something on which to base an estimate?

Mr. CRAGO. It would not be in Pennsylvania, because our assessed valuation is always far below the selling price.

Mr. SNELL. I will admit that, but I would like to know if lands there are assessed anywhere near $200 an acre.

Mr. CRAGO. This is fine land, lying 3 or 4 miles from the great city of San Antonio, and you can readily recognize the fact that with railroad facilities and macadamized roads, and everything of that kind, with the land practically contiguous to the city of San Antonio, it is valuable land. Kelly Field No. 2 is really the flying part of Kelly Field, Field No. 1 being used for different purposes. The storage and supply base is at Kelly Field No. 2. At Kelly Field No. 1 they bought the land several years ago at approximately the same price.

Now, to salvage this plant or to move off from it and pay the damages and pay rental, we thought was not good business judgment, and as the two plants work properly together, it is a splendid location for the Aviation Service. There is no question about that, especially in view of what some people think may be our military activities in the near future.

Mr. SNELL. As nearly as I can learn, we go into various parts of the country and establish a school, raise the price of the land two or three or four times, and then pay the increased price when we come to buy it.

Mr. CRAGO. That is true in some cases. In others it is not. These projects were all started as war projects, and these locations were made by the different forces. All we could do was to take these locations as we found them, and determine in our own mind what was the best business proposition for the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. WALSH having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate by Mr. Dudley, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment H. J. Res. 260, authorizing the payment of officers and employees of Congress for December, 1919.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 3284) to provide for the national welfare by continuing the United States Sugar Equalization Board until December 31, 1920, and for other purposes, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

AMENDMENT TO THE ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 9, line 18, add the following: "For purchase of real estate and acquisition of oyster rights at Langley Field, Va., $12,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For general construction at Selfridge Field, Mount Clemens, Mich., $35,000.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out lines 5 and 6, on page 10.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. LAGUARDIA: Page 10, strike out lines 5 and 6.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, now with the cooperation of the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], who was so willing to help us on Selfridge Field, we are back to it, and here is an appropriation of $190,000 to buy land, the price of which has not yet been fixed. This House has not yet decided whether we are going to buy that land, and we find ourselves in this position, that we are appropriating money for land which we have not decided to buy, the price of which has not yet been fixed, and the matter is still in court to ascertain its value, if any.

Mr. KITCHIN. Does not the gentleman know that I voted with him awhile ago on the Selfridge Field proposition?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, no Democrat voted with us.

Mr. KITCHIN. Two Democrats voted; yes—myself and another gentleman.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Can not the gentleman get me more Democrats on this amendment?

Mr. KITCHIN. I am going to vote with the gentleman on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ANTHONY) there were—ayes 47, noes 13.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KITCHIN. Now, I want to know whether the gentleman from Illinois wants to go back to Chanute Field with his amendment?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Sure, I would in a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Strike out all of line 7, page 10.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Strike out, page 10, lines 8 and 9, as follows: "Total for Air Service, $1,497,202.33."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Insert, lines 8 and 9, page 10, the following: "For purchase of Curtiss-Elmwood plant at Buffalo, N. Y., $1,804,300.49.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the attention of the committee to this item. I want to point out that the only argument presented for the expenditure of $1,804,300.49 is that an agreement was made with the Curtiss Co., of my State, if you please, whereby they promised the Curtiss Co. to take the Elmwood plant off their hands. After the armistice, and when we had stopped producing at that factory, they began to use the plant for storage purposes, and are now so using it. It is chock full of motor transport equipment. Mark you, this is a factory, with machinery in it, and it is full of motor trucks for storage, and we are paying rent for it.

Mr. CALDWELL. How much?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Three hundred thousand dollars a year, and they come to us and say, "Now, you have got to pay this amount, because if you do not, in three years we will get that much money from you anyway." It is as clear a case of holdup as was ever presented to this House, and I refuse to be held up by the Curtiss people or anybody else in my State or elsewhere.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. Is there any machinery in this plant to manufacture aeroplanes?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. There is.

Mr. HICKS. What is the capacity of this plant?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, I do not know. It is a big plant.

Mr. HICKS. How much?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I do not know. Hundreds of planes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I will answer that. The capacity of the plant is 1,300,000 square feet.

Mr. HICKS. I mean the capacity with respect to turning out planes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, I do not yield to the gentleman from New York. I have only a few minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York declines to be interrupted.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It is not now being used as a factory, but we are paying a factory price for the rental of it.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. They did use it as a factory all during the war.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is correct.

Mr. DEMPSEY. And it is one of the largest factories in the United States.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It was.

Mr. DEMPSEY. And it was used until aeroplanes were generally discontinued in the country.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. And the situation is one that is not peculiar to this plant, but is a general situation which prevails, owing to the fact that they have discontinued aeroplane work.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is any other factory coming to us now and saying, "Take our plant off our hands"?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I do not know, but I will tell you about this plant in a moment, and why you should buy it. I do not want to take up the gentleman's time.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I have some startling information on the next item of this bill.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Oh, I think we ought to confine ourselves to this item now.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I will confine myself to this item. That is the whole proposition. The only justification for it is that they are charging us an exorbitant rental of $300,000 a year. We can move that equipment out of there. We have motor transport troops. Let us move the equipment out; let us go into this thing and find out what this agreement was with the Curtiss people and then appropriate for it, if we have to buy it, and if we have to pay factory rental for the building let us use it as a factory and not as a storage warehouse.

Mr. FISHER. The gentleman says that we could move this out? Where would we move it to?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Does the gentleman mean to say that after all of the millions of dollars we have spent for equipment of Army posts and cantonments we have not a place to transport this motor-transport equipment?

Mr. FISHER. I would like to have the gentleman state just what warehouse or what place we have room for it, in which we could put this equipment now at Buffalo.

Mr. LAYTON. Then let us sell it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Then the gentleman would admit that we are being held up.

Mr. FISHER. I do not admit any such thing.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, while I have the greatest respect in the world for my colleague, Maj. LAGUARDIA, as a brave flying officer and a distinguished legislator, his business judgment as expressed upon the proposition of the acquisition of this Curtiss-Elmwood plant will hardly pass at par with me. The subcommittee of the House Committee on Military Affairs has most carefully investigated every phase of this proposed purchase. I only regret that Maj. LAGUARDIA, who was named as a member of that subcommittee, could not find the time to accompany the committee and participate in the hard work and labor it put in in the investigation of this and other aviation propositions. [Applause.] To any man who knows enough to operate a peanut stand on a corner and make a profit [laughter and applause] the question of the purchase of the Curtiss-Elmwood plant from a business standpoint is at once apparent. It is proposed to take over this plant at a cash cost to the Government of $1,800,000.

The building is a modern concrete and steel structure on 77 acres of ground in the midst of the manufacturing district of Buffalo, N. Y., that cost the Curtiss Co. $6,300,000 to build of their own money. We are now using it as a storage proposition pure and simple for Army trucks and for other surplus material.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I would rather complete this, but I yield.

Mr. HICKS. Are we buying this as a factory or as a storehouse?

Mr. ANTHONY. As a storage proposition at this time.

Mr. CALDWELL. The gentleman would not impress the committee with the belief that it can not be used as a manufacturing proposition?

Mr. ANTHONY. It is equipped with the most modern machinery and can be turned over to-morrow in the production of aeroplanes, and I may say there are large automobile-manufacturing interests who are now trying to get this property away from the Government for their own purposes. We have stored there in that 1,300,000 feet of storage space available, which Gen. Marshall, of the Construction Corps, says it will cost $3 a foot to build at this time, $55,000,000 worth of Air Service surplus material, in addition to 3,000 Army trucks—Packard and General Motors Co. trucks—which are stored in one end in the middle of that concrete factory—one of the best pieces of storage work the committee saw in any place. We are paying for that factory $312,000 a year rental. We are advised by the authorities that we will need it for four years more. There is $1,200,000 rent. If we are compelled to move to some other place of storage, they say it will cost $300,000 merely to transfer the material from there to other storage points. That is the amount of money the Government would be compelled to pay out for rent or for moving that immense amount of material.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I would ask that the gentleman have five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. How was the price fixed?

Mr. ANTHONY. I want to go into that phase of it. During the progress of manufacturing contracts which were held by the Curtiss people by our Government for the manufacture of aeroplanes the War Department advanced to them a total of $8,000,000. About $4,000,000 of this amount was taken up in the settlement of aeroplane contracts, leaving about four million and some thousand dollars over unpaid on the part of the Curtiss Co. Then came up the question of adjustment of the cost of this factory with the Curtiss people in connection with their Government contract. That contract provided that the Curtiss Co. should be awarded by the Government the difference between the war cost of that factory, $6,300,000, and its value to the Curtiss Co. as a peace-time proposition. The board of appraisers which was appointed under the provisions of that contract brought in a ridiculously low valuation of 7½ per cent as the peace-time value of this plant to the Curtiss Co., which, if that award had been allowed to go through, would have meant that the Curtiss Co. would have been able to retain the plant and have been able to cancel their obligation to the Government and receive $454,000, the 7½ per cent involved. The conference committee which had under consideration the last Army appropriation bill refused to carry an appropriation through at that time which was based upon that award. We have since investigated the matter and given it most careful scrutiny, and we believe it is a sound, safe proposition, and the sensible thing to do, to take over the plant at the price named in the bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Does the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will yield.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. How does it happen that we pay $300,000 rent for property that we can buy at $1,800,000?

Mr. ANTHONY. That was the price agreed upon before any purchase proposition was contemplated.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, that would seem to make it still worse. The Government agreed to pay rent at $300,000 a year for property worth less than $2,000,000?

Mr. ANTHONY. The property cost $6,300,000 to the Curtiss Co.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, was that Government money?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; that is the Curtiss Co. money, not furnished by the Government.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I thought the gentleman was definite in his statement, but I must confess now I do not understand him.

Mr. ANTHONY. What is it the gentleman does not understand, and I will try in my feeble way to clarify it?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman was very clear before, and I can not understand how this price is arrived at.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think I have figures here that will give the idea. Of course, the question of the amortization of the value of that factory to the Curtiss Co. is involved in this whole transaction. The Curtiss Co. still owed the Government, as I understand it, over $4,000,000 of the unpaid balance. Now, as the bookkeeping is kept, the department has charged off $4,000,000 of that amount on its books with the Curtiss Co., feeling certain that in any settlement that is made that amount of amortization would be taken care of.

So that the difference between the $6,114,126, which the Curtiss people claimed the plant actually cost them—that is, the net figure—and the amortization which is actually paid in this settlement of $4,309,825.54 makes $1,804,300.49, the amount asked for in the present bill as a proper, equitable price to be paid for the plant.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for one more question?

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. And the Government has already over $4,000,000 in this plant at the present time?

Mr. ANTHONY. Not in the plant.

Mr. SNELL. If they furnished the Curtiss Co. this money and charged it off the books, they really have it in the plant.

Mr. ANTHONY. Of course, you might say that.

Mr. SNELL. And we are simply completing the purchase?

Mr. ANTHONY. That may be true.

But the balance of this $4,000,000, I understand, is involved in what would be the actual amount of amortization finally allowed. The board of appraisers made it as low as 7½ per cent, which is a too ridiculously low value to put on it. It gave the Government the worst of it.

Mr. SNELL. There was no Curtiss money in the plant?

Mr. ANTHONY. Do not confuse the loan to the Curtiss Co. with the cost of the construction of the plant.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I object for the time being. If he will renew his request at the end of the five minutes——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, the chairman unwittingly said that the cost of this plant was $6,300,000. The report shows the cost was practically $7,000,000—$6,943,000. The plant itself covers about 30 acres. There is no better plant in the United States for any manufacturing purpose. It is an absolutely modern, up-to-date plant, built in the most modern way, of the best material, and it is the best fitted plant in the United States for future work in aircraft production. And it was used for aircraft production until we ceased in our efforts to make aircraft.

Mr. HICKS. How many planes did they turn out? Does the gentleman know?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I do not know. I know they did a great deal of work there; that they had thousands of men employed throughout the war.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. In just one moment, and I will.

In addition to this modern plant, which is, as I say, as good a plant as you can produce, the plant has with it 79 acres of land in a large city, one of the best cities in the country, land that is bound to increase in value, and is of very great value at the present time, something like 30 acres being in the plant proper. So you have this situation: You have a plant that cost $7,000,000; you have a plant that is thoroughly up to date; you have a large acreage of land in a big city, in a city that is growing very rapidly. And now, what is the situation of the United States with regard to it? Let us take the present. For the present you are in this position: You have $55,000,000 worth of property stored in it, and what are you going to do with it in the event that you abandon the plant? Nobody has made any provision; nobody can point to any near-by place where these supplies can be stored; nobody can say what it will cost to store them; nobody will say where you can find a place in which to store them.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. What kind of property is stored there that is valued at $55,000,000?

Mr. DEMPSEY. There is the most modern kind of machinery for aircraft production, and there is something like 3,000 trucks and automobiles—high-priced automobiles, like the Packard—stored there, end on end, just as closely as they can pack them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield to me right there?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. With what the gentleman is saying about the land that is connected with this, the size of this great factory, and valuable machinery that is in it, it seems to me that the Government might use it for storage purposes and get this amount out of it. What does the gentleman think of that?

Mr. DEMPSEY. It seems to me they ought to get much more than the price out of it. Anybody who knows anything about the frontier will agree with me that land on the frontier not only in Buffalo but all the way down the river is absolutely jumping in value, and you have 79 acres of land there at Buffalo. You have, besides, this enormously valuable plant. Then you have this property that is stored in it. And what is the situation as to storage? I am not saying whether or not the Government made a wise contract in agreeing to pay the amount which it has agreed to pay, but the fact is the Government has agreed to pay $300,000 a year for storage, and it will eat up the entire purchase price before you know it, and instead of having this plant, with its land increasing rapidly in value; instead of having in the future a splendid plant for aircraft production at this great city of Buffalo, midway between the centers of population in the United States; instead of having this land that will produce a profit; instead of having all of it at the end of a short time you will have nothing. You will simply have paid out the $300,000 a year and have nothing to show for it.

Now, I am sure that the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA], who was able to impress his personality so favorably upon the great electorate of the city of New York, is not going to maintain the statement that this is not a wise purchase without basing it on facts, and he did not produce any facts to show that the electorate of Buffalo, the largest city in his State outside of the great center which he so ably represents, is trying to do anything here that is dishonest or that is to the disadvantage of the country. That is not true. The gentleman on reflection will not attempt to say that, but will recognize the situation as being one which in business prudence demands the purchase of this property at the very low price at which it can be acquired.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. I am in favor of the gentleman's proposition. I want to ask the gentleman this question: In the hearing before the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate the fact, I think, was developed that since the armistice was signed about 90 per cent of our aircraft production has been liquidated. Is it not a proper thing for the Government to have in reserve a factory of this kind, so that in case of an emergency we can have some chance of speedily building up an aircraft service?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I think so. I think the location is absolutely ideal, and I do not think there is a better plant in this country, or in the world.

Mr. HICKS. I agree with the gentleman thoroughly.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. I read here that this building cost the Curtiss people over $6,000,000.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes; practically $7,000,000.

Mr. BUTLER. Now, when we pay practically $1,800,000, how much will this building have cost the Government?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I can not tell what the arrangement is. I am not familiar with the arrangement.

Mr. BUTLER. It would cost the Government more than this figure, would it not? We can not get a $7,000,000 plant for $7,000,000 when there are other bidders, can we?

Mr. DEMPSEY. You are going to get a $7,000,000 plant for less than $2,000,000.

Mr. BUTLER. I can not understand how that can be. [Laughter.]

Mr. DEMPSEY. That ought not to trouble the gentleman.

Mr. BUTLER. But it does trouble me, and I can not help having it trouble me.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The fact that in this rare instance the United States is making a very good bargain should not trouble any of us.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. How much will it cost?

The CHAIRMAN. There is not anything pending but the committee amendment. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase of Dayton-Wright plant and real estate at Dayton, Ohio, $2,740,228.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, yesterday I promised the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] that I would insert certain data in the RECORD. I now ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in order to insert the data referred to.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL]?

There was no objection.

Following is the matter referred to:

The military necessities are illustrated from the official cables of Gen. Pershing on the subject, beginning almost with his first cable to this side, No. 85, of August 8, 1917:

"PAR. 3. Study here shows value and desirability of retaining our existing small arms target practice courses. In view of great difficulty in securing ranges in France due to density of population and cultivation, recommend as far as practicable the complete courses be given in United States before troops embark. Special emphasis should be placed on rapid fire."

Again, on September 25, 1917, cable No. 178:

"PAR. 1. Referring paragraph 3, my number 85, longer experience conditions in France confirms my opinion highly important Infantry soldiers should be excellent shots. Thorough instruction and range practice prescribed our small arms firing manual very necessary. Our allies now fully realize their deficiency in rifle training. Difficult secure areas for target ranges in France even now when crops off ground. Much greater difficulty soon when plowing begins. After ground secured in France considerable time required for troops to construct ranges and improvise target material. In theater active operations this time should be available for intensive training new weapons and formations. Therefore strongly renew my previous recommendations that all troops be given complete course rifle practice prescribed our firing manual before leaving United States. Specialty of trench-warfare instruction at home should not be allowed to interfere with rifle practice nor with intensive preliminary training in our schools of soldiers, companies, and battalions."

Again, on October 21, 1917, his cable No. 228:

"PAR. 16. Recommend that instruction of divisions in United States be conducted with a view to developing the soldiers physically and in knowledge of sanitation, inculcating high standards of discipline, producing superior marksmanship both on the range and in field firing exercises in large bodies. Close adherence is urged to the central idea that the essential principles of war have not changed, that the rifle and bayonet are still the supreme weapons of the Infantry soldier and that the ultimate success of the Army depends upon their proper use in open warfare."

The next is dated December 22, 1917, his No. 408:

"PAR. 1. Reference training of troops in United States, deficiencies noted here indicated, first, great laxity on the part of division and brigade commanders in requiring officers to learn their duties or to perform them efficiently; second, almost total failure to give any instructions in principles of minor tactics and their practical application to war conditions. Officers, from colonels down and including some general officers, are found ignorant of the handling of units in open warfare, including principles of reconnoissance, outpost, advance guard, solution of practical problems, and formation of attack; third, no training whatever has been given individual target practice on the range. Many officers of high rank are hopelessly ignorant of what this training consists of.

"SUBPAR. B. Suggest that important work in practical application of tactics and thorough training in musketry for all units be taken by Maj. Gen. John F. Morrison, and that these subjects be presented to our troops in great detail by his office; also, that all officers of whatever rank, including those in Regular Army, be held up to a high standard of accomplishment. Many of our high regular officers do not know how to instruct men practically, and they should either be compelled to learn or be removed.

"SUBPAR. C. I would recommend Maj. Gen. Richard M. Blatchford, National Army, as assistant to Maj. Gen. John F. Morrison, as Gen. Blatchford's experience in musketry should be invaluable. Too much importance can not be placed upon this sort of training as exemplified in our school of musketry at Fort Sill, Okla., the elements of which should be thoroughly pounded into our Infantry.

"PERSHING."

No. 952:

"SUBPAR. IF. Great battle now raging makes certain that too much trench warfare militates against successful conduct great operations. Morale troops long accustomed duty in trenches lowered thereby. When driven into open, men have feeling nakedness and helplessness. Current great battle also emphasizes extraordinary value highly trained riflemen and machine gunners.

"SUBPAR. IG. Recommend, therefore, following outline for training in United States: Thorough instruction in marksmanship to include known-distance firing for all men to 600 yards and in battle practice after method school musketry. Production excellent close-order drill gain of high discipline. Thorough instruction, both officers and men, in open warfare. Small units should be thoroughly grounded in patrolling in all forms of ——— and in attack and defense of minor warfare. Problems for such should customarily be prepared by next higher commander.

"PERSHING."

No. 990:

"PAR. 2. Reference target practice, have been informed that none of our troops have had practice above 300 yards. Consider this very grave oversight that should be corrected as soon as possible. Target practice should embrace instruction in skirmish firing and practical application of the principles of fire direction, control, and discipline, with especial emphasis upon instruction of your officers in musketry as applied to tactical problem in open warfare. Request advice as to action taken upon above recommendations, and also information regarding what instruction has been carried out in divisions to come over within the next three months.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out lines 10 and 11 on page 10.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman allow the Chair to make a suggestion?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. These lines are being offered by the committee now as an amendment. They will have to be voted on, anyway.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Then I want to oppose the amendment.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is not this item in the same category with all the items on pages 8 and 9, which by unanimous consent were read as original items?

The CHAIRMAN. They have application to that part of the bill which was stricken out, on pages 3, 4, and 5. Then the original bill began on page 8, relating to the Air Service, and continued on down to the roman letters, and then, wherever items appear in italics, they are supposed to be committee amendments.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Then, I understand, this is a committee amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is a committee amendment.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Then I rise for the purpose of opposing the committee amendment. I ask the attention of the committee on this item. Here, fortunately, we are not confronted with the situation that this plant is chock full of Government property, and that we are paying $300,000 rent. There is no Government property on this land.

Now, then, gentlemen, what is the situation? At the outset of the war we had an Aircraft Production Board, and we had certain gentlemen who had a great deal of influence on this board, who moved the technical section from Langley Field, where it was originally placed, and put it on the McCook Field, at Dayton, Ohio. We leased McCook Field from the city of Dayton, and we are now paying rent for the McCook Field.

This Dayton-Wright Field is owned and controlled by the same people—the Moraine Development Co., Col. Deeds, and that crowd. This lease, mark you, of the McCook Field expires in 1927. They want us to release McCook Field and give up that lease and buy permanently the Wright-Dayton plant, and they ask for it $2,740,228. We have spent large amounts on McCook Field and it is greatly enhanced in value. As was stated yesterday, Mr. Chairman, McCook Field is a dangerous flying field. Then why did they move it from Langley Field, where we had sufficient space and grounds to carry on experiments, and move it to McCook Field? Testing work is always dangerous. We are always bound to have accidents where we have testing work. But why did we abandon Langley Field and take McCook Field? They tell us that we must stay in Dayton, Ohio, because it is the only place where we can get the necessary mechanics. That is incorrect. Philadelphia is a good center. The Navy plant is located there. Langley Field is a short distance from Newport News and Hampton. We have mechanics there. There is no earthly reason why we should appropriate $2,740,000 now for this land scheme. Everybody in this committee knows that I am doing all I can to develop aviation in this country, but I am also doing all I can to stop the expenditure of millions of dollars that are being wasted on the purchase and improvement of swamp lands and land schemes like the Dayton-Wright project.

The distinguished gentleman from Kansas a few moments ago made a comparison with the corner peanut seller. I quite agree with the gentleman——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I quite agree with the gentleman from Kansas that a hard-working peanut seller on the corner, who pays value for his goods, and gives value in his five-cent package, can not comprehend such an outrageous steal on the Treasury of the United States as this project. While we were at war these same people to whom you now bow planned and schemed this project. They moved out of Langley Field, where we had a good plant, and took it to McCook Field, and we paid the high rent. They knew that they had this plant next door, and now they come to you to get back McCook and sell their other land, and you are falling for it. I call the attention of the committee to this scheme, and it is only a scheme to get $2,608,000.

The air service does not need it. We can continue at McCook Field for a little while longer or we can go to Langley Field, and I urge your support in defeating this amendment and saving $2,608,000.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, the purchase of the Dayton-Wright plant at Dayton, Ohio, does not come to the Committee on Military Affairs from any clique of men at Dayton, Ohio, or any men who have been involved in past waste of public money or peculations of public funds in the manufacture of aircraft. The proposition for the purchase of the Dayton plant comes to the committee from the officers of the air service of the Army, as honorable a body of men as I know of any place in this country. [Applause.] The proposition comes with the indorsement of the Secretary of War, whom I have never heard accused of being a dishonest man, and in the mature, careful judgment of the committee this is another manufacturing proposition wherein it is perfectly clear to the man who sits down and realizes the purpose for which the plant is desired, no matter who the man is that we are going to buy it from, no matter what his character may have been, or what he may have done during the war. It is to the distinct advantage of the Government to buy this plant if it intends to build an engineering development plant for the air service of the Army.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. In a moment I will be glad to yield. We did try to provide such an engineering plant at Langley Field, and spent millions there, but it has been a failure, for the simple reason that they can not and could not get the skilled mechanics at Langley Field with whom to operate the plant. It was then moved to Dayton, Ohio. A temporary plant was built upon McCook Field which is now serving that purpose. The land there is not owned by the Government and it is not land adapted for the purpose. It is plain to anyone who visits the ground that it is absolutely necessary either to move the plant or to construct permanent buildings on the same ground, which would be very undesirable.

The most available plant is the old plant of the Dayton-Wright Co., 5 miles from Dayton.

The situation there is that this plant was built by the Dayton-Wright people at a cost of approximately $1,000,000 during the war to take care of Government contracts. During the war the Government put $690,000 more into extensions of buildings. By this proposition we secure the original building for $390,000 in money, as I understand it.

In addition to that main building we propose to buy the Moraine tract, as it is called, 800 acres more of valuable land which has two very valuable manufacturing buildings upon it which the Government can utilize, at a cost of half what it will cost to build anew. We are in addition providing a little more than $1,000,000 for new construction that will be involved there. We are asking for a total of $2,740,000, and the Air Service officials tell us that if they had to locate the plant some place else and build it entirely anew, based on present costs of construction, would cost the Government from $7,000,000 to $10,000,000. It is a business, economic proposition, like the other, in my opinion.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman tell us what we expect to pay for the Moraine land?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. How much an acre?

Mr. ANTHONY. I think it is approximately $700 or $800 an acre.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Does the gentleman know the assessed value of that land?

Mr. ANTHONY. Oh, yes. The gentleman mentioned that the other day.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It is $85 an acre.

Mr. ANTHONY. Assessed valuation does not always carry the true value of land in all localities.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. There is a big difference between $85 and $800.

Mr. ANTHONY. We went all over this land. It is located in the Miami Valley and is first-class agricultural land, probably as good as there is in the State of Ohio, and worth certainly $300 an acre. It is within a few miles of Dayton, surrounded by beautiful homes on the hills on one side of it, and will soon be in what will be a manufacturing suburb of Dayton; and while $800 an acre may be high, it is within the range of values of land in the locality.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. It is peculiarly significant that the information that skilled experts can not be obtained at Langley Field came from the aviation department. I presume the chairman knows nothing about that. The House Military Affairs Committee are compelled to take the advice of the Army.

Now, gentlemen, Langley Field, which has been constructed at an expense of over $8,000,000, is located within 10 miles of the plant of the Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co., where the highest skilled experts in the United States are to be found.

They have gotten them for that concern and kept them there without any trouble, and I submit, Why could they not get experienced men at Langley Field?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I would state to the gentleman that it is not so that we have abandoned Langley Field. We have two squadrons there, and we are contemplating putting a school of application there for aviation, and we can use Langley Field as an ideal technical school.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. Of course; and just across the water from Langley Field the Navy is maintaining its aviation plant. I am not an aviator and I do not know what expert service is required, but I do know that if we get experienced men at the Newport News Shipbuilding & Drydock Co.; if you can get them in Norfolk, just a short distance away; if you can get them at the naval base, which is just across the water, then you will be able to get them at Langley Field. It is an absurd proposition to talk about abandoning that and spending about $2,740,000 elsewhere. I defy the Army to produce any evidence to sustain any such proposition. The Military Affairs Committee, of course, is taking the statement of the Army in that respect.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Virginia defies any military authority to demonstrate that Langley Field is not a proper place.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Is the gentleman qualified?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the location of propositions of this kind within 150 miles of the Atlantic coast has been condemned by two boards of military experts.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact, and also the attention of the committee to the fact, that you have not in this country anything like this plant for an engineering school.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No. The present condition of the production and development of aircraft is deplorable in this country. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] has been holding hearings, and I am a member of the subcommittee that has been with him, and every witness that we have had for the last two weeks has made the statement that we have not the proper facilities for the production of aeroplanes in this country to-day. I do not know, no man knows, what the future of the aeroplane is as a defensive measure, but we all realize that it is a very important instrument of warfare, and if you, by your votes to-day, take that item out of the bill you remove one of the big items for the protection of your country, and for this reason it should remain in there.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No. It should remain there for the protection of the city which lately honored the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is the Dayton-Wright plant producing anything now or is it contemplated to produce anything there?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Everyone knows that the McCook Field, at Dayton, is producing to-day, and it is the only engineering school in the Army. We want this Dayton-Wright plant to remove the McCook Field to.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Does the gentleman from Iowa favor the proposition of having the Army undertake the manufacture and the development of aircraft machines?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do not care to go into that controversial question at this time. I do know that the Army has to have an engineering school, and I would say further that I was one of the members of the committee that objected to this item. I think I was the last member of the committee to give in, and since then I have found out so much that I am more and more in favor of that item than I am of any other item. It is the one item that we have got to have, an engineering school for aeroplane service.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. The first item in the bill provides for the purchase of a building, $300,000. On what ground does this building stand? Who owns the ground?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The Dayton-Wright Aeroplane Co. owns it.

Mr. SNELL. And when we buy this do we buy the land that this building stands on?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. That is included?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; and there are a lot of other things included. There are residences and a lot of other property there. As the gentleman has said, the entire property value to replace it would be four or five million dollars.

Mr. SNELL. What can be done here that can not be done at the Curtiss plant in Buffalo?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that he be given two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. What is it proposed to do here that can not be done at the Curtiss plant?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I had thought of that very thing, and it might be possible to concentrate everything in Buffalo, but as a matter of fact that should not be done. We should not place all of our eggs in one basket, and that is just what you are contemplating when you contemplate placing all in Buffalo. We will not have too much of the production of aeroplanes. As a matter of fact, I do not believe that we are to have very much commercial aviation for a very long time. No man can tell how it is going to be developed commercially, but we must have development for proper defense.

Mr. SNELL. What is it proposed to do with the property that we have leased for eight years yet?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman means at McCook Field?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The city wants that. It is in the city.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And that is the whole propositon. The city wants it back and wants to dump something else on the Government.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is an unsafe proposition to have the plant at McCook Field.

Mr. SNELL. Why was it put there with a long lease?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Simply because it was like a great many other things in an emergency. It was thought best to do it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is it—millions and millions in land and that is why we have not any planes.

Mr. SNELL. The last item of $1,283,000 is for new construction, buildings, and so forth.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has again expired.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, the country is face to face with a business proposition in a matter of the development of aircraft. When we went into the war, of course, the aircraft industry had only reached a limited development. Now that the war is ended practically 90 per cent, as has been testified by the gentleman from New York, of the aircraft industry has been liquidated. It is essential for the national protection that the engineering department of the aircraft industry be made permanent. In the matter of this item which has been advocated by the Committee on Military Affairs I think it has been well stated that the request comes from nobody in the city of Dayton, comes from no real estate clique, comes from no organization which seeks to get public money, but comes from the War Department of the United States. I have in my hand, and I read it with the privilege of the War Department, a report made by Capt. Estabrook of the Department of Engineers, who was sent out to Dayton at the request of the Air Service to find out about the present value of this site. Now, I only desire to read a little bit from it so you may be advised. Maj. Estabrook says:

> That under no conditions should this proposal be rejected, but the sale should be consummated at once. Should the Air Service abandon this project the United States should exercise its option and acquire the plant, thereby saving their investment. It is firmly believed that if the United States acquires this property the same can readily be sold for $1,500,000, resulting in a saving of over $1,000,000.

Now, the proposition in brief is this: The experimental field is located at what is called McCook Field. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] has said that the lease of that expires in 1927. In this he is in error. I also have in my hand, and I read with the approval of the War Department, a statement showing in detail—I would be pleased to read it in full if I had time—the leases, of which the longest lease is for a period of 1922, and a great number of leases here are for eight months after the termination of the war. Now, McCook Field is at present an engineering field. It is necessary to have an engineering field and a number of things enter into it. First, you must have buildings, the proper buildings for doing the work. Second, you must have a field for the testing and the flying. Third, you must have a place which is secure. It must be a place in the interior of the country, or should be. Fourth, you must have a certainty of a labor market. Now, this McCook Field is something like 225 acres. It is not enough for testing and flying. South of the city of Dayton there is a place called the Dayton-Wright Field, which, with the contiguous land, is absolutely made to order for the continuation in the best proper place of a permanent engineering and manufacturing concern, and therefore the Committee on Military Affairs, which went there through its subcommittee some time ago, makes a unanimous report through that subcommittee in favor of accepting this common-sense business proposition, to take the place which appears of all places in the United States to be the best under the circumstances for the development of aviation. Now, as I said, there is no desire on the part of the city of Dayton or no desire on the part of anybody in the city of Dayton to profit in this matter.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. If I had the time I would be glad to yield to anybody, because the matter is one I know particularly about, and I desire to afford all possible information.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. As I understand the gentleman, the price at which it is offered to the Government is much less than would be realized if it were sold?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. What is it that induced the owners of that field to give something to the Government for nothing?

Mr. GARD. Oh, there is nothing in that.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the gentleman will permit, I desire to say in reply to such a question as that, that involved in this transaction is an investment in this Dayton-Wright plant of $690,000, which the Government put in during the war, in addition to the factory. If the Government does not buy the plant, it is allowed to go to the company at the appraised value; the Dayton-Wright people get this $690,000 additions to the factory for $64,000——

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. I do not see the point, why they should not want to do that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARD. I will ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARD. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ANTHONY. So that in adjusting this matter of $690,000, which the Government has practically advanced to the company during the war for war purposes, the appraisal value would only be $64,000 in real money to go back to the Government if we do not buy the plant. Of course, that is a war contract we are face to face with.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. The owners of this plant intend to give up the profit on it and the difference between the bargain which the gentleman has just mentioned?

Mr. ANTHONY. Give up what?

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. They intend to give up the profit, the difference between the selling price and the actual value of the plant, and likewise the difference between the money the Government advanced and the $64,000.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think the answer to that is that the same men owning the Dayton-Wright plant also are the principal owners of the Moraine Development Co., to whom we are to pay over a million dollars for their property.

Mr. GARD. In other words, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this proposition comes here in this wise: It is a recommendation of the War Department through several different agents sent out there from the Department of Engineers to investigate what was the actual value of the premises sought to be acquired under this item.

The value of the ground and buildings is absolutely honest and vouched for by the best men in the city of Dayton. It is the center of all aircraft activity in investigation now. It was the birthplace of the heavier-than-air machine. It is near a most progressive city, whose citizens will lend every aid to the success of aviation in America.

In addition to that, a committee of seven or nine—I do not remember which—from the Committee on Military Affairs of this House went to the city of Dayton. They were sent out to determine the actual and present facts, and made an investigation, and they support this item. They went there to see the field, to see the buildings, and determine for themselves, with additional information from the War Department, what the value of the proposition was. So that the facts that are now presented to the House for their consideration of this item are, first, is there to be an engineering department of aviation? If so, it must be housed in the best possible place we can find. Of course, no one would say that there is no place in the United States other than this where that may not occur, but under the present conditions this is the most fortunate place at this time for the establishment of this field. Second, it is in the territory of the widest development of the best mechanical craftsmen in the country, and I say it with the utmost respect to other portions of the country. It is within a night's ride of Chicago, Detroit, Indianapolis, Toledo, and Cleveland, and all the cities where, by reason of necessity, are assembled the very best mechanical craftsmen in the country. It is necessary to have these men. It is necessary for the protection of this department, and it must be in the interior, away from the seaboard. Above all, here is a plant already completed, with buildings and grounds and everything, and if this plant be not accepted there must be an expenditure of at least $7,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I have listened very carefully to what has been said in support of this proposition by my distinguished friend from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY], for whose judgment I have great respect and whom I ordinarily follow. But I can not follow him in this case. I know something about this matter myself. I have visited Langley Field. I have seen those splendid buildings, which cost somewhere from $8,000,000 to $10,000,000, the most elaborate of any I know in any of the aviation camps, and most of them not used at the present time. And what sense was there in moving this engineering camp to Dayton in the first place? Possibly during a war emergency they could not get the mechanics at that particular time. Suppose that is so; as the gentleman from Virginia has very well said, there is no reason why you could not get the mechanics at Langley Field at this time. Why should we talk about an engineering camp, a testing camp, not being located near the coast? I grant that a construction factory ought not to be located near the coast, but there is no reason why this testing field should not be located near the coast. And they say there has been many accidents where it is now located, because this building is near Dayton, near a large city. It is no nearer than the camp we have at Anacostia.

Mr. ANTHONY. Oh, yes; it is. The gentleman has made a misstatement.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have not; because that is in the building part of the city, as the gentleman knows, and you can not get it any nearer. And I presume the gentleman and a large number of other Members of Congress have flown over this city without any accident. You can not take a flight from Bolling Field without going over this city or Anacostia. I have myself been over the Capitol at least a dozen times going back and forth.

Now, this is just simply a pure waste of money. The Aviation Department has no more need of this extra field than a wagon has for a fifth wheel. There is room, and room to spare, at Langley. It is not being used. It will not be used unless used for this purpose, and the only reason for this that I can see is because somebody wants this particular camp located near Dayton in order to increase the manufacturing capacity of that great city and the number of men employed there in some kind of way. There is no occasion for it whatever, and this item ought to be stricken out of the bill.

I place no reliance on the demands of Army officers, however distinguished they may be. If we yielded to their demands we would add to our appropriations at least a billion of dollars instead of reducing them, as we should. If we can not economize where we can get along just as well without, where will we economize?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. FISHER] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, there has been more loose talk about our Air Service since we entered the war than any other single thing connected with the Government. We have had more investigating committees to investigate that service than any other single branch of the Government. Now, the very distinguished and active gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] was absent from this country, probably flying over the Adriatic or making Liberty loan speeches for some of our allies, when a former Justice of our Supreme Court conducted an investigation of the Air Service and went into the details of the activities at Dayton, Ohio.

Thousands of pages of testimony were taken under his direction relative to all the transactions in and around Dayton, including matters relating to the plant now under discussion, and not a single thing that was wrong was disclosed relative to this matter. All of us who were here at that time knew that if anything could have been found which was adverse to the administration or which was wrong, as a matter of fact, it would have been found, because we knew the man that was at the head of that investigation, regardless of which side of the aisle we sat upon, was a most distinguished investigator, because all of us remembered the very splendid services he rendered in the State of New York in a very large investigation relating to insurance matters. After that investigation there were others, and the very distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] has not had the time since he got out of the service because he has been running for office and he has been holding hearings relative to a separate Air Service, all of which is a splendid work, to investigate and carefully study the reports made by these different investigating committees.

We have an investigating committee—the Select Committee to Investigate War Expenditures—and if there had been anything wrong with these transactions at Dayton, Ohio, they would have taken a bee line to discover something in order to make it known to the people of this country. The reason I say this—and I had not intended to speak on this matter—was the expression of "steal" and the expression "these same people." That is an expression with nothing definite to stand upon. When a man makes a charge of "steal" and refers in an insinuating way to "these same people," I want him to say what is known that is definite to substantiate the charge. This Government has spent hundreds of thousands of dollars to find the cause of the delay on the part of the Air Service, and to find out if there had been any graft or illegal acts in the aviation activities, and the man is not here now that can say truthfully that there was crookedness or graft relative to the Dayton proposition.

We have an investigating committee which was appointed in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1915. It is called the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, and their report, which has been made to Congress within the past few days, tells us the real cause of the delay on the part of the Air Service. I will not read it all. I will read one paragraph:

> The science and art of aeronautics made wonderful progress during the war, due to the stimulus of necessity. Over 11,000 aviators were trained in the country, with a loss of 264 lives in training, and more than 13,000 airplanes were constructed in the United States. There were great delays, however, in getting an effective air force into action during the war, due primarily to the general lack of preparation for war, but particularly due to the lack of a proper scientific and technical foundation before the war.

That indicates to me that there is one committee without any partisan spirit that has found the true cause of the delay on the part of the Air Service. That means that as Members of Congress it is our duty to prepare this country along scientific and technical lines. In other words, we have got to have an experimentation plant, and where would we put it? When we think of aviation and aeronautics we think of Dayton, Ohio.

I never was in Dayton, and knew nothing about it until I went there to personally study the situation and give it my most careful investigation. But when we think of technical engineers relative to aviation, and skilled workmen relative to aviation, we think of Dayton, Ohio. There is a congenial center for technical experts along this line, and if we are not to let the Air Service stagnate, we must have some such plant, and there is no other place in this country comparable to this place.

Suppose we put it somewhere else. We have got to spend money for construction, and where is the man who knows anything about construction that will not say that the buildings at Dayton could be duplicated for anything near the sum that we are paying for them? I certainly hope this committee will adopt the amendment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, I was a member of this subcommittee that went to Dayton, and I want to state my position in just a few words, because otherwise the fact of my silence on this subject might be misunderstood.

I think this is not a local question. It is a national question. If it were local I would like to get something of this kind over in Pennsylvania. But we are so busy over there that we do not need anything of this kind.

But I want to say that I indorse most heartily what the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. FISHER] has so well said regarding this project. [Applause.] We went to Dayton with open minds. We went over the McCook Field in the forenoon, going through all the engineering shops and taking in everything we could in respect to them. In the afternoon we went out where it is proposed to make this purchase. We found the McCook Field in a small circumscribed area, the greater part of the land belonging to the city, which they want to get back very badly, the land being right up against the city proper. It is not a proper place for experimental aviation. Machine shops would be all right at that point, but we can not afford to pay the price that would be asked for city property of that kind worth $2,000 or $3,000 an acre. Later we were shown this other location.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAGO. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Why not move this field back to Langley, where it ought to be, and abandon McCook altogether?

Mr. CRAGO. I am frank to say that I know very little about the relative merits of these two fields. I am simply making this statement as to the merits of this particular proposition. We want to develop a school of aeronautical engineering. We have that, in a way, at McCook Field. We can not continue to keep that school there, and we can not keep that field. The whole question is a practical one, as to whether or not we want to invest this money at this locality.

Personally I looked for some time before I could convince myself that this locality, decided upon, was really what we wanted; and I will say now that after we went to Buffalo I tried to figure out in my own mind some way by which we could utilize that splendid plant at Buffalo, not only for storage and manufacturing purposes but for experimental and training purposes in that vicinity. But I found that this could not be worked out to the satisfaction of the department.

Now, we had with us men from the aeronautical service who were disinterested parties, so far as this real estate is concerned, and there was no question in the mind of any one of them but that the property was being offered to us at the proper price, a mere song compared with what these buildings would cost if they were now to be erected. The whole question in my mind then resolved itself to this: Did we want an engineering development school, an aeronautical engineering school, at Dayton or any other point? We found no other location so well adapted for the purpose, and so we concluded that this appropriation was well warranted.

I want to say before I close that we had with us that splendid leader of men, the commander of the Rainbow Division in France, Gen. Menoher, and anybody who could think that Gen. Menoher would lend himself to any scheme that was not all right would be sadly mistaken. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, this Dayton land is not going to run away over night, is it?

Mr. CRAGO. I do not know as to that, but our option can not hold out forever. I know, or I believe I know, that the General Motors Co. would be very glad to see the Government drop its rights in this field in order that they might take them over at a greater price.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. With all the land we have, available and equipped for technical purposes, does the gentleman now advise spending $2,700,000 at the present stage of aviation progress in this country?

Mr. CRAGO. Well, I am surprised that the people who are always claiming that they are in favor of the development of aviation, when you come on with any concrete plan by which that can be worked out and put into effect, are against it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am speaking of the purchase of land.

Mr. CRAGO. I can not understand that proposition. I believe this is the proper plan.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I am not a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, as are a number of other gentlemen who are now sitting here and listening to this debate. Since this paragraph came under consideration I have been endeavoring to listen to the debate, in order to secure some real information as to the merits of this proposition. The Committee on Military Affairs is a great committee in this House. It is invested with great authority. It is presumed to have made very careful investigation of these various items for which it is recommending these appropriations.

I must confess that I was very much astounded when I heard the distinguished member of that committee from New York, Maj. LAGUARDIA, apparently with deliberation, apparently without any reservation whatever, declare that this appropriation was a straight-out steal from the Treasury of the United States. Now, gentlemen, that is a serious charge for a member of a great committee to make, not only against those who may be privately interested in this, but against the merits of the proposition, and also against his colleagues upon the committee, and I assume that the distinguished gentleman did not make that charge lightly or unadvisedly, and I now desire to ask him if after reflection he desires to reiterate the charge he made a few moments ago that this appropriation was a steal, which implies a felonious taking away of Government money out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The first thing that was demanded after the armistice was the purchase of this Moraine property——

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am asking the gentleman if he reiterates his statement deliberately and emphatically made a few moments ago that this particular appropriation of $2,500,000 was a steal?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I will give the facts, and the gentleman can draw his own conclusions.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman seems to be of the same opinion. Now, gentlemen, that implies either one or the other of two propositions, either that those who are privately interested in this enterprise in Ohio have hoodwinked the Committee on Military Affairs by a fictitious statement of fact to them to show the necessity for this appropriation, or else that the members of the committee have ignorantly and unwittingly allowed themselves to be made the tools for a steal for some private concern.

Mr. FIELDS. Or else that the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not know whether he does or not. I have been sitting here undertaking to get light upon this proposition, and here is a distinguished member of that committee, a member of the majority party, who has lately been highly honored by the electorate of the greatest city in the United States of America, who upon his own responsibility as a Representative and as a member of that committee, deliberately puts in the RECORD and before the country the statement that here is a proposition of a steal out of the Treasury of the United States for private interests.

On the other hand the distinguished acting chairman of that committee, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] and other Republican members of the committee, say it is a bona fide transaction, and the dilemma that we are left in who are in doubt about this proposition is whether to believe that the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA], who has had larger experience in aeronautics than other members of the committee, knows what he is talking about and that this is a steal, or whether these other gentlemen are correct. So we are left at the end of this debate in the same situation that we were at the beginning of it, without any real facts upon which to base a conclusion.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Did the gentleman hear the chairman of the committee state that while a subcommittee visited this field at Dayton the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA], who made the statement to which the gentleman from Alabama referred, found himself unable to accompany the committee? And did the gentleman also hear the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD], who represents the district and who knows the land personally and has a personal acquaintance which he can bring to bear upon this issue, state what his personal knowledge is?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am inclined to think that the preponderance of testimony is in favor of the project, but it is important that Members in high responsibility in this House should not lightly make statements of the sort that have been made characterizing this propositon as a steal, or else they ought to have facts upon which to base a statement of that serious character.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. FISHER] made some references to the investigation of aircraft production during the war in a way to lead this House and the country to believe that the conclusions of Justice Hughes after that investigation were in the nature of a certificate of good character for everyone concerned in that important work. That obliges me to call attention to this fact, which would not seem, perhaps, to have great relation to the question before us, except that gentlemen have urged the perfection of aircraft production as an argument for acquiring this Dayton property. This obliges me to call attention to the fact that the report of Justice Hughes did call into question, among others, the conduct of one distinguished citizen of Dayton, one Col. Deeds, and recommended his court-martial because of his conduct in connection with aircraft production; but, notwithstanding the recommendation of the distinguished Mr. Justice Hughes, there was no court-martial of Col. Deeds and there was no attempt by the Secretary of War to get a court-martial, but, on the contrary, a number of distinguished men in the War Department tendered to Col. Deeds a banquet, at which the Secretary of War spoke in most glowing terms of the distinguished services of this citizen of Dayton.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman——

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I think I have a right to be heard at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, upon what does the gentleman from New York take the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. Upon his motion to strike out the last word.

Mr. BLANTON. He has not made that motion.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I make that motion.

Mr. BLANTON. He has already spoken once on the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BLANTON. I simply want to know whether we are proceeding according to the rules of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. We are.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. In reply to the statement made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] I think I ought to give some facts. I will state that in the first place we started out to put the technical division at Langley Field, and at that time the technical division was under the control of Col. Deeds, who has been mentioned by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON], and he transferred it to McCook Field. McCook Field was then as large as it is now. It has not shrunk any since that time. It was too small then, as it is too small now. We paid a handsome rent for it, but the first thing that the department asked for after the war was the purchase of this Dayton proposition.

Now, gentlemen, it has been stated here that we are to pay $850 an acre for this property. The assessed value is $85 an acre, according to the telegram received from Dayton. These people were either stealing their taxes from the State of Ohio or they are now trying to steal from the United States Government.

I defy and I challenge any man in the Aviation Service to say that this purchase is indispensable to the air service of the United States. It is not indispensable, and whatever technical experiment work we are doing at McCook Field we can carry on at Langley Field.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman now reiterates his charge, and I assume from the statement which he has made that it follows logically that any man who votes for this project in view of the information that the gentleman has given to the House, votes for a deliberate steal out of Treasury of the United States.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is not a fair question. If the gentleman wants to put himself in that position, I can not help it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am seeking information and advice.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If the gentleman wants information I will tell him that this purchase is not necessary to the air service, and the only thing that the Secretary of War asks for in the hearings for appropriation for 1919-20 was the Dayton-Wright property. That was the only constructive suggestion that he had when he came before us, and if the gentleman will look at the hearings he will find that. This is not necessary, and we are asked to pay $850 an acre for land that is assessed at $85. We have other fields to go to, and this land is now controlled by the same people who controlled the McCook Field. They now want us to release that lease, and the gentleman can draw his own conclusion.

Mr. BUTLER. When was the assessment made?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I suppose that is this year's assessment. I got the telegram on June 22.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the gentleman know whether or not any buildings have been put on the land since it was assessed?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I do not doubt that the Army—the Aviation Service—could make very good use of this Dayton-Wright plant. I have no doubt that it could make very good use of a great deal of money which might be given to them for various purposes, and it may be that we ought to pay $1,000 an acre for 1,500 acres of land, although it does seem to me that for that amount of ground the price is rather high for any sort of industrial purpose. After all, what we are confronted with is the question whether we will make any effort to economize in making the appropriation for the Government for the next fiscal year. We can not keep on making expenditures upon a war basis unless we raise the money by borrowing it through the issuances of bonds or by increasing the taxes. Who is there here who wants to vote for a bill to increase the taxes of the people of the country? Who is there here who has the nerve to say that he is in favor of issuing bonds to pay the running current expenses of the Government? This is one of the current expenses of the Government. Who is there in favor of making all of the appropriations which may be asked for by the various departments of the Government?

I have the greatest respect and feel the highest honor for the officers of the Army. Individually they are honest and capable. Collectively they think it is their business to raid the Treasury and get all of the money they can which they think can be used in the interest of increasing the efficiency of the Army, and they are not limited by any provision except where we limit them by votes. That is their business. I have no criticism of them for making the requests. It is our duty to determine whether we will tax the people more to accede to the requests.

The Government is not going to fail, the Aviation Service is not going to fail, if we do not make the appropriation; but if we keep on making appropriations because the departments ask for them, because the Army wants them here or there, and gives good reasons for them, some day—I do not know how soon it will be, but it will not be along partisan lines—the people will rise up and send a body of men here who will cut regardless of knowledge or care.

I have not much hope of getting help in economy from the Democratic side of the House. I have never known them, except upon rare occasions, to vote against expenditures where the Republicans were in control of the House. I regret very much to oppose the action of one of the great committees of this House, for the members of which I have the highest respect and consideration; but I believe the time has come when the representatives of the people of the United States must determine whether they are going to reduce expenditures or increase them. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I understand the proposition now is on the committee amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Those opposed to it should vote in the negative.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ANTHONY) there were—ayes 48, noes 50.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Mr. LAGUARDIA and Mr. ANTHONY to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 58, noes 58.

The CHAIRMAN. On this question the ayes are 58 and the noes are 58, and the amendment is rejected.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, we counted Gen. SHERWOOD's vote wrongly. He voted in the affirmative, and we counted him in the negative.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, is it too late to correct that?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the Chair could do nothing more or less than to announce the vote as reported by the tellers; and, since the Chair has made the announcement, as far as the Chair is concerned, the result will stand.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARD. The Chairman of the committee should certainly be permitted to give the correct statement of the vote. The vote in the affirmative was 59 instead of 58.

Mr. WALSH. But he announced 58.

Mr. GARD. He has the right to correct it.

Mr. WALSH. Not after the vote is declared.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks he ought to say to the gentleman from Ohio that, of course, the Chair is not interested in any way in the matter except from a parliamentary standpoint. The Chair has no personal interest upon either side of the question. There is but one thing for the Chair to do, and that is to announce the result as it is handed to him by the tellers.

After the announcement of the result it is impossible to open the case and the Chair refuses to permit it. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Chairman may be permitted to state the correct vote.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair state the question. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the Chairman be permitted to state the correct vote. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LONGWORTH: Page 10, after line 11, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"Nitrate plants: To complete purchase of real estate contracted for in connection with the erection of nitrate plant at Ancor, Hamilton County, Ohio, $180,000."

Mr. CALDWELL. I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. I make a point of order that the amendment is not germane.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman kindly reserve the point of order.

Mr. CALDWELL. I will reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The gentleman from Ohio is in order.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the Chair hear me in regard to the point of order that it is not germane under the rule?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has decided.

Mr. SNELL. Regular order!

The CHAIRMAN. The question can not be opened up again and continue to be opened up. If the Chairman opens it up for the gentleman from Texas, he would have to open it up for everybody else on the floor. The point of order is overruled, and the gentleman from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is offered in connection with the purchase of ground for one of the three ill-fated nitrate plants that this Government has erected or partly erected. Some hundred and odd million dollars, probably more, have already been expended upon these three nitrate plants, which up to date have contributed absolutely not a pound of material of any use to the United States. Gentlemen will recall—and I do not intend, I will say to the gentleman my friend from Alabama to discuss the merits of the Muscle Shoals proposition—I will merely state that after the Muscle Shoals plant had been put under way the Government decided to build two other nitrate plants, two units equal to the Muscle Shoals unit, and a point in my county was decided upon for one of these. Why they chose that particular locality in my county no human being will ever know, but they made arrangements to acquire the land and proceeded with the construction of the plant. Up to date about $6,000,000 has been expended there, and the plant ceased construction when about 17 per cent completed. What the cost would have been if 100 per cent had been completed the Lord only knows; but the facts are these, that all the money due and payable to the contractors for those buildings has been paid in full, but not one cent has been paid to the people—all poor people—whose land was taken from them for the purpose of the erection of this plant. I shall not go into the details or present absolutely accurate figures, and I am speaking only in round numbers. The Government undertook to condemn an area of about 2,000 acres, all belonging to small farmers. In some cases they entered upon and took the land practically without notice. In other cases they negotiated options with the owners. The option usually read—I think in every case read—that the Government agreed to purchase this land at the end of 60 days at the agreed valuation, provided that it was found necessary for the erection of the plant. Since construction has ceased the Government now desires to occupy only 400 of those 2,000 acres, and forces the owners of those acres outside of the 400 upon which these ruins now stand to take back their farms, in some cases take back half their farm, one-half being left in the area under actual occupation.

Now, the fact is, as I say, all these people were poor people. Their farms were taken away from them. They in some cases bought other farms. Some sold their stock. In some cases they bought farms on mortgages in some other part of the country or engaged in some other business. I know of one young man whose farm was taken from him absolutely without notice—some 30 acres. He has sold his stock, his wagons, his implements, his cattle, and has bought a small grocery store. Now that farm would be of no conceivable use to him. He could not afford to take it back, and he, like everybody else, has not been paid one cent. Again, let me say that the rich contractors, the men who made the large profits, the Air Nitrate Corporation, which has been heard of in this House before, was paid a very large sum merely for superintending the construction of this plant, but not one of these poor farmers, who parted with their land against their will, has had one cent in 15 months. Now the Government says, "We are not going ever to occupy this plant. We only want 400 acres. We decline to carry out the rest of our contract with you." What is the result? They would have the right to bring a suit in the Court of Claims, and I suppose possibly they can get judgment. But we older Members of this House know if they were paid in 20 years they would be lucky, even if they got such a judgment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LONGWORTH. May I have five minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Now, the object of this amendment is simply this——

Mr. SHERWOOD. Has the gentleman taken it up before the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. LONGWORTH. No; it was not necessary to bring it before the Committee on Military Affairs, because the department has ruled that they have the right to pay compensation for the 400 acres, but they have not the right to pay for the rest of the 2,000 acres. And the effect of my amendment will be precisely the effect that this bill has in such cases of the acquisition of these large camp areas—that the people owning property within those areas can receive compensation. It does seem a shame, gentlemen, that this great Government in acquiring property of this sort and in erecting these plants, which, unfortunately, in this case, was utterly useless expenditure of money, should fail to pay the little man. If the big fellow, the man that made large profits out of the erection of these buildings, is to be paid in full immediately, is it not fair that the poor men, whose property was taken away from them, should receive compensation for what they have lost? That is the only object and purpose of this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I shall support the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio. I happen to have had an opportunity of obtaining some first-hand information concerning the situation at Anchor. Subcommittee No. 5 of this Special Committee on Expenditures paid a visit to this plant, and while there the facts were developed, not in the way of testimony before that committee but at a hearing of the Cincinnati Claims Board, at which the members of the subcommittee were present. And the equities presented by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] are truly presented. Now, in supporting the amendment, however, let me say that I do not wish to be a party to the inferential criticism which the gentleman from Ohio has made of the policy adopted toward the Air Nitrates Corporation, or of the Air Nitrates Corporation itself. Much has been said about the Air Nitrates Corporation. That is a matter upon which I propose to reserve judgment until the facts are developed before the committee of which I am a member. I believe, though I can not be sure—I see the gentleman from Illinois present, the chairman of the committee—I believe that company, in a statement recently, denied it had received full payment for that work there. I do not remember the exact statement made, and I do not care to go into that anyway, but the gentleman from Ohio referred to it, and I understand the company has denied that full settlement has been made of it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If the gentleman will yield—I did not state they had been paid in full. I simply stated that all the contractors, so far as I understood, for the buildings have been paid in full for the amount of work done.

Mr. GARRETT. So far as the purpose of our present discussion is concerned, it is immaterial. The farm owners, those who own the farms in that valley that were taken, were dispossessed of their lands. They were placed in such a situation that they could not utilize them, and it is right and proper that full authority should be given to the War Department, and that the department should exercise that authority to pay these people for the land that has been taken and for which they can not be recompensed in damages. It is one of those just cases similar to many——

Mr. CALDWELL. Is not the reason why the War Department can not settle now because of the provision that was put in the bill, the same as created these other additions?

Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman is right, and it is that point I wish to call attention to, because I wish to say there is no criticism from my standpoint to be attached to the War Department because of the failure to pay these parties, because the act of Congress placed here on the military bill, ill considered, as I said the other day in opening the discussion on the resolution that made this bill in order, passed without full investigation and without realization of the extent to which it was going, did bring about the situation by which these innocent people there in this splendid valley, near the great city of Cincinnati, have been deprived of their rights.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH].

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I rise to refer, first, to another matter in the bill.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Before the gentleman starts, I would like to ask him a question, as he is a member of the committee. Can he answer this question: Should not such situations as are presented by the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] be dealt with in some general way instead of a single, isolated case being considered? If there are a large number of these cases, why should they not be rectified by general legislation?

Mr. FIELDS. I think so; but I hope the gentleman will not take my time.

Mr. Chairman, since the House has just adopted an amendment striking from the bill the Wright-Dayton Field, which is the engineering school for the Aviation Service of the Army, which is the very basis of that service, I am of the opinion that it would not be in the interest of economy to maintain all the fields that are provided for in this bill. First, I want to say that I am for liberal provisions for the Air Service. I think it is an important service, and I have been for the items in the bill, but since this important item has been stricken from it I believe that the maintenance of the entire number of fields provided for in the bill would not be in the interest of economy, because with the engineering school destroyed you could not properly operate the fields.

It is now too late to offer an amendment to strike a part of these items from the bill. The only way to do it, therefore, is through a motion to recommit.

What I want to do is to get some of these items out of the bill since the engineering school has been stricken out. I realize the necessity of fields on the western coast and on the Mexican border. I would not interfere with the fields at Houston and San Antonio, Tex., or at Riverside, Calif.; but it seems to me, in view of the situation with which we are confronted, we could well afford to dispense with the field at Rantoul, Ill., and the one at Park Field, Tenn., and the one at Sacramento, Calif., and the one at Miami, Fla., leaving the fields at Houston and San Antonio, Tex., and at Riverside, Calif. I shall make all the effort at my command to strike from the bill lines 11, 12, 13, and 14. I should not have done so and would not do so if the committee amendment providing for the purchase of the Wright-Dayton field had not been stricken from the bill. But since that has been done, I contend, gentlemen, it is in the interest of both economy and efficiency to reduce the number of these fields, and I hope when the time comes that the committee will support my efforts. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken, and the chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 63, noes 24.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McKENZIE: Amend by adding at the end of the bill, on page 10, the following:

"Provided, That no contract for the construction covered by the appropriations contained in this bill or the unexpended balances of appropriations heretofore made for the support of the Military Establishment, except repair work the cost of which can not be clearly estimated, shall be let to any contractor under what is known as the cost-plus percentage, or cost plus a fixed fee for compensation system form of contract: Provided, however, That work on construction let under such system now under process of completion may be completed."

Mr. CALDWELL. That does not apply to the past, but only for the future?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes. Mr. Chairman, I dislike to take up the time of the House at this late hour, but I want simply to say that the purpose of this amendment is to prevent the letting of any future contract for construction provided by the appropriations contained in this bill or any of the unexpended balances referred to in the bill under the cost-plus system. [Applause.] The argument during the war was that haste was necessary and we had to have it; but God knows that haste is not necessary now. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARD: Page 10, line 10, insert: "For purchase of Dayton-Wright plant and real estate at Dayton, Ohio, $2,740,000."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment. It has already been passed upon by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. There can be no question about it.

Mr. GARD. But it is a different amendment, Mr. Chairman. The amendment is different.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that the subject has been passed upon by the committee and already decided upon adversely to the gentleman offering the amendment. We have passed the paragraph also.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will look it up.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Surely.

Mr. WALSH. Is the language of the gentleman's amendment the same as the committee amendment with a different amount?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. The committee amendment might have been amended by changing the amount. Does the gentleman from Ohio contend that he can now offer exactly the same amendment with a different amount?

Mr. CANNON. He could keep us here three months in that way.

Mr. GARD. This is the first opportunity we have had of voting on the proposition with a different amount.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, no; the committee amendment could have been amended.

Mr. GARD. The supposition is that while the House might not desire to purchase at one figure, it might desire to do so at a different figure.

Mr. WALSH. But the proper way to do that would be by offering to amend the committee amendment when it was under consideration.

Mr. CALDWELL. Under the agreement we had in the House this was to be considered as the text of the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. No; the gentleman is wrong about that. This was an amendment to the text of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I submit that the gentleman from Ohio had an opportunity when the amendment was under consideration to have offered an amendment to perfect the committee amendment. The subject matter has already been passed upon.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, if I understand the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] correctly, he states that the only difference between his amendment and the committee amendment which was rejected is in the sum of money.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman might have offered an amendment changing the amount when the committee amendment was under consideration; and after we have acted on that very item I do not quite see how it can be offered in the same form, with the figures a little different, when we have passed beyond that part of the bill. We are not considering the part of the bill contained in line 10 now. We have adopted two new paragraphs.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair believes that, having disposed of the subject matter of lines 10 and 11 by rejecting them and later having adopted amendments putting on two other propositions, the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio is not in order. The Chair believes that his amendment is substantially the same as the amendment which was rejected, and therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GARD. I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment by inserting the word "construction" after the words "real estate" and to reoffer it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment in the particular he has stated. Is there objection.

Mr. SNELL. I object.

Mr. GARD. Then I reoffer the amendment, to come in after the McKenzie amendment, and in this language:

For purchase of Dayton-Wright plant and real estate and construction at Dayton, Ohio, $2,740,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARD: Page 10, line 10, insert, following the McKenzie amendment: "For purchase of Dayton-Wright plant and real estate and construction at Dayton, Ohio, $2,740,000."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the substance of that amendment was offered by the committee and was rejected, and that several other matters have intervened since then, and that we have passed on it; that the subject of this amendment has been disposed of by the Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. DARROW. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DARROW: Page 10, at the end of the bill, insert: "For Philadelphia quartermaster terminal, Philadelphia, Pa. For purchase of real estate, $319,500."

Mr. DARROW. Mr. Chairman, a contract was entered into by the War Department for the purchase of this real estate, on which the department has erected buildings for the quartermaster service. The department was not able to carry out the contract because of the resolution passed by the House, which prevented them from purchasing any more real estate. These people want either their property returned to them or their money, as agreed upon by the War Department.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DARROW].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. OGDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MADDEN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8819) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1919, had directed him to report the same back to the House with amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The SPEAKER. The previous question was ordered by the rule.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair thinks that no quorum is present.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Alexander	Doughton	Hicks	Kraus
Anderson	Dupré	Holland	Kreider
Aswell	Eagan	Houghton	Langley
Ayres	Eagle	Hudspeth	Layton
Barbour	Echols	Hulings	Lazaro
Blackmon	Ellsworth	Humphreys	Lea, Cal.
Bland, Mo.	Elston	Hutchinson	Lehlbach
Britten	Fairfield	Igoe	Little
Burke	Ferris	James	McClintic
Carter	Fess	Johnson, Ky.	McDuffie
Clark, Fla.	Focht	Johnson, Wash.	McFadden
Cleary	Freeman	Johnston, N. Y.	McGlennon
Copley	Fuller, Mass.	Jones, Tex.	McKenzie
Costello	Gandy, S. Dak.	Juul	McKeown
Davey	Goldfogle	Kahn	McKinley
Denison	Goodwin	Kelley, Mich.	McLane
Dewalt	Gould	Kennedy, Iowa	McLaughlin, Mich.
Dickinson, Iowa	Graham, Pa.	Kennedy, R. I.	McLaughlin, Nebr.
Donovan	Hamill	Kettner	MacGregor
Dooling	Hamilton	Kiess	Mason
Doremus	Haugen	King	Michener
Miller	Porter	Siegel	Voigt
Minahan, N. J.	Radcliffe	Sims	Walters
Montague	Ramsey	Slemp	Watson, Va.
Moore, Ohio	Reber	Small	Webster
Moore, Pa.	Robinson, N. C.	Steele	Wheeler
Moores, Ind.	Rowan	Strong, Pa.	Williams
Morin	Rowe	Sullivan	Wise
Newton, Minn.	Sabath	Sumners, Tex.	Yates
Nicholls, S. C.	Sanders, Ind.	Swope	Young, Tex.
Nichols, Mich.	Sanders, La.	Taylor, Ark.	Zihlman
Nolan	Saunders, Va.	Thompson
Osborne	Schall	Upshaw
Pell	Scully	Vare
Phelan	Sears	Venable

The SPEAKER. On this call 289 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

The SPEAKER. The previous question is ordered under the rule. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the reading of the engrossed bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan demands the reading of the engrossed bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, some gentlemen express a desire to be informed in respect to the business to come up tomorrow. The present expectation is that there will be presented a rule providing for a report from the war investigating committee, which will take up the major portion of the day.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I renew my demand for the reading of the engrossed bill.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 3284. An act to provide for the national welfare by continuing the United States Sugar Equalization Board until December 31, 1920, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, December 13, 1919, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting reports showing typewriters, adding machines, and other labor-saving devices exchanged during the fiscal year 1919 (H. Doc. No. 508); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, transmitting report showing the number of employees receiving the increased rate of compensation for the first four months of the fiscal year 1920 (H. Doc. No. 509); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. PARKER, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 3427) to establish a commission to report to Congress on the practicability, feasibility, and place, and to devise plans for the construction of a public bridge over Niagara River from some point in the City of Buffalo, N. Y., to some point in the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 492), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. RAYBURN, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10883) authorizing the counties of Beaufort, S. C., and Chatham, Ga., to construct a bridge across the Savannah River at or near Savannah, Ga., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 493), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. WINSLOW, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10558) granting the consent of Congress to the Connecticut River Railroad Co., its lessees, successors, and assigns, to construct a bridge across the Connecticut River, in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 494), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. SIMS, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10922) to grant the consent of Congress to the Alfords Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Savannah River, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 495), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. VOLSTEAD, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the resolution (H. Res. 394) requesting the Attorney General to furnish to the House of Representatives certain information regarding the fixing of the price of sugar, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 496), which said resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 3076) authorizing suits against the United States in admiralty, suits for salvage services, and providing for the release of merchant vessels belonging to the United States from arrest and attachment in foreign jurisdictions, and for other purposes, reported the same with an amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 497), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. EDMONDS, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 696) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of Frank S. Bowker, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 491), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. O'CONNELL: A bill (H. R. 11113) to prohibit the exportation of sugar from the United States and its possessions; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11114) authorizing the United States Sugar Equalization Board (Inc.) to purchase the entire Cuban sugar crop for the United States and its possessions; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. BOX: A bill (H. R. 11115) to amend the act entitled "An act to exclude and expel from the United States aliens who are members of the anarchistic and similar classes," approved October 16, 1918; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. ZIHLMAN: A bill (H. R. 11116) granting additional compensation to the officers and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, including nurses (female); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. RAKER: A bill (H. R. 11117) defining sedition, the promoting thereof, providing punishment therefor, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GANDY: A bill (H. R. 11118) authorizing the consolidation of lands in the national forests in the State of South Dakota; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. DAVILA: A bill (H. R. 11119) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1917; to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

By Mr. SCOTT: A bill (H. R. 11120) fixing the per diem compensation of grand and petit jurors; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. RHODES: A bill (H. R. 11121) to establish a national military park to commemorate the Battle of Pilot Knob, Mo.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DARROW: A bill (H. R. 11122) to save daylight; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. BRIGGS: A bill (H. R. 11123) for the erection of a post-office building at Crockett, Tex., with an appropriation of $100,000 for such purpose; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. WOODS of Virginia: A bill (H. R. 11124) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire, by condemnation or otherwise, such additional land in the city of Roanoke, Va., as may be necessary for the location of a new building, or for the enlargement of the present post office and Federal office and court building in said city, to cause the present building to be enlarged, or a new building erected, and making an appropriation therefor; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. MONTAGUE: A bill (H. R. 11125) to increase the salary of the United States marshal for the eastern district of Virginia; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DALLINGER: A bill (H. R. 11126) to save daylight in the first zone; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. WATKINS: A bill (H. R. 11127) making appropriation for the improvement of navigation in Sabine River in Louisiana and Texas; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11128) making appropriations for the improvement of navigation of Red River in Louisiana and Arkansas; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11129) to provide a site and public building at Homer, La.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11130) to provide a site and public building at Mansfield, La.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also (by request), a bill (H. R. 11131) to make the Star Spangled Banner the national anthem; to the Committee on the Library.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ASHBROOK: A bill (H. R. 11132) granting an increase of pension to John N. Clark; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BENHAM: A bill (H. R. 11133) granting an increase of pension to Robert Davis; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11134) granting an increase of pension to Luther Bedel; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11135) granting an increase of pension to August H. Knippenberg; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11136) granting an increase of pension to Flavius J. Cole; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11137) granting an increase of pension to David M. Haskell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11138) granting an increase of pension to John E. Collins; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11139) granting an increase of pension to Webster Cotton; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11140) granting a pension to Flora Heath; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BLACKMON: A bill (H. R. 11141) to retire Maj. R. M. Angus as a second lieutenant; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BROOKS of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 11142) granting an increase of pension to Andrew Reiber; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11143) granting a pension to Thomas Skaggs; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11144) granting an increase of pension to Sarah N. Bolinger; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11145) granting an increase of pension to William W. Freshwater; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11146) granting an increase of pension to Alice Moore; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CASEY: A bill (H. R. 11147) granting an increase of pension to Thompson S. Lozaw; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CLARK of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 11148) granting an increase of pension to Joseph J. Dalbey; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DALLINGER: A bill (H. R. 11149) to authorize the President of the United States to appoint Charles A. Ranlett, major of Infantry; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DARROW: A bill (H. R. 11150) granting a pension to Louise H. Thornton; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DENISON: A bill (H. R. 11151) granting a pension to Charley Thomas; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GANDY: A bill (H. R. 11152) for the relief of the First National Bank of Belle Fourche, S. Dak.; to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

By Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina: A bill (H. R. 11153) for the relief of the widow of Hugh B. Ward; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HARRELD: A bill (H. R. 11154) for the relief of Arthur Frost; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HULL of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 11155) granting an increase of pension to James C. Smith; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 11156) granting a pension to Annie E. Walker; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KELLEY of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 11157) granting an increase of pension to Marshall F. Truax; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LEA of California: A bill (H. R. 11158) for the relief of the Liberty loan subscribers of the Santa Rosa National Bank; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LONGWORTH: A bill (H. R. 11159) granting an increase of pension to Peter T. McQuain; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11160) granting a pension to James B. Bristow; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MINAHAN of New Jersey: A bill (H. R. 11161) granting a pension to Elizabeth S. Ennis; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MORGAN: A bill (H. R. 11162) for the relief of A. W. Holland; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. RADCLIFFE: A bill (H. R. 11163) granting a pension to James Hanna; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RICKETTS: A bill (H. R. 11164) granting a pension to Presima W. Plummer; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11165) granting a pension to Ferdinand Lambert; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11166) granting an increase of pension to Augusta Lambert; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SCOTT: A bill (H. R. 11167) granting a pension to Charles Grunert; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11168) granting a pension to Thomas G. Aldreg; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMITHWICK: A bill (H. R. 11169) granting a pension to John J. Boggs; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. STEVENSON: A bill (H. R. 11170) for the relief of Elizabeth R. Nicholls and Joanna L. Nicholls, heirs of Joshua Nicholls; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. VAILE: A bill (H. R. 11171) granting an increase of pension to Hugh O. Neville; to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

306. By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of International Reform Bureau, Washington, D. C., for continuation of prohibition in interval between war prohibition and constitutional prohibition; also for extension of prohibition to Americans abroad so far as treaties do not prevent; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

307. Also (by request), petition of City Council of the City of Boston, favoring six months' embargo on the export of sugar; to the Committee on Agriculture.

308. Also (by request), petition of sundry citizens of Illinois, opposing methods adopted by the Government in obtaining injunction against strike leaders; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

309. Also (by request), petition of sundry citizens of Illinois, protesting against methods of the Government in issuing injunction against strike leaders in recent strike; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

310. Also (by request), petition of sundry citizens of Brockton, Ill., demanding that all political prisoners arrested during the war be released; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

311. By Mr. BACHARACH: Petition of Grand Lodge, Knights of Pythias, of New Jersey, praying for the freedom of Ireland; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

312. Also, petition of Grand Lodge, Knights of Pythias, of New Jersey, condemning mob violence in the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

313. By Mr. CAREW: Petition of Industrial Commission of New York, opposing legislation which would place the Bureau of Mines in control of the explosives industry; to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

314. By Mr. CULLEN: Petition of sundry oil companies having oil wells in Mexico, protesting against methods employed by the Mexican Government in seizing oil wells in Mexico; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

315. Also, petition of National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, recommending programs for military, naval, and postal air services; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

316. By Mr. DALLINGER: Petition of Melrose Lodge, No. 1031, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, condemning activities of I. W. W. and Bolsheviki; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

317. Also, petition of Brookline Lodge, No. 886, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, condemning activities of I. W. W. and Bolshiviki; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

318. Also, petition of Paul Revere Branch, Friends of Irish Freedom, favoring House bill 3404; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

319. By Mr. EMERSON: Petition of the Federated Churches of Cleveland, Ohio, urging that aid be given to the people of Armenia; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

320. By Mr. FULLER of Illinois: Petition of sundry farmers of Illinois, protesting against the importation of corn free of duty from Argentina; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

321. Also, petition of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, of La Salle, Ill., favoring House bill 3404; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

322. Also, petition of Hibbard, Spencer, Bartlett & Co., of Chicago, Ill., favoring reduction of postage on drop letters; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

323. Also, petition of Local Union No. 7, United Brick and Clay Workers of America, opposing the Cummins bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

324. By Mr. GALLIVAN: Petition of New England governors, regarding railroad legislation; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

325. Also, petition of sundry citizens of Massachusetts, favoring embargo on the exportation of sugar; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

326. Also, petition of sundry veterans of the recent war and County Galway Men's Benevolent Association, favoring House bill 3404; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

327. Also, petition of Brookline Lodge, No. 886, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, condemning activities of I. W. W. and Bolsheviki; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

328. By Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts: Petition of General Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, favoring embargo on the exportation of sugar and favoring increased production; to the Committee on Agriculture.

329. By Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania: Petition of Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce, supporting the Government in coal situation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

330. By Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island: Resolutions of Division No. 4, Ancient Order of Hibernians, of Providence, R. I., and Division No. 6, Ancient Order of Hibernians, of Woonsocket, R. I., favoring passage of House bill 3404, providing for appropriation for salaries for ministers and consuls to the republic of Ireland; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

331. By Mr. KING: Petition of William Schelp and 26 other citizens of Quincy, Ill., condemning the usurpation of power which has not been or can not be constitutionally conferred on the courts; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

332. By Mr. O'CONNELL: Petition of Geraldine Branch, Friends of Irish Freedom, favoring House bill 3404; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

333. Also, petition of Missouri and Kansas publishers, regarding solution of paper shortage; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

334. Also, petition of C. J. Tagliabue Manufacturing Co., of Brooklyn, N. Y., favoring 1-cent postage; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

335. By Mr. ROUSE: Petition of Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, No. 314, Covington, Ky., against the activities of the I. W. W. and Bolsheviki; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

336. By Mr. SINCLAIR: Petition of Williston Local, No. 3798, United Mine Workers of America, condemning the efforts of the Association of American Oil Producers in Mexico, the alleged patriotic Association for the Protection of American Rights in Mexico, and other organizations and individuals toward bringing about a war between the United States and a friendly neighboring country for the despoiling of Mexico; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

337. By Mr. TAGUE: Petition of General Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, favoring embargo on the exportation of sugar and favoring increased production; to the Committee on Agriculture.

338. Also, petition of New England governors, presenting resolutions on recognition of Maj. Gen. Clarence R. Edwards; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

339. Also, petition of New England governors, requesting that the United States Shipping Board allocate some of its large ships to New England; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

340. Also, petition of New England governors, regarding railroad legislation; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

341. Also, petition of Brookline Lodge, No. 886, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, condemning activities of I. W. W. and Bolsheviki in the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

342. Also, petition of County Galway Men's Benevolent Association, favoring House bill 3404; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

343. Also, petition of International Association of Railroad Storekeepers, concerning Cummins bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

344. Also, petition of International Association of Railroad Supervisors of Mechanics, regarding railroad legislation; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

345. By Mr. TREADWAY: Petition of New England governors, on return of railroads to private ownership; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, December 13, 1919.

(Legislative day of Friday, December 12, 1919.)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

JOHN B. KENDRICK, a Senator from the State of Wyoming, appeared in his seat to-day.

RAILROAD CONTROL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3288) further to regulate commerce among the States and with foreign nations and to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS].

Mr. JONES of Washington. What is the pending amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS].

Mr. JONES of Washington. There are very few Senators present. There is but one Senator, the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY], on the other side of the Chamber. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Hale	McNary	Smith, Ga.
Brandegee	Johnson, S. Dak.	Moses	Smith, S. C.
Calder	Jones, Wash.	Nelson	Smoot
Capper	Kellogg	New	Spencer
Cummins	Keyes	Newberry	Sterling
Curtis	Kirby	Nugent	Thomas
Dial	Knox	Overman	Trammell
Dillingham	La Follette	Page	Watson
Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Phipps
Gay	McCormick	Poindexter
Gronna	McLean	Sheppard

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-one Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. HARRISON, and Mr. NORRIS answered to their names when called.

Mr. KING, Mr. HARRIS, Mr. JONES of New Mexico, Mr. LENROOT, Mr. STANLEY, Mr. POMERENE, Mr. SUTHERLAND, Mr. CULBERSON, and Mr. COLT entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is absent on official business.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] are detained by illness in their families.

I have also been requested to announce that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM], the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] are absent on official business.

Mr. GAY. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] are detained from the Senate on public business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-three Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The pending amendment is the amendment of the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS].

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL RESERVE ACT—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, I wish to give notice that on Monday next I shall ask the Senate to take up the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill (S. 2472) to amend the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act. Senators will remember that action on the report was postponed several times to accommodate Senators who are interested in the bill, but who were absent. It is my information that they are now here, and that there is no objection to the disposition of the report on Monday next. I think it will take but a short time to dispose of it.

Mr. CUMMINS. In response to the suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut, I feel bound to say that unless the Senate orders otherwise, so far as the committee are concerned we shall feel obliged to keep the railroad-control bill before the Senate.

Mr. McLEAN. I think we will have a morning hour next Monday. I certainly hope that we shall have. This is a very important measure, and I trust the Senator from Iowa will not insist upon a recess, but let us have an adjournment to-day so that we can have a morning hour on Monday.

Mr. CUMMINS. While I recognize the importance of the bill in charge of the Senator from Connecticut, it can not be any more important than the bill now before the Senate.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. The other day I gave notice of an intention to present a resolution, and did present a resolution, changing one of the rules of the Senate in a manner to make it conform to the action the Senate took some years ago in relation to the Senate Office Building. I find that under Rule 40 a day's notice must be given, and I beg to inquire whether that means a calendar day or a legislative day? In other words, may I offer that resolution now?

The VICE PRESIDENT. While it is contrary to the opinion of the Chair, yet, in accordance with the precedents of the House of Representatives, the Chair has ruled that where the word "day" is used in the rules, unless it is specified as a calendar day, it is a legislative day. However, the Senator from Pennsylvania is within the time, as there has been a legislative day intervening since the Senator gave his notice.

Mr. KNOX. Then, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution I now offer be read and considered, stating, however, that, of course, if it provokes any discussion—and I have no idea that it will—I shall withdraw the request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Pennsylvania, as chairman of the Committee on Rules, has heretofore submitted the resolution, which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 260), as follows:

Resolved, That the standing rules of the Senate be amended by inserting in Rule XXXIV, paragraph 2, line 3, after the word "restaurant," the following: "and the Senate Office Building," so that the rules, as amended, will comply with the provisions of S. Res. 291, adopted by the Senate on February 17, 1909.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. J. Res. 260) authorizing the payment of salaries of officers and employees of Congress for December, 1919, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LODGE. I present a memorial from John C. Fremont Post, No. 729, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Ohio, of Alliance, Ohio, indorsing the action of the Senate in refusing to ratify the treaty of peace with Germany without reservations fully protecting the interests and sovereignty of the United States. I ask that the memorial be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the memorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Hon. HENRY CABOT LODGE,
United States Senator from Massachusetts.

RESPECTED SIR: The undersigned members of John C. Fremont Post, No. 729, Grand Army of the Republic, of Alliance, Ohio, wish to express to you our hearty approval and indorsement of your stand and action upon the attempted ratification of the so-called league of nations.

We desire further to say that we believe you have in this fight been fearless, conscientious, and patriotic.

We send to you our best wishes and hopes for long-continued usefulness, prosperity, and health.

WM. M. ROACH
(And others).

Mr. CAPPER presented memorials of Local Lodge No. 571, Brotherhood of Railway Clerks, of Wichita; of Local Lodge, Amalgamated Sheet Metal Workers, of Horton; and of Local Union No. 1898, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, of Girard, all in the State of Kansas, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Cummins railroad bill and praying for a two years' extension of Government control of railroads, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Merchants' Association, Topeka, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation looking to the maximum production of coal and the relief of industrial unrest, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a memorial of the Retail Merchants' Association, of Ottawa, Kans., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing that retailers of manufactured articles carried in interstate commerce attach cost prices to such articles before they are sold to customers, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Ord, Nebr., remonstrating against compulsory military training, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HALE presented a memorial of sundry Jewish citizens of Bangor, Me., remonstrating against the treatment of Jews in Ukrainia, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. COLT presented a resolution of the City Council of Providence, R. I., favoring the enactment of legislation providing for a daylight-saving law for New England, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. SUTHERLAND presented petitions of Elkins Lodge, No. 1135, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of Elkins; of Charleston Lodge, No. 202, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of Charleston; of Martinsburg Lodge, No. 778, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of Martinsburg; and of the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce, of Wheeling, all in the State of West Virginia, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the deportation of undesirable aliens, which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. McKELLAR. I present certain resolutions of Lodge No. 91, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of Chattanooga, Tenn., which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Immigration.

There being no objection the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Immigration and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it resolved by Chattanooga (Tenn.) Lodge, No. 91, of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, That we view with deep concern the spread of disloyalty and seditious sentiment promulgated by syndicalists, I. W. W.'s, and the Bolsheviki;

We believe that the time has arrived when Americans should assert themselves and drive from our shores all disloyal aliens and adequately punish those who betray this country by disloyal acts;

We therefore hereby call upon the United States Congress to immediately enact adequate laws providing for the summary deportation of every alien in this country who is a member of the I. W. W. or any other organization of like teachings and tendencies;

That said laws should further provide for the immediate cancellation of the citizenship papers of any naturalized citizen who shall affiliate with any such organization; and for drastic punishment of all persons who belong to or uphold the doctrines of such organizations;

We believe that no person or organization should be permitted to issue or to circulate any writing or pamphlets which has for its apparent object the undermining of American institutions or the inciting of rebellion.

We further demand that Congress forthwith appropriate sufficient money to effectively and promptly enforce laws enacted concerning these subjects: Be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the two United States Senators from Tennessee and to the Congressman from this district.

W. R. SNYDER, Chairman.

Resolution adopted by a unanimous vote December 9, 1919.
[SEAL.] J. P. WINN,
Secretary Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks No. 91.

Mr. McKELLAR. I also present resolutions adopted by the National Retail Coal Merchants' Association, of Chicago, Ill., which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution 3.

NATIONAL RETAIL COAL MERCHANTS' ASSOCIATION,
Chicago, Ill., December 5, 1919.

After consideration and discussion of Senate bills S. 3296, S. 3297, and S. 3378:

"In re Senator McKELLAR'S bills 3296 and 3297, the executive committee voted unanimously that these bills receive hearty approval, and that the secretary-manager be instructed to convey to Senator McKELLAR the fact of this approval and support. Also that the coal trade of the country be made acquainted with the text of these proposed laws, with a request for similar approval and support.

"In re the bill of Senator EDGE, S. 3378. It is the opinion of this committee that the proposed legislation, as covered by this bill, deserves and has its support. The secretary-manager be, and is hereby, instructed to communicate this opinion to Senator EDGE, and to acquaint the coal trade of the United States with the text of this bill and urge similar approval on the part of our constituent members."

Adopted.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 3533) to provide that certain enlisted men of the Regular Army and the National Guard shall be eligible to appointment to the United States Military Academy; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HARRIS:

A bill (S. 3534) authorizing the erection of a post-office building at Lawrenceville, Ga.;

A bill (S. 3535) authorizing appropriation for purchasing site and erecting post-office building at East Point, Ga.;

A bill (S. 3536) to construct a public building for a post office at the city of Thomson, Ga.;

A bill (S. 3537) authorizing appropriation for purchasing site and erecting post-office building at Decatur, Ga.;

A bill (S. 3538) authorizing the erection of a post-office building at Rossville, Ga.;

A bill (S. 3539) providing for the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a public building at Hawkinsville, Pulaski County, Ga.;

A bill (S. 3540) to provide for the erection of a public building at the city of Canton, Ga.; and

A bill (S. 3541) for the erection of a public building at Nashville, Ga.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts:

A bill (S. 3542) to authorize any person who was wounded while in the military or naval service of the United States during the war with Germany to wear the uniform of the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 3543) to encourage bank deposits by nonresident foreign corporations and nonresident alien individuals, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. SUTHERLAND:

A bill (S. 3544) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Hurricane, W. Va.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

A bill (S. 3545) to revise and equalize rates of pension to certain soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Civil War, to certain widows, former widows, dependent parents, and children of such soldiers, sailors, and marines, and to certain Army nurses; granting pensions and increase of pensions in certain cases; and reducing the minimum length of service from 90 to 75 days;

A bill (S. 3546) granting an increase of pension to Jordan McComick;

A bill (S. 3547) granting a pension to Sarah M. Willison;

A bill (S. 3548) granting an increase of pension to Harriet L. Stone; and

A bill (S. 3549) granting an increase of pension to Samuel McAtee; to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO RAILROAD-CONTROL BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON of California submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3288) further to regulate commerce among the States and with foreign nations, and to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, which were ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. McKELLAR submitted four amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3288) further to regulate commerce among the States and with foreign nations, and to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, which were ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. KING submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3288) further to regulate commerce among the States and with foreign nations, and to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, which were ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. WALSH of Montana submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3288) further to regulate commerce among the States and with foreign nations, and to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

RAILROAD CONTROL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3288) further to regulate commerce among the States and with foreign nations, and to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended.

Tuesday, December 9 (legislative day of Monday, December 8), 1919.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, there are three possible ways of dealing with the railway question at the present time; First, we may permit the roads to go back to private management and control at this time without the financial support of the Government and without legislation radically changing railroad organization, regulation, and control; second, we may adopt the pending bill or some similar measure which has for its purpose the rehabilitation of the railroads and radically changes their organization, regulation, and control; third, we may continue the present Government operation for some period after peace is declared in order thoroughly to test the efficacy of Government operation of the roads under normal conditions. I have suggested that this test period should be five years.

IMMEDIATE RETURN OF THE ROADS IS IMPRACTICABLE UNLESS ACCOMPANIED BY RADICAL AND FAR-REACHING LEGISLATION.

The first proposition, namely, that the roads be permitted to revert to private management at once, without any provision for the immediate and future financial assistance of the Government, has no support among the railway executives, and, so far as I know, has little support among the Members of the Congress or among the people generally. The reason is obvious. Everyone knows that the railroads of the country, if returned to private hands, are incapable of giving the country decent transportation facilities unless they receive assistance from the Government at once of hundreds of millions of dollars and unless their rates and charges are at once increased. That is what we are confronted with. Every bill and every plan which has been proposed for returning the roads to private management has in some form provided for immediate financial assistance of the roads by the Government and the collection from the public of vastly higher rates and charges than now prevail.

Mr. President, I should not dwell at all upon a fact so obvious were it not for the attempt, so persistently made in behalf of the railroads, to make it appear that their present plight is in some way due to Government operation and control during the period of the war. Any such claim is wholly unsupported by the facts. The truth is that the railroad system of this country had broken down prior to the war, and if there had been no war the roads would have been infinitely worse off than they are to-day unless the Government had taken them over to operate them or had financed them.

It is necessary that this vitally important fact be kept in mind in any discussion of this subject, for the purpose of the pending bill is to return the roads to the same men under whose management they became largely bankrupt and wholly inadequate to the needs of the country.

Why, President Wilson—and I call him as my first witness—said in his message to the Congress under date of December 7, 1915:

> The transportation problem is an exceedingly serious and pressing one in this country. There has from time to time of late been reason to fear that our railroads would not much longer be able to cope with it successfully as at present equipped and coordinated.

That, Mr. President, was under private ownership and private operation, with such control as the Interstate Commerce Commission exercised—a very limited control; a control that has at times in the past been denounced on this floor by some of the advocates of this bill as being in the interest of the railroads. You have heard in the course of this discussion, and it has been dinned in your ears by the railroad press of the country ever since the railroads came under Government control, that the railroads were in good condition at that time; that things have gone very badly since then, so far as results are concerned; that the properties have not been properly maintained; that they have been operated at a tremendous loss; that Government operation has been a failure under the most favorable conditions that could be conceived of.

Mr. Alfred P. Thom, counsel for the Railroad Executives' Committee, testified before a special committee of the Senate and the House more than a year before the Government laid its hands on these railroads, on November 20, 1916, with regard to the condition of the railroad property, gave some illuminating testimony on this subject. Mark you, he had made a careful study of the problem.

The Railroad Executives' Committee was formed in 1912, because the revenues of the roads had gotten into such an alarming condition that it was felt that a committee should be formed of the executives of all the roads of the country to consider the question of how the revenues of the roads might be increased. The war had not broken out then, and the administration had not thought of interfering. But so shaky, so unstable and insecure were the railroad companies of this country under private ownership and Government regulation by a commission that back in 1912 they organized an executive committee to save the railroads from ruin. This committee represents about 92 per cent of the railway trackage of the country.

Any critical study of the railroad situation will show that for years there was private manipulation and control, with the superficial regulation, the light touch here and there, of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the slap on the wrist now and then, but the major part of the whole business was clearly and dominantly within the control of the railway executives and the railway companies, and that the railway properties of this country could not carry a fictitious and fraudulent overcapitalization of the roads and ever make out any financial balance that could commend itself to investors. That is the trouble with the whole business.

It is a scheme of railroad transportation that represented a capitalization twice as great as the investment and the true value, and the companies have been bolstered up by false accounting, by fraud of every conceivable sort. I could stand on this floor and recite the testimony of the Interstate Commerce Commission for a week, sir, proving my assertion.

You can not sustain a system of that kind. And now that it has reached the point of utter demoralization we are presented with a scheme to have the Government close its eyes to all of this crime and wickedness and fraud in the past, forget it, and saddle the American people forever with the burden of it. Men who consent to that, Mr. President, ought to be retired from public service to private life.

Mr. Thom, the attorney for this Executives' Committee and its spokesman before the joint committee of the House and Senate, was better qualified to speak for the railways than any other man in the country. In describing the physical condition of the roads at that time and for the years immediately preceding it he said—now listen. Remember he was testifying in 1916, the year before the Government assumed the operation of the roads.

He said:

> Have there been no signs which an intelligent mind can not mistake of a menace to your transportation facilities? Has nothing occurred to arrest your attention? Have we learned no lesson from what happened in 1907, when there was a substantial increase in the business offered to the railroads, and a lack of yards, lack of tracks, and lack of cars brought on the panic in that year? Have we forgotten that the panic of 1907 was a panic of scarcity, not a panic of failures in business, but was a panic brought on by the inability of the communities to deal with another because the railroad facilities were inadequate, congestion everywhere, not yards of sufficient capacity for trains, not tracks sufficient to carry them, not cars sufficient to transport the business of the people? There in that year, in the midst of that plenty, came a panic due to these factors.

This was under private ownership, with a very limited control on the part of the Interstate Commerce Commission:

> There, in that year, in the midst of that plenty, came panic due to those factors. Have we forgotten the fact that in this last spring it became necessary to put an embargo upon the receipts of business in many parts of this country, including your own country of New England, Senator BRANDEGEE, due to the fact that you did not have yards enough and terminals enough to handle that business?

This was in the region, Mr. President, where with unrestrained hand Morgan and Mellen had been operating the New Haven and the Boston & Maine. I say with unrestrained hand, because the reports of the Interstate Commerce Commission itself show plainly enough that those men had their way, their criminal way, unrestrained by the Sherman antitrust law, by the Department of Justice of this Government, or by the Interstate Commerce Commission; and it resulted in one of the scandals that will live as long as railroad history lives.

Mr. President and Senators, you can not over-capitalize properties two or three times and fail to have, under this sort of management, conditions of utter demoralization of transportation and overturning of all the principles of sound finance.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Does the Senator happen to remember what was the aggregate of overcapitalization about November 20, 1916, and whether there has been any change in that capitalization since?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, later on in the course of my discussion I take that matter up, and I think I will answer the Senator's question with absolute definiteness in a little time.

Mr. Thom continues:

> And that embargo was of sufficient importance to cause a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission—Commissioner Clark—to go and take personal charge with a committee of railroad men in that situation and try to work it out; and it remains unremedied to this day, because the fundamental want of yards and terminals and facilities has made it impossible. Do you forget the fact that at this present moment there is such a scarcity of railroad equipment that the commercial interests of the country have risen in arms and the Interstate Commerce Commission is conducting an investigation in the city of Louisville, through one of its members, in order to find a way of supplying with cars the commercial needs of the country?

You have been led to believe from the discussion here that the shortage of cars and all of the imperfections of the transportation system are chargeable to Government interference, but I would like to remind Senators that I am reading now the testimony of the counsel for 92 to 97 per cent of all the railway mileage of the United States, speaking before a committee on the 20th of November, 1916, more than a year before the Government took charge of the railroads, and speaking of conditions which had existed for several years. He said further:

> Are we justified in taking no note of the fact that in the last year there has been a smaller railroad construction than in any year, leaving out the Civil War, since 1848, and that in the last year there have been less than a thousand miles of new railroad construction in the United States? In a field which has heretofore been an inviting field to private enterprise, in a field that has found heretofore at every hand investors who are seeking to invest their surplus means, we find in the last year railroad construction into new territory has been in effect arrested and that nothing is going on in the way of carrying this pioneer of progress into the untouched wealth of the American Continent.

That is almost eloquent, Mr. President.

Mr. Thom testified further before the committee on November 24, 1916, just four days later, and on that occasion dealt principally with the financial condition of the roads and their inability to finance themselves further. I think Members of the Senate who have followed the discussion by the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee here, and particularly the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], must have been impressed with the thought that Government interference has practically ruined the financial condition of the railroads. There is not a fact in railroad history to support that contention for a moment. Whatever burdens the railroads have been under financially which have interfered with their meeting the demands of the public as a transportation system has been due simply to the attempt to conduct the business upon fictitious capitalization.

I have reviewed and have in my notes the history of the overcapitalization of the railroads of the United States. There is not anything approaching it in the business history of the world. It has been the subject of articles, reviews, and volumes by leading financiers of Europe as a protection to English investors in American railway securities. Books have been written analyzing the reports of our railroads so that the falsification could be sifted out and investors could find out exactly the facts upon which to feel warranted in investing their money.

After referring to the fact that the wealth of the country increased about 8 per cent a year, and that the railway facilities should keep pace with this development, Mr. Thom referred to the new money it would be necessary for the railways to obtain annually for the succeeding 10 years, and said:

> We take, then, 8 per cent, as the result of these figures, to indicate the annual growth that must be provided for in railroad facilities of all sorts in order to keep up with the 8 per cent of increase and the business of the country, and the result of that is that during the next 10 years there will be needed approximately $1,250,000,000 a year in order not to constrict the business and productive energy of the country and in order to supply them reasonably with the facilities which this growing business will require.

I saw Senators, the few who attended upon the session, sit here with expressions of surprise upon their faces as the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] disclosed the fact that there had been an appropriation of $1,225,000,000——

Mr. McKELLAR. One billion two hundred and fifty million dollars.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; $1,250,000,000 to take care of railroad finances during the period of nearly two years that the Government has been in possession of the railroads. Here is Mr. Thom talking a year before the Government took hold at all, and estimating that it would take $1,250,000,000 a year "in order not to constrict the business and productive energies of the country, and in order to supply them reasonably with the facilities which this growing business will require." Continuing, Mr. Thom said:

> Now, those figures, of course, are not accurate; those figures indicate a mere attempt to forecast within some sort of reasonable limit the needs of the railroads and the public interest annually during the next 10 years. Those figures apply only to the amount that will be required to increase your facilities—

Now mark that—

> They do not contemplate the amount that will be required to refund your maturing debt—

I am still quoting from Mr. Thom—

> From the best information that we can obtain there will be required to refund maturing debts during that time a sum approximating $250,000,000 a year, so that the requirements of the railroads for new money during the period to which I allude are estimated by us to be $1,500,000,000 a year.

Now, this estimate was made in November, 1916, months before we entered the war. It showed that the railroads must receive $1,500,000,000 of new money annually, $1,500,000,000 in addition to what they were receiving as operating revenue. They were demanding annually a sum in excess of what they were receiving as revenues, larger than was then required for the expenses of the Government of the United States for all purposes.

This estimate did not take into consideration the increase of wages which as events have shown it was necessary to give railway employees during the last two years. Neither did it take into consideration the great increase which has occurred in the cost of fuel and equipment. These items alone would add at least another billion dollars a year in the last two years to Mr. Thom's estimate of the amount of money the roads needed to receive over and above their regular operating income if they were to fulfill their duties as common carriers.

Mr. McAdoo's actual experience with the roads after the Government took them over and he began operating them as director general strikingly corroborates Mr. Thom's testimony given in 1916. In his testimony before the Interstate Commerce Committee on January 3, 1919, Mr. McAdoo said:

> On February 2, 1918, all lines under Federal control were directed to prepare and send in budgets of improvements immediately required to increase capacity and efficiency and promote safety in operation. The letter of instructions provided:
>
> "(a) From the financial standpoint it is highly important to avoid the necessity of raising any new capital which is not absolutely necessary for the protection and development of the required transportation facilities to meet the present and prospective needs of the country's business under war conditions. From the standpoint of the available supply of labor and material it is likewise highly important that this supply shall not be absorbed except for the necessary purposes mentioned in the preceding sentence.
>
> "(b) Please also bear in mind that it may frequently happen that projects which might be regarded as highly meritorious and necessary when viewed from the separate standpoint of a particular company, may not be equally meritorious or necessary under existing conditions when the Government has possession and control of the railroads generally, and therefore when the facilities heretofore subject to the exclusive control of the separate companies are now available for common use whenever such common use will promote the movement of traffic.

Continuing, Mr. McAdoo testified:

> The budget submitted in response to these instructions called for expenditures chargeable to capital account that is exclusive of large sums chargeable to maintenance, amounting in the aggregate to $1,329,000,000, which, upon careful revision, was reduced to $975,000,000.
>
> I wish to say that these budgets were submitted by the corporations themselves, which were at that time still in control of the properties and were operating them under the direction of the director general.

I think that is a fact that ought to be borne in mind in considering the Government operation of the railroads. For a considerable period after they were taken over they were operated by the owners just as they had been before, although there was a general authority exercised, in a very limited way, however, until the Director General of Railroads felt his way along to a knowledge of the situation that would enable him to take a more commanding position in directing the transportation business of the country. But even then it is to be remembered that the men who have run the railroads under Government operation are the railroad officials of the old organizations.

I have my files literally filled with reports from employees in the different transportation districts of the country, charging that the railroad officials whom the director general felt obliged to retain in charge of the transportation service have not been loyal to the Railroad Administration and the Government; but that they have conspired to give Government operation a black eye. In other words, that they have unnecessarily increased expenses and have otherwise been playing into the hands of the railroad owners for the return of these properties to private control. I wish to say to Senators that no man will take that correspondence, running into the thousands of letters, and examine it, some of it coming from men of such standing as must be recognized as authoritative, and not feel that there has been concerted action on the part of many railway officials, retained in important positions by the Railway Administration, to make Government operation a total failure.

Mr. President, Mr. McAdoo, further testifying as to the condition of these roads when they were taken over by the Government, said:

So that these are the budgets which were presented by the railroad corporations and represented what they thought it was necessary or desirable to do to their respective properties. This amount, $975,000,000, which was first authorized by the division of capital expenditures, was subsequently increased from time to time by new and unforeseen requirements, and particularly by large orders for locomotives and freight cars, until the improvements definitely authorized to December 1, 1918, amounted to $1,254,396,158. To an important extent there was inadequacy of terminal facilities and a serious lack of coordination and use of those in existence.

That was not all. He proceeds:

In the fall of 1916 the transportation stringency reached such a point that traffic was almost paralyzed through inability to dispose of it at destination. In the fall of 1917, despite strenuous efforts, and yet under a larger degree of coordination than had ever before been attempted to prevent such a situation, a paralysis of the transportation situation again occurred. * * *

The seriousness of the situation is shown by the fact that on January 1, 1918, there were reported on all roads a total of nearly 145,000 cars accumulated on account of the congestion which prevailed in the territory east of Chicago and St. Louis and north of the Ohio and Potomac in excess of the normal movement.

Now, mark you, Mr. President, that was January 1, 1918, only a few days after the Government had taken over the roads. That was the condition under private ownership, as regulated under the easy-going system of the Interstate Commerce Commission at that time.

It will be recalled that in the latter part of 1916 the Interstate Commerce Commission made an investigation of the failure of the railways to furnish transportation, and in the report of that investigation filed on December 28, 1916, Commissioner McChord said:

In some territories the railroads have furnished but a small part of the cars necessary for the transportation of staple articles of commerce, such as coal, grain, lumber, fruits, and vegetables. * * *

This was a year before the Government took over the railroads. This report is dated December 28, 1916, and relates to conditions under examination months before that.

I quote further from Commissioner McChord's report:

In consequence mills have shut down, prices have advanced, perishable articles of great value have been destroyed, and hundreds of carloads of food products have been delayed in reaching their natural markets.

Mr. McAdoo further testified upon this subject:

In 1918 the railroads in this country were without any reserves of motive power at all.

He is speaking now of the early part of 1918, as will appear. They had not any reserves of motive power. That does not indicate efficiency. That does not indicate a command of a transportation system that is to minister to 110,000,000 people under private as opposed to Government operation. I want to impress upon the Senate that we had a situation that compelled Government operation.

Mr. McAdoo says:

In 1918 the railroads in this country were without any reserves of motive power at all. They went into the winter with nothing in the way of motive-power reserves. They did not have sufficient new locomotives; I mean, they were not delivered; and it was necessary, therefore, to repair the old locomotives. * * * As soon as the armistice was signed I restored the eight-hour day, and we have kept up with our locomotive repairs and now have nearly 1,100 of them in reserve with which to go into the winter, as against none last year.

This evidence, Mr. President, taken from sources most friendly to the railroads, shows how completely had been their failure under private management, and explains why the railroad officials are not willing to take the property back unless they are handsomely paid for doing so and are guaranteed the financial support of the Government for the future.

I shall not now dwell upon the sordid and criminal methods by which the great railway system of this country was wrecked under private operation and converted into a liability instead of an asset. No other industry in all the history of the world has been favored and fostered as have been the railroads of the United States. They have received the value of an empire in gifts of land alone.

Are Senators aware of the extent of the gifts of public land made to the railroads by Congress? They have secured more of the public domain than the homesteaders and homemakers. Under the homestead law there have been entered the sum total of 115,000,000 acres of land. But Congress has granted to the railroads the vast sum of 190,000,000 acres out of the public domain. That is an area equal to the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Iowa, Nebraska, and Wisconsin. They were permitted to have their own way about capitalization. They were allowed to burden transportation by a fictitious issue of stock that is simply staggering and appalling. In addition to that, they have had donated to them a principality in public land—190,000,000 acres! That is not all. They were given outright, by donations, to build their lines and roads, through private and quasi public contributions, town bonds, city bonds, county bonds, municipal bonds of various sorts, farm mortgages in some instances, the individual mortgages of farmers put behind the building of the railroads, and the aggregate of that has been estimated at $2,000,000,000.

The railroads not only received the value of an empire in gifts of land, but they were practically exempted from taxation for years, and they now pay only a moiety of the taxes that they should pay on their property. They possess the great right of eminent domain, enabling them to build their tracks and their terminals where they will. They have been permitted by unfair methods to destroy the great inland water routes of commerce and thus to rid themselves of their only rivals.

Yet, sir, with all these advantages, with all these special privileges, and with the richest country in the world to serve, under private management and control they were reduced to the sorry plight I have indicated and which I have proven, not by the statements of witnesses hostile to them, but by their own attorney, Mr. Thom, supported by Mr. McAdoo, a public official.

A little later I may point out some of the causes which have led to the destruction of the railway systems of the country and show that the bill under consideration will in no wise remove the causes or correct the evils inherent in the former system of private operation. The point I am now making simply at this time is that the railroads of the country were wrecked, not by Government operation during the war, but through private operation prior to the war,——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KIRBY in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let me finish the sentence: And that the demand for new and radical legislation proposed in order to maintain the business of the roads does not arise out of any condition traceable to Government operation during the last two years. Now I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I simply wanted to ask the Senator whether he thought that if the water had been squeezed out of the stock of these companies prior to November 20, 1916—that is, if they had been capitalized at their actual value—the roads would not have gone into bankruptcy?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Oh, no. There is no question about that, Mr. President. Why, the wonderful resources of this country, the products of this country, the tonnage of this country will support, under the liberal transportation charges allowed, any transportation system that may be operated, if it be upon a sound financial basis.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, has there ever been any attempt to squeeze the water out of this stock—this overcapitalization?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Does the overcapitalization exist today just as it did when the Government took the roads over?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Absolutely. Let me say to the Senator from Oregon, when I came into the Senate in 1906 and proposed that there should be a valuation of railroad properties based upon the true value of the property, I could get no support for the proposition. That was in 1906.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. DIAL. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin whether the theory of the bill is not a question of watered stock or of capital stock at all, but of actual valuation of the properties?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will come to that in a little while, and I shall be grateful to the Senator if he will hear me when I do come to it.

The fact is that the railways and their security holders are hundreds of millions of dollars better off to-day as the result of Government operation than they would have been if the roads had continued under their former managers.

THE PENDING BILL.

Mr. President, I come now to consider the pending bill in a more critical way. The second of the possible courses open to us which I have indicated involves the passage of the pending bill or some similar measure which will attempt a rehabilitation of the railroads physically and financially to provide for future maintenance and efficient operation. A mere statement of the character of the legislation proposed ought to be conclusive proof of the impossibility of enacting well-considered legislation upon this great problem between now and the 1st day of January. I understand that the reason why we are to be hurried in the passing of the proposed railroad legislation is because the President in his address to the Congress on the 20th of May last, which was cabled from Europe, stated that it was his purpose to return the railroads to their owners at the end of the calendar year.

The Federal control act, approved March 21, 1918, under which the railroads have been operated, provides as follows:

That the Federal control of railroads and transportation herein as heretofore provided for shall continue for and during the period of the war and for a reasonable time thereafter, which shall not exceed one year and nine months next following the date of the proclamation by the President of the exchange of ratifications of the treaty of peace.

When the President issued his proclamation of December 27, 1917, taking over the railroads pursuant to the authority contained in the act of August 21, 1916, he referred to the war with Austria as the reason for taking over the roads, as much as to the war with Germany. When the act of March 21, 1918, above quoted, fixed the time for the termination of railroad control by the Government as one year and nine months following the proclamation of peace by the President, it meant peace with Austria as well as peace with Germany.

There has been no proclamation by the President of the exchange of ratifications of the treaty of peace either with Germany or with Austria. Since the treaty with Austria has not even been transmitted to the Senate for consideration there is no probability that it will be possible for the President to issue such a proclamation for some considerable time. As the statute extends the period of railway control one year and nine months after such proclamation, the act of the President in returning the roads at the end of the present month, if he does so return them, is optional with him and is one for which he and not the Congress must assume full responsibility.

When the President cabled us his message from Paris last May I do not suppose he anticipated that the time of the Senate would be so fully occupied with other matters that it would be unable to give any attention to railroad legislation until the opening of the present session. Such, however, proved to be the case. I am not questioning the President's power to return the railroads to private operation at the end of the present month if he chooses to do so, but I see no reason to doubt that he will reconsider his purpose in view of the fact, anticipated by no one at the time he sent his message, that the Senate was unable to take up this great problem of railroad legislation until the present session.

I am pleading with the Senators who give me attention at this time for an opportunity to consider the great problem with which we are confronted and not be driven to take this bill that has been reported here, with its novel, not to state it more critically, propositions to be put into operation with only just a week or two to consider them at the outside. It looked yesterday as though the bill were going to be passed without further consideration of the Senate.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I ask the Senator this question? Suppose the President turns these properties over to private ownership at the end of the year, and there is no legislation enacted by Congress, would the country be in any worse fix than it was when the Government took them over, or would it be in any worse fix than it would be in if the bill became a law?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will say to the Senator that while I do not think we ought to turn the roads back without some legislation, I do think it would be infinitely less harmful, less fraught with incalculable disaster, to turn them back without any legislation whatever than to do it under this bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I probably ought not to have interrupted the Senator, but a remark of his sometimes suggests a question in which I feel very much interested.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is all right. I am really grateful to the Senator for his attention to my address here to-day.

It seems to me important, in considering the provisions of the bill, that we should know something of its origin. We are all aware that the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, a majority of whom reported this bill favorably, held a number of hearings in January and February of this year at which various representatives of the railways, the security holders of the railways, chambers of commerce, railway employees, and other organizations appeared and gave testimony. The former Director General of the Railroads, Mr. McAdoo, and the present director general, Mr. Hines, also appeared before the committee, as did several members of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

In addition, various representatives of farmers, of labor, and other organizations appeared before the committee. It would naturally be expected that the views of Mr. McAdoo, who had control of the railroads from the time they were taken over by the Government up to the time of the hearings, or those of his successor, Mr. Hines, would have had great weight with the committee in framing this bill. You will search this bill in vain, however, for anything that remotely resembles the views of Mr. McAdoo or Mr. Hines expressed to the committee in those hearings. It might be expected that the representatives of the railroad brotherhoods, who appeared before the committee and who showed themselves to be among the ablest and best informed witnesses, would have had some weight with the committee and that their views would find some place in this bill. On the contrary, it will be discovered, upon comparing the bill and the testimony of those men, that nothing they advocated is embodied in the bills and that everything they opposed is found in it.

Some 60 or 70 witnesses were heard by the committee. They presented views and plans, sometimes embodying their own opinions, sometimes embodying those of the organizations they represented, but you may examine all the testimony given by those witnesses, all the plans and suggestions presented by them, and you will find nothing remotely suggesting this bill until you come to the testimony of Mr. T. DeWitt Cuyler, of the Railway Executives' Committee. In the plan urged upon the committee by Mr. Cuyler and modified to some extent by the suggestions of the representatives of the railway investors' committee, you will find the substance of every major proposition embodied in this bill.

You will remember that upon the Railway Executives' Committee, which spoke through Mr. Cuyler, are to be found the executives of all the leading railways of the country, representing 92 per cent of the railway trackage of the United States. So when Mr. Cuyler speaks he speaks for the railroads of this country.

There are certain other interested parties in this game. You have the railroads represented by an organized body of their presidents, created in 1912 and continued down to the present time, and you have Mr. Thomas D. Cuyler appearing before the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Senate and telling that committee what kind of legislation the railroad presidents want.

You have also another body, represented by another group of selfish interests, that do not so much concern the public; you have the owners of railroad securities, the gentlemen who have bought the watered stock of these railroads and who, therefore, want rates imposed upon the public high enough to give them a guaranteed return upon their investment. They bought those stocks at all kinds of speculative prices, and if they can get a United States Senate subservient enough and a House of Representatives subservient enough to impose upon the people of the United States a law that shall give them from 5½ to 6 per cent upon those speculative securities, that is good enough for them. So they can afford to have somebody on the ground here to represent their interests. They selected a most able man; his name is Warfield.

Now, Senators, in scanning and analyzing this bill remember two things: That you have represented in this bill the interests of the railroads, presented by Mr. Cuyler, and you have represented in this bill the interests of the security holders, presented by Mr. Warfield, and wherever you find Mr. Warfield and Mr. Cuyler in this bill you find selfish interests in it.

The Railway Security Holders' Committee spoke through their chairman, Mr. Warfield, whose testimony before the committee will be found on page 789 and subsequent pages of the hearings. Mr. Cuyler's testimony begins at page 305 of volume 1 of the hearings, and the essentials of his plan are set forth on pages 308 to 312, inclusive. You have but to compare the propositions urged by Mr. Cuyler and Mr. Warfield with the pending bill to see how exactly the bill represents the wishes of the railway executives and the holders of railway securities.

For example, section 1 of the bill provides for private ownership and operation of the railroads. Paragraph 1 of the railway executives' plan provides for the same thing.

For brevity I will hereafter refer to the railway executives' plan merely as the "railroad plan."

Section 2 of this bill makes the Government carry for a period of 10 years the debt owing to it by the railroads as the result of Federal control without offsetting the indebtedness of the railways to the Government arising out of the same transaction.

Section 18 of the "railroad plan" asserts—and I quote the language—

> Provision should be made for the funding by the United States of indebtedness of carriers to it growing out of Federal control.

Sections 3 to 7 and subsequent sections of the bill propose to create a transportation board to assume a part of the functions heretofore exercised by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Paragraphs 3 and 4 of the "railroad plan" provides for the creation of a department of transportation which corresponds in all particulars to the transportation board of the bill, except that under the "railroad plan" a Cabinet member would have been the head of it; but the railway security holders did not want that. The Railway Security Holders' Committee objected to this particular feature of the "railroad plan," and it was omitted from the bill. See testimony of Mr. Warfield, chairman of the Railway Security Holders' Committee, page 800.

The powers of the transportation board of the bill and the department of transportation of the "railroad plan" are substantially the same.

The provision of section 5 of the bill, continuing in force the existing rates and charges until changed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, is but a paraphrase of section 11 of the "railroad plan," though in justice to the latter it should be said that the four-month guaranty of the standard income of the roads contained in section 5 of the bill seems not to have been requested by the railway executives. The committee went them one better.

Sections 4 and 6 of the bill, providing for a net annual income of 5½ per cent on the value of railroad property, and the manner of distributing the excess which shall be earned by the more profitable roads, merely work out in detail the propositions embodied in paragraphs 1, 2, and 3 of the scheme of the security holders found on page 793 of volume 1 of the hearings, and are suggested more generally in paragraph 8 of the "railroad plan."

Sections 7 and 8 of the bill relate to the transportation board already considered and to the details of its organization.

The scheme for the Federal incorporation of all railroads and their consolidation, and the consequent wiping out of all State control over them, provided for in sections 9, 10, 11, 12, and 13, and some subsequent sections of the bill, merely describe in detail the system of Federal control provided for in paragraphs 19 and 20 of the "railroad plan."

The labor provisions of the bill, beginning with section 25, providing for regional boards of adjustment, merely carry out in detail the provisions of sections 13 and 17 of the "railroad plan."

The antistrike provisions of section 30 of the bill are but a paraphrase of section 17 of the "railroad plan."

In section 31, however, the bill goes further than the "railroad plan," and makes it a crime for anyone in any way to aid the men engaged in a strike.

The provisions of the bill, section 6, also see section 44, page 87, giving to the national authority power to fix all rates, State and interstate, and conferring upon the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to prescribe minimum as well as maximum rates, are demanded in sections 2 and 10 of the "railroad plan."

Even details of the bill, such as requiring a certificate of convenience before terminals or branch lines can be built, pages 7 and 8 of the bill, simply carry out the provisions of paragraph 5 of the "railroad plan."

No one can read this bill who is familiar with the testimony given before the Interstate Commerce Committee without being convinced that the bill was framed in exact compliance with the wishes of the railway officials, with the provision added for a guaranteed return on the investment made to comply with the demands of the committee of railway-security holders.

I do not contend, of course, that this bill should be defeated simply because it embodies the requests of the railway officials and the security holders. I do not even contend that it should be defeated because it ignores and disregards the express wishes of the other and much more numerous classes of people whose representatives argued before the committee in opposition to the claims of the railway-security holders and the railway executives, but I do say that a bill so framed should be carefully scrutinized in all its provisions by every Senator before he gives it his support.

We all know that the railroads of this country have fought against every attempt at Government regulation, whether Federal or State. Every law which requires the railways to pay a fair and reasonable tax upon their property, every law which forbids rebates and discriminations by which individuals and entire communities are often ruined for the profit of railroad managers, every law which seeks to prevent the charging of extortionate rates by the railroads, every law which requires them to take even the most common precautions for the protection of the health and lives of their employees, every law which seeks to protect the public against extortionate rates in order to pay interest and dividends on the watered stock and overcapitalization of the railroads—in fact, sir, every law which seeks to subject the railroads to the rules of honest business conduct, whether the law is State or National, was passed only after the most vicious and bitter opposition by the representatives of the railroads.

Mr. President, we have had government by great interests, and if you want to know what is causing the unrest in this country, you want to look to the fact that men in public office have been serving special interests instead of the public. And to meet that, let me say to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], instead of espionage laws to suppress public complaint, you require, sir, let me say, a reform of the Government itself. Make Government responsive to the public weal and the public interests, and there will be no serious unrest.

I sometimes think, when these repressive methods are under consideration, that if we would give a little more attention to making this Government what Washington made it, and what Lincoln conceived it to be, we would have every man in this country, and every man who comes to this country, supporting the Government—ready to die for the Government. You would not see red flags; you would see the Stars and Stripes if the Stars and Stripes represented the kind of Government that Washington gave us and Lincoln died for.

The trouble with this country, Mr. President, is that men have served corporate interests for 25 years, instead of serving the public, and the public condemns it, is getting restive under it, and criticizes it. They do not like it. They know they have been robbed. They know that instead of prices going up they should have gone down for a quarter of a century. You know that, if you stop a minute to think. There is not any sense in the advance of prices. Advances in price in war times we have always had, but before the war prices should have gone down, down, down, down, every year. Why? Because inventions, because superior organization, because everything that goes to advance civilization, means just that thing, or it means that civilization is a failure.

I must not turn aside for this sort of discussion. It just crossed my mind as I was talking. It takes such hold of me that I do not know when I will stop it if I start on it.

Anybody who comes to the United States comes here because the conditions of the government that he is living under are not satisfactory to him, and because he thinks he will have more freedom here; and, Mr. President, this Government of ours for many, many years has been held to be the asylum of the oppressed. The reason why we can build up the ideal democracy of all the world is because those who yearn for more liberty come here, and liberty under the Constitution is all that one who comes to this country seeks, all that anyone who lives in this country wants, and with that we can have a perfected democracy in this country.

Mr. STERLING. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, does the Senator think they ought to have the liberty when they come here, whether they are foreign born or native born, to advise and encourage the overthrow by force and violence of this Government which Washington fought for and Lincoln died for? Does the Senator think they ought to have that liberty? That is the repressive measure to which the Senator alluded a little while ago.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Now, I will answer the Senator. Mr. President, the Senator represents an idea in this country that stands for suppression and repression. I remember that it was Elihu Root and some members of the Union League who decided and declared that because Senators on this floor had expressed their opinions in the exercise of their constitutional rights they ought to be taken out at sunrise and shot.

Mr. President, the exercise of the constitutional right of free assemblage and free speech is no menace and can never be any menace to this Government. If anybody advocates a change in its form by methods which are un-American, meet it in the forum of free discussion of American principles and American rights, and those false ideas can never survive for an hour. But if you seek to repress them, if you force them into underground channels, if you get them where they can not be answered, then they may do harm. But out in the open, with free discussion, with just simply the literal and spiritual interpretation of the Constitution, a bad idea can not live in the open air and under the sunlight of free, liberal discussion in the United States.

I say just this, Mr. President, that there would be no menace to this Government for a minute, for an hour, if this Government were truly responsive to the interests of the public. It is just exactly that sort of thing in government that has made people critical of this Government, and made them denounce the existing conditions; and I say to you that you can not cure those conditions and purge this Government and make it truly representative without free discussion. If you can not defend your record as a United States Senator, if you can not defend your record as a Member of Congress, or as a governor, on what you have been doing throughout these years, then there is something wrong with your record. If you want to protect that by statutes that shall repress discussion and prevent men from reviewing your record under penalty of going to jail, then you acknowledge a condition of things that is the end of real constitutional democracy.

Mr. President, returning to the further analysis of this bill: I suppose that my experience with the railroads while I had the honor to be governor of the State of Wisconsin is somewhat similar to that which some other Senators had while governors of their respective States. It was always the same old story of bribery and corruption of every description on the part of the railroads to defeat the most necessary legislation for their regulation and control.

So it is that when I read this bill and discover from its history that every major provision in it merely represents the demands of those railroad interests which have always opposed every attempt at honest railway regulation, I feel bound to inquire whether the bill is in the interest of the public or in the interest of the railways. I know of nothing even in the most recent history of railway regulation and management which would lead me to belive that railway methods and purposes at the present time are substantially different from what they were a few years ago. The records and recent opinions of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the recent scandals in the cases of the New Haven Road, the Illinois Central, and the Frisco, the looting of the Chicago & Alton, and the revelations made during the so-called Harriman investigation, all indicate that railway methods and purposes require just as careful watching to-day as they did in the early years of railroad history.

The plan which the railroads brought forward and which has been written into the bill has been the plan of the railroads for several years. Even before the war it had been elaborated and submitted to a special committee of Congress substantially in its present form.

The testimony of Mr. Thom, which I have before quoted, given before the joint committee of the Senate and the House on October 23, 1916, and a pamphlet which he put in as evidence at that time, found on page 41, volume 2, of the appendix of the hearings on the bill, show not only that the railway executives had this plan carefully worked out at that time, but show also how clever was the propaganda which the railroads were then putting forth to secure the adoption of the "railway plan" now before the Senate.

Another bit of railway propaganda which has just come to my attention is found in a dispatch from New York, under date of November 28 last, which I quote from the Washington Herald of November 29. It is as follows:

> The railroads of the United States are about to spend $1,000,000 in six weeks to "educate" the people and the legislative governmental officials of the United States. The purpose of this drive is to inspire legislation favorable to private operation and continued private profits for the railroad owners. The million will be spent before the end of December—the date fixed by President Wilson for the return of the roads. * * * The move is backed by the Association of Railroad Executives, of which Dewitt Cuyler is chairman and Frank Fayant is assistant to the chairman. The offices of the organization are at 61 Broadway. * * * "The purpose of this advertising campaign is to influence the public to demand the proper legislation throughout the United States on the railroads' needs," said one of the men responsible for the campaign. It will set before the public the facts in the railroad situation and urge measures essential to the welfare and safety of the roads under private ownership.

A little later I am going to read you the first one of the announcements of this million-dollar campaign by one of the great railroad presidents of the country who succeeded in getting the front page of the New York Times last Sunday with this advertising stuff.

This article continues:

> Magazines, newspapers, and every kind of periodical publication are to be used. In size and scope this tremendous campaign of publicity has been equaled only by the advertising which the Chicago packers published while they were being investigated by the Federal Trade Commission.

I suggest that it would be well for the public interest if we would educate ourselves on this subject and not leave that labor wholly to the railroads.

THE BILL IS IN THE INTEREST OF THE RAILWAYS AND AGAINST THE PUBLIC INTEREST.

My opposition to the bill is not based alone upon its administrative details or its temporary features. I am opposed to the fundamental principles of the bill. The fact that the bill proposes to make the Government carry for 10 years at least a large indebtedness of the railways to the Government growing out of Government operation of the roads, while requiring immediate payment by the Government to the railways of the amounts owing to them on account of the same transaction, is, of course, unfair, but compared with the other and more vicious features of the bill that is unimportant.

So also the provision in the bill for a guaranty to railroads for four months after they are returned to private control of a certain "standard return" is, in my opinion, wholly unjustified.

But, sir, a guaranty to the roads for four months of a standard return is a small matter as compared with the guaranty forever which this bill gives to them.

[Mr. La Follette yielded the floor for the day.]

Wednesday, December 10, 1919.

Mr. President, I shall proceed to state my further objections to this bill.

1. THE GUARANTY FEATURE OF THE BILL.

Section 6 of the bill provides:

> The commission shall initiate, modify, or adjust rates, fares, charges, and classifications, as nearly as may be, so that the railway carriers as a whole allocated to each district and subject to this act shall earn an aggregate annual net railway operating income equal, as nearly as may be, to 5½ per cent upon the aggregate value, as determined in accordance with the provisions hereof, of the railway property of such carriers in the district held for and used in the service of transportation.

A further provision of the same section provides:

> And it may, in its discretion, add to the basis above mentioned one-half of 1 per cent upon the aggregate value of said property, to make provision, in whole or in part, as the case may be, for what are commonly known as nonproductive improvements, betterments, or equipment, which, according to the custom heretofore prevailing, have been charged to capital account.

So, as a matter of fact, the net operating income provided for really is 6 per cent instead of 5½ per cent, although this one-half of 1 per cent shall not thereafter be capitalized for rate-making purposes.

Senators, do you realize just what that provision means with respect to that one-half of 1 per cent? It means that the public is hereafter to pay rates high enough to provide a part of the property that is used by common carriers, which this bill by its terms vaguely describes as nonproductive property; that that class of property is not to be supplied by those engaged in the business, but that rates are to be charged to the public high enough to make the public supply that part of the property.

I wonder if there are Senators here who get the full import and meaning of that provision of the bill? The common law, before we became an organized Government, established the amount that every corporation or individual engaged in conducting a public-service corporation of whatever character should be entitled to receive. What was it? A reasonable return upon the amount invested in the business, and the owner of that business, individual or corporation, was obliged to furnish all of the plant. The common law of England from the very beginning said that all the return that should be recognized as lawful for one conducting that kind of a business, a public-service business—stage-coach line, tramway, railway, what not—whoever conducted that business should furnish the capital and receive as a remuneration only a fair return upon the amount actually invested in the business.

That came to be the accepted common-law rule, and we took it over, and when we enacted our first interstate-commerce law in 1887 we simply wrote into that the recognized and established common-law rule.

I want to emphasize the fact that this bill radically changes the old common-law rule, radically changes what has been established in every act that has been passed by Congress and by every State in the Union in dealing with public-service corporations; for, whatever may have been the enforcement of the law, however lax it may have been, however much railroad power has been able to manipulate commissions—yet, nevertheless, there has always been recognized and written into the law the principle that the public-service corporation must furnish the capital, and all that it invested in the business, whether it was productive or nonproductive, should be taken into account and listed, and upon the "fair value" of that property it should have a return, and that return should be a "reasonable return."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMITH of South Carolina in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield, with pleasure.

Mr. KING. I think the statement just made by the Senator relative to the common law is entirely accurate. I was trying to brush aside the cobwebs of the past, and recall, if I could, any decisions or statements by publicists and economists who have written with respect to the common law, particularly as to a situation of this character:

Given a certain amount of capital stock which is invested in business which is impressed with a public character, and granting a reasonable compensation upon that capital, naturally that property from year to year becomes, in part at least, obsolescent, and must be renewed. To bring it down to a concrete case, a railroad costs $100,000,000 as an original investment. A fair return, obviously, should be granted upon that investment. From year to year the property deteriorates, and there must be added capital. It would seem to me intolerable that in the course of 20 years, or 10 years, when perhaps as much capital would be called for to keep the road in repair and in proper shape as was originally invested, there should be earnings upon double the original investment.

It has been said by Mr. Hill that it would cost a billion dollars a year to maintain the railroads of the United States in proper condition. Suppose that there were twenty billions—and there are not—but assuming that, in 20 years there would be, then, $40,000,000,000 of investments—the original 20 and 20 added at the rate of one billion each year. The American people ought not to be called upon to pay a return upon an investment of $40,000,000,000.

What I am trying to get at is the Senator's view, if he cares to express it at this time or later on, as to how the railroads should be treated in the way of compensation for the additional capital required to keep the roads up to a proper standard. If you pay 5 per cent only, and it takes 3 per cent or 4 per cent or 5 per cent to keep them up to a proper standard, and it is a capital charge in a way, it would seem to me you would have to increase the amount allowed them. How would the Senator deal with that, if I have in a very rambling and imperfect way made myself clear?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator always makes himself understood. Few Senators on this floor, if any, state their views more clearly than the Senator from Utah. I think he is always especially happy in his expressions, and I am rather glad that he has asked me this question. If I can, I shall be glad to make answer to it.

I understand that the principles that have been recognized as stating the rule in the regulation of public-service corporations were laid down by the United States Supreme Court in opinions rendered in the seventies.

Now, Mr. President, what did those decisions determine? That brings me to answer in a specific way the question of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. They determined that the railroads are bound to provide adequate service and equal service at reasonable rates.

In defining "reasonable rates" the courts decided the public must pay rates high enough to defray all the operating expenses, all the cost of maintenance, and it must pay more than that—a fair return on the amount of money invested in the business. That is all settled, that is all established, and when you have said that you have said all there is about it.

The rate which will supply the cost of operating expense, the cost of maintenance, and a fair return upon the money actually invested in the business is a lawful rate, and any rate beyond that is an unlawful rate. Never since there has been any recognition of public-service corporations and their rights has there been any other principle recognized in law. This bill undertakes to fix a different principle. Mark you, Congress can not as a matter of practical legislation fix rates. It has neither the technical knowledge nor the time to investigate the complex subject of rate making. Heretofore we have said that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall fix reasonable rates.

But now for the first time we are asked to write into the law what the rates shall be. You can not pass a law that does not contravene every recognized principle of the common law and of the statutes if it allows less to a railroad company than a reasonable return on the property, or if on top of the reasonable return it takes from the public anything more than a reasonable return.

That is the vice, that is one of the vital weaknesses, of the proposed bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Probably the committee reporting the bill takes the position that a reasonable rate, at least until 1925, would be 6 per cent. But they arbitrarily take away a part of the reasonable rate, to wit, one-half of 1 per cent, and compel its investment in betterments and permanent improvements.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes. In other words, they require the public to contribute or donate to the railroad a part of the property and part of the railroad plant. If they say that 5½ per cent is a reasonable rate, then 6 per cent is an unlawful rate. If they put upon the people of the country one-half of 1 per cent upon all of the traffic of the country, the millions and hundreds of millions exacted from them, wrongfully and unlawfully, contravenes all the established principles of the common law and all the long line of statutes enacted by Congress upon that subject in the years gone by.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. With pleasure.

Mr. OVERMAN. Having fixed a reasonable rate at 5½ per cent, as I understand it, the bill takes into contemplation an additional percentage and provides for the excess to be put into a certain fund.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is correct.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the railroads make more than 5½ per cent, even if that is a reasonable rate, the excess is more than a reasonable rate; and what right have we to fix that rate so that the return will be more than 5½ per cent?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Absolutely none.

Mr. OVERMAN. Then it is an indirect tax upon the shippers——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is.

Mr. OVERMAN. Because if they make more than 5½ per cent, instead of taking the excess, it is the duty of the commission to reduce the rates to the public.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Why, of course. Let me say further, in response to the Senator from North Carolina, that if 5½ per cent is a reasonable rate, the railroad is entitled to that. If it is not a reasonable rate—if 6 per cent is a reasonable rate or 7 per cent is a reasonable rate—we have no right to take the difference from them. They are entitled to the 6 or the 7 per cent. You can not lawfully and properly and justly demand of the people any rate to make them contribute a part of the investment of the property of the public-service corporations of this country. That is exactly what is designed to be done here. I do not think it is the business of Congress to say that 5½ per cent is a proper rate. I have never believed for a moment that it was within the proper function of a legislative body to determine the rate. You have not the opportunity for the investigation necessary to say what is a proper rate. The only reason why a rate of 5½ per cent is written in here is because the holders of the railroad securities have been strong enough to come to Congress and dictate.

Mr. OVERMAN. How can we fix a reasonable rate unless we know what the value of the property is?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. We can not do so; we can not approximate to it. The Interstate Commerce Commission for 12 or 13 years laid on the desks of Senators on the first day of the session every year their annual report, saying that they could not fix reasonable rates without knowing the value of the property. Do you know the terms of this bill? It juggles a little bit. I do not mean that in an offensive sense; but it refers to ascertaining the rates under the act of 1913, when it comes to the reorganization of the railroads. It sets down specifically that the Interstate Commerce Commission, immediately after the passage of this act, shall fix a rate that shall pay 5½ or 6 per cent, when you include the additional one-half of 1 per cent on the value of the property. How are they going to find it?

What will they do? They will take the "book value"; and the book value of the railroads of this country is rotten beyond all expression. That I can prove over and over again, as I have done heretofore on this floor.

What this bill means, Senators, is just this: You are about to be called upon to vote to validate all of the water-logged securities that have been issued by the railroad corporations and that have been denounced by the courts and the commission for 40 years; you are about to validate all of the water-logged stock that has been set afloat in the current of railway operations. I can not conceive of your doing it. I do not believe you will. From my point of view you can not defend it for a minute. This is the culmination of all the iniquity condensed into 70 years of fraudulent and fictitious overcapitalization of the railroads of this country, and it is proposed to saddle it upon the people of this country for all time.

Valuation under the law that we passed a few years ago will not be completed for at least three years, and when completed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, what then? It will have its long course through the courts. You know that perfectly well. You could not clothe the commission with the authority finally to fix the value of the railroads. The railroads are entitled, under the Constitution, to have the value finally passed upon by the courts. So we provided for a review in the court of all of their work. It will take 10 years. When you write a law here saying that immediately upon its passage rates shall be fixed to make a certain return upon the value of the property, how are you going to find it if you do not take book value that is discredited by everyone?

You can not do any wrong to a railroad if you try. You can not do any wrong to the holder of a railroad security if you try. Why? Our courts will not permit you; that is why. If you had a disposition to rob the railroads of this country you could not do it. Do not be afraid of erring upon that side; you can not err upon that side; the courts will protect railroad investments; the courts will make certain that there is no confiscation; the courts will assure to every man who has put his money into the railroads of this country that he shall have a fair return upon the actual value of the property.

I will now resume the discussion of the bill that I had in hand when somewhat diverted by the interrogatory of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am delighted to yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Does the Senator think that Congress ought to attempt to establish any definite, unchangeable system for the determination of rates?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not think that Congress ought to pretend to fix rates.

To return to my argument, as a matter of fact the net operating income provided for in this bill is really 6 per cent instead of 5½, although the additional one-half of 1 per cent shall not hereafter be capitalized for rate-making purposes. Then follow provisions disposing of the excess earnings above 6 per cent, the effect of which is that one-half of the excess between 6 and 7 per cent goes to the reserve fund of the carriers. Senators appreciate that, I hope.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; to be sure.

Mr. STANLEY. I should like to ask the Senator a question for information. Here is a situation that puzzles me in that very proposition:

You have two roads with common termini. One road is much longer than the other, much less wisely constructed, and yet it must charge the same rate on through traffic. Let us assume the case of two roads between Louisville and St. Louis. Where the through traffic of both roads is the bulk of the traffic how are you going to provide a rate which shall be only compensatory to one road, without imposing a charge that is not sufficient to the other; or, on the other hand, if you take the poorer road as the basis and give it a rate that is compensatory, how are you going to keep the better-constructed road from charging a rate that is in excess of what would otherwise be a compensatory rate? To harmonize the rates between two roads with common termini has been the puzzle to my mind.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I have for my guidance in this matter only one principle. I know that we have a right, with reference to every one of these roads, to exact from it a service that is adequate and impartial, and we ought to compensate it upon the capital that it put into the business at a certain rate that shall be reasonable. If there is another road lying beside it that was wrongfully, foolishly constructed, built perhaps out of spite, built out of folly, built to enrich regardless of public interest, and capitalized at an amount greatly in excess of its fair value, do you think there is any justification, I will ask the Senator from Kentucky, in imposing a rate upon the public to pay for the folly and the iniquity and the crookedness that is back of that road? No, Mr. President. If some of these roads have to go into the hands of a receiver in order to strike a fair basis of what their true value is, let them go that course. The public is not responsible for their having been called into being. They were built as a part of the railroad game, and expected to be imposed upon the public, and the public to be soaked and bled to sustain them.

Then follow the provisions disposing of the excess earnings above 6 per cent, the effects of which are that one half of the excess between 6 and 7 per cent goes to the reserve fund of the carriers, the other half to the contingent fund of the Government. If 5½ per cent is a just rate, what you charge above that is an unlawful rate; and you are going to satisfy the Government and the railroads, the only two people that can get into court and make any opposition to your robbery, by dividing between them the spoils which you take out of the people. That is what it amounts to.

Then, as I say, follows the provision disposing of the excess earnings above 6 per cent, the effects of which are that one half of the excess between 6 and 7 per cent goes to the reserve fund of the carriers, the other half to the contingent fund of the Government, to be used generally to bolster up the weaker roads; and of any excess above the 7 per cent, one-fourth goes to the reserve fund of the carriers and three-fourths to the contingent fund of the Government; and after this reserve fund exceeds 6 per cent of the value of the railway property an increment therefrom goes to the contingent fund of the Government.

Some Senators may be able to reconcile themselves to vote for that provision for the spoliation of the public; but there will come a day, later than this day, when there will be a reckoning upon a full and fair understanding by the people of this country of what the terms of this bill really mean to them.

Without at this time attempting to follow the ramifications relating to the disposition of the reserve fund and the contingent fund, I direct attention to the main proposition, which I have quoted from section 6 of the bill. You will observe that the paragraph quoted involves several propositions.

First, it commands the Interstate Commerce Commission to initiate and fix rates high enough to accomplish a certain purpose. There is no longer any question of the commission's power to fix only a minimum rate or a reasonable rate, and there is no option or exercise of discretion left to the commission. The command of the bill is that the commission shall fix the rate so as to produce a certain income. This, in the plainest words possible, is a guaranty by the United States of a certain income to the railways.

Now, what is the rate which the commission is to fix?

It is a rate so high that the railways located in the district shall as a whole earn an aggregate annual net operating income equal to 5½ per cent, and, as supplemented by another provision of the bill, this is really 6 per cent. According to this feature of the bill if there are various railroads in the district earning less than the guaranteed return and others earning substantially the amount guaranteed, the rates for all of them must be raised up to a point where as a whole they will receive the guaranteed return.

The next question suggested by this provision of the bill is how the value of the railroad property of the district upon which railways are to receive a net operating income of 6 per cent is to be determined. The language of the paragraph in question is that such value "shall be determined in accordance with the provisions hereof." The reference to "provisions hereof," quoted, evidently relates to the following provision found in the same section of the bill:

> For the purpose aforesaid, the commission shall from time to time determine the value of the property in each district and rate-making group so held for and used in the service of transportation, and lower or advance the rates, fares, or charges for transportation to produce, as nearly as may be, the net operating income above mentioned.

This, of course, says no more than that the commission shall determine the value of the property. How it is to determine the value of the property is not stated. It is precisely at this point that the scheme of the railway executives begins to be revealed.

If the commission is forced by the terms of this bill to make a valuation to-day—or, as the bill states it, "immediately"—then I say that the valuation of the railway property is a matter wholly within the hands of the railways themselves. For six years we have had a commission at work with an army of experts valuing the railroads of the country, and it will be three or four years longer before that work will be completed. Then the valuation of the commission will go to the courts before the result can be used by the Interstate Commerce Commission in valuing railway property. When this bill therefore commands the Interstate Commerce Commission, overburdened with its multitude of other duties to forthwith—and that is what the bill means—value the railway properties for the purpose of fixing these rates, it simply says in another way that the Interstate Commerce Commission must accept the valuation which the railroads place upon their properties; that is, the fictitious and fraudulent valuation which they carry on their books.

Another fact to be considered is that one of the elements entering into valuation of railway property, as all know, is the cost of reproduction. That is one of the elements, not a deciding or controlling element, but simply one of the elements which it is made under the valuation law the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission to ascertain. Now, with the present high cost of materials and equipment and labor and everything else, it must be evident that by giving consideration to this element a valuation will be arrived at for rate-making purposes far in excess of the value of the property a few years ago, and far in excess of what its value will be a few years hence.

Do you wonder, Mr. President, that the railroad executives and security holders are clamoring for this legislation when the cost of reproduction is far in excess of normal? Do you wonder that they are clamoring for this legislation now in order that they may forestall the valuation of their property by the commission engaged in railway valuation a few years hence when they shall have completed the task assigned to them by Congress?

The members of the Interstate Commerce Commission can no more immediately value the railway properties of the country for the purposes of this bill than any equal number of the Members of the Senate could so value them. Why, sir, the Interstate Commerce Commission can not even properly inspect the expense accounts of the railways, much less value their properties. The commission recently said:

> Our force of examiners is relatively so small as to make it impossible at regular intervals to inspect the accounts of the railroads and other instrumentalities of interstate commerce and thus to give assurance that the results of their operation, their net incomes, their assets, and their liabilities will be correctly shown on their books.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] in his address, I think, left the impression upon the minds of the Senators who listened to him, as he did at least upon my mind, that the railroad investment account since the enactment of the Dolliver-Hepburn bill of 1906 could be relied upon as reasonably accurate. He was arguing manifestly that, in this interval between the time when the present bill should be enacted and that period some 3, 6, or 10 years hence when railway valuations should be determined by the Interstate Commerce Commission and finally settled by the courts and might be relied upon, these investment accounts should be accepted as a substitute for the true, fair valuation of railway property.

I take it that the effort of the Senator from Minnesota to persuade the Senate that since the Dolliver-Hepburn law was enacted the supervision of the Interstate Commerce Commission of the accounts of the railroads provided for in section 20 of that bill purged these book statements of their fraud, and that therefore to a very large extent the book values of the railroads could be depended upon as a basis for fixing the rates under this bill.

The Senator from Minnesota and every other Senator who knows anything about the history of railroad legislation and accounting knows perfectly well that all of the fraud and the cheating and the chicanery, the fictitious capitalization prior to 1906, is still carried upon the books, and that it taints, it putrefies with its corruption, the accounts based upon that false and fraudulent statement.

Down to 1906, when the Hepburn-Dolliver bill was passed, the railroads conducted their accounting without any Government control whatever that amounted to anything. They put in "india-rubber" funds, "yellow-dog" funds; all of the iniquities of juggling were carried in those accounts up to that time. Everybody knows—it is a matter of accredited history—that you can not depend upon anything in railroad accounting prior to 1906, when the Hepburn-Dolliver bill was passed, at the end of a long struggle of 13 years to try to correct the evils that existed in the old legislation of 1887. It was a bill of many sections, but it had just one section in it of value, and only one. After all that long struggle the only section in the Hepburn-Dolliver bill that was worth the paper on which the bill was written was section 20. Interstate Commissioner Prouty so stated shortly after the legislation was enacted. He said that the only section in that whole law that was of any account whatever was section 20. But I say to you that they have been clamoring for more help to check up on the iniquities of the railroads' bookkeeping from 1906 down to now, and here is a statement from them, fresh, new, recent. What do they say? I read it again:

> Our force of examiners is relatively so small as to make it impossible at regular intervals to inspect the accounts of the railroads and other instrumentalities by the Interstate Commerce Commission, thus to give assurance that the results of their operations, their income, their assets, and their liabilities will be correctly shown on their books.

The commission added:

> The law places upon the carriers the full responsibility for the correct statement of their accounts in accordance with the prescribed rules and regulations. The responsibility does not rest upon the commission, and the burden of such a requirement would be sufficient to demonstrate the impracticability of any such plan.

They say further:

> It is well to add that the present statements of the assets and liabilities of the carriers are still largely affected by the records and accounts of the period prior to the legislation giving authority to the commission over the accounts of the carriers.

Of course, that is so. They carry all that falsehood, all that water, in the account. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] touched the nerve center of this thing while the chairman of the committee was speaking. His practical mind at once went to the proposition.

I am advised that the investment accounts of the first five railroads valued under the valuation law of 1913 are double the estimated cost of reproduction.

The valuation board has done quite a bit of work, but it did not feel safe, up to day before yesterday, in making an order fixing the valuation, under the law, on more than five railroads. All those are still subject to revision. That section of the Interstate Commerce Commission which has charge of valuations has had some serious handicaps on its work.

But so common is it to look upon this investment account as a measure of railroad valuation that I observed that the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, in his first day's argument in support of the bill, referred to that investment account of railroads as a basis for comparing the net operating incomes of the various roads for 1918. He stated that the investment account was—and I quote his words—"supposed to reflect the actual investment in money in railway property," and frankly said that he believed the investment accounts were flagrantly wrong in many instances. He said, and I again quote his words—> that is the only thing that for the purposes of this comparison I can assume, and it is an assumption which was directed in the act of 1918.

Since the chairman of the committee found himself constrained in turning to some standard of measurement of railroad properties upon which to base an estimate of railroad profits to turn to this investment account, I think any Member of the Senate ought to be willing to pardon the Interstate Commerce Commission if it does the same thing if we throw upon them the responsibility of fixing rates upon values when they have no value ascertainable upon which to fix the rates other than the book keeping accounts of the railroad companies.

I continue to speak of the chairman's discussion. He proceeds to show the great diversity in the income of the railroads of the country by these very percentages of net operating income upon their respective investment accounts.

The Senator from Iowa rather guardedly stated that he could not agree that the Interstate Commerce Commission should accept the investment account as a finding of value without carefully reviewing it. I do not know how they will review it. I do not know where they will get the data to make deductions from and comply with the terms of this bill, which requires them to act immediately upon its passage. The commission have a vast amount of work yet to perform before they can determine the real true fair value of railroad property, and, mark you, after they have made their findings, by the very terms of the law their findings must be reviewed in the courts. A long and tedious process.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not intend, of course, to reply to the Senator from Wisconsin at this time. I shall take occasion a little later to correct what I regard as some of his mistakes; but at this moment I may say that I assume the Senator from Wisconsin knows that the principles which have been announced by the Interstate Commerce Commission for its guidance in ascertaining values are involved in a case that is being argued to-day in the Supreme Court; at least it was assigned for argument to-day, and I have no doubt that before long we will have the view of the Supreme Court with regard to the correctness of the principles which the Interstate Commerce Commission has laid down for its guidance in reaching values.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Oh, I understand that, Mr. President. I do not understand, however, that that will settle the question of value as to any particular road, but that with respect to each one of these roads the value will have to be fought out before the Supreme Court. I am quite as familiar with the provisions of the valuation law as the Senator from Iowa and quite as familiar as any other Senator with what the Interstate Commerce Commission is doing.

I was particularly interested in the discussion and colloquy of the Senators upon the subject, because it showed the hopeless confusion in which it was involved and made it clear that if this bill becomes effective in the immediate future the whole matter of valuing railway properties for the purpose of fixing rates which will yield a net revenue of 6 per cent thereon would be entirely under the control of the railroads until we have a completed valuation by the commission and have it passed upon by the courts.

There is a further matter of great importance to be considered at this point. Senators will observe that the rates must be fixed high enough so that the net operating income of the railroads is to be 5½ or 6 per cent.

Now, sir, I have searched the bill in vain to find any regulation of railway expenditures, whether in salaries, equipment, or anything else, except that there is some indirect regulation of wages. But no one, I think, would ever argue that there would be any danger of the railroads paying out too much in wages to employees. There is danger, however, of their paying out and appropriating immense sums of money for salaries and expenses, and yet you will not find anywhere in the bill any check upon that side of the business.

There is danger that the officials of the roads will organize construction companies and corporations for selling supplies and equipment to the roads and kindred operations, and in that way loot the roads of fabulous sums by excessive charges.

I say that an investigation of the railroads of the country, from the Pennsylvania down, will show officials of the roads interested in inside construction and supply companies. Now, then, it is an elementary principle of business that no man who is in a position of trust should buy and sell from and to himself with an opportunity of profit to himself and transact business upon that principle when the public is to foot the bill. Members of common councils, agents of the Federal Government and of all the State governments are checked by criminal statutes against that sort of business; and yet, without limit and without check, the railroad systems of the country have practiced upon an innocent and unprotected public the scheme of furnishing the supplies, the engines, the cars, the facilities, by factories and manufacturing plants of various kinds organized by the officials and managers of the railroads, stockholders in the business, furnishing supplies to their companies and robbing not only the stockholders but the public by paying unconscionable prices for all of the supplies furnished to the roads. Engines have been bought for the leading railroad company of the United States of a private organization at a 40 per cent higher price than they could be furnished by the company itself in its own manufacturing plant. Volumes of testimony have been taken by the Interstate Commerce Commission on this subject.

In fact, this is one of the ways in which so many of the roads have been plundered in the past; it is one of the causes for the wretched condition of the roads prior to the time when they were taken over by the Government; and it is one of the causes for a perennial demand for increased rates.

Prof. Parsons, in his work on Railroads, the Trusts, and the People, page 449, says:

> One must go to the history of private railways, built especially in the United States, to find the records of fraud and corruption that blacken the railroad history of the world. In former chapters we have shown how, through construction rings and through frauds, hundreds of millions of dollars have been stolen from the people in the construction of private railways. In a number of instances, as we have seen in the case of roads at considerable length, the railway was a fraud from beginning to end. It was built for graft, was graft, and nothing but graft. Public lands and moneys have been devoted to railway building in countries having private roads and in countries having public systems. The difference is that in the United States, though enormous quantities of the people's land and money have been given away to railway corporations, the people do not own a mile of the railways; the private companies own them all, while in many other countries where public land and money have been put into the railroads the roads thus paid for have been kept as the property of the people.

Of course, the people of the United States have paid for our railroad systems over and over again. They have paid for them in donations; they have paid for them in excessive rates; they have paid for them in land grants.

I think that it is a fair thing to say that practically every railroad that has been constructed in the United States has been constructed upon this plan: A construction company is organized and a right of way is procured under contract. The construction company goes out and makes an estimate, sells bonds for enough to pay for the construction of the road——

Mr. OVERMAN. And frequently counties are bonded.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Of course, that is true.

Mr. OVERMAN. As was the case as to the Winston-Salem road, where the counties gave enough to build the road.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is true in almost every community. I was overlooking that. The townships and the counties have bonded themselves for enough to build the roads. Then bonds are issued and a big profit is made in selling the bonds. Finally, when it is all sifted out, the bonded indebtedness of the roads is about what has been put into the property. That indebtedness is never paid off; it remains as a mortgage on the road. All the stocks which are issued are just so much water. The bonded indebtedness of the railroads of the United States represents, in a rough way, what has been put into the business, without a dollar of the money being contributed by the people who assume to own the roads.

Then stocks are issued and rates are charged high enough to pay interest on the bonds and to pay dividends on the stock. That system goes on; but they do not stop with that. Still higher rates are charged, rates high enough—and that is proper—to pay for maintenance and to pay for operation. They do not stop with that. They increase the rates another level—and that has come to be recognized; they have been permitted to do that by the railroad commissions—they accumulate a surplus and they pile up that mighty surplus until finally, by unjust rates which they have taken out of the public, they have a sufficient surplus if they want to build another branch road to build it not out of new capital but out of the surplus that they have taken as an excessive charge from the people. And this measure, as I read it and as I understand it, is to crystallize and fix all of this past wrong as a burden upon the people for all time to come.

President Hadley, of Yale University, in his work entitled "Railroad Transportation," page 5, says:

> The conditions which seemed to have most to do with causing the present crisis—

Referring to the panic of the early eighties—> were, first, an unprecedented rapid expenditure of capital for railroads and other permanent investments; second, a system of business methods which rendered it easy for interested rings to manipulate the market for their own purposes. In the three years, 1880–1882, we built 29,000 miles of railroad, an addition of 34 per cent. Not more than one-third of these were justified by existing business. Of the two-thirds excess, a considerable portion was built to put money in the hands of builders as distinct from the owners.

Prof. Parsons, in the work previously quoted from, on page 127, says:

> Not a few railroads have been built for graft—built for what the promoters could get out of them in the way of construction profits, etc., or through selling to companies controlled by them. Many a time a few promoters, with plenty of energy and some capital, have organized a railroad company and issued stock, reserving enough to keep control, bonded the road for full value, secured State and municipal aid, and national assistance also perhaps, and voted themselves a construction contract at an enormous margin of profit, by means of which they got out of the road every dollar they had put into its promotion, with millions in addition, and yet retained the ownership and control of the railway in which not one cent of their money remained invested.

I expect somebody will say with reference to those quotations that they are old, but I will show you that the railroads, according to the Interstate Commerce Commission, have been doing the same thing very recently. I simply wanted to strike a few high points along the course of railway history.

In his work Prof. Parsons reviews the organization, mergers, and transformations of most of the leading railways of the country, and shows in each case from official records that his generalization which I have just quoted is correct.

I am not going to take the time of the Senate to review the scandalous history of railway graft, fraud, and fictitious capitalization. A little of the water has been squeezed out of the railway securities by foreclosures and reorganizations, but many billions of it are there yet, and if this bill becomes a law the people of this country are going to be taxed to pay interest and dividends on these roads so long as the system lasts for which this bill provides.

But you may say that these abuses occurred years ago. All railroads are now good railroads; all railway officials now are merely seeking the opportunity to serve the public; they have reformed, and so it is that we can take a bill which they hand us, more far-reaching in its effect than all other railroad legislation that has heretofore ever been passed in this country, without taking the trouble even to know its contents.

Have the railroad executives suddenly reformed? Let me call your attention to a few paragraphs taken from the recent reports of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The New Haven case is reported in volume 31 of the Interstate Commerce Commission reports as late as 1914. I quote from page 30 and subsequent pages of that volume where the Interstate Commerce Commission says:

> The New Haven system has more than 300 subsidiary corporations in a web of entangling alliances with each other, many of which are seemingly planned, created, and manipulated by lawyers expressly retained for the purpose of concealment or deception.

I wonder if any of the fine legal ability that framed the railroad plan embodied in the bill which the Senate is asked to pass could have been referred to.

Continuing, the Interstate Commerce Commission said:

> Ordinarily in any investigations of this character evidence is easily adduced by placing the witnesses upon the stand, but in this investigation the witnesses, other than the accountants of the commission, were, in the main, hostile, and, with few exceptions, their testimony was unwillingly given. The result of our research into the financial workings of the former management of the New Haven system has been to disclose one of the most glaring instances of maladministration revealed in all the history of American railroading.

Note well the language—"one of the most glaring instances of maladministration revealed in all the history of American railroading." This is not ancient history.

Further the commission states:

> The difficulties under which this railroad system has labored in the past are internally and wholly due to its own management.

Referring further to the attempt of the New Haven unlawfully to acquire control of the Boston & Maine Railroad, another road, the commission says, on page 559:

> The subject matter of this inquiry relates to the financial operation of a railroad system which, on June 30, 1903, had a total capitalization of approximately $93,000,000, of which $79,000,000 was stock and $14,000,000 bonds. In the 10 years from June 30, 1903, this capitalization was increased from $93,000,000 to $417,000,000, exclusive of stock premiums, or an increase of $324,000,000. Of this increase approximately $120,000,000 was devoted to its railroad property, and was expended for betterments and equipment. This leaves the sum of $204,000,000 which was expended for operations outside of its railroad sphere. Through the expenditure of this sum this railroad system has practically monopolized the freight and passenger business of five States of the Union. It has acquired a monopoly of competing steamship lines and trolley systems in the section which it serves. The financial operations necessary for these acquisitions, and the losses which they have entailed, have been skillfully concealed by the juggling of money and securities from one subsidiary corporation to another.

I shall only take time to refer in this connection to one other case, and that is the case decided by the commission January 9, 1914. It is entitled: "933 St. Paul & Puget Sound Accounts," etc. It is reported in the Twenty-ninth Interstate Commerce Commission Reports, page 508. In that case the Interstate Commerce Commission, among other things, said—and I quote:

> By means of these entries the income of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad Co. for the year 1910 was overstated by more than $5,000,000. As a result of this overstatement of income for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, the report of the St. Paul Co. for the succeeding year showed an apparent falling off in revenue and income as compared with the previous year of over $24,000,000. In its report to the stockholders for the latter year, the explanation offered by the officers of the company was that the large decrease in the net operating revenue is accounted for—> by the inability to obtain increased rates, and the great increase in the cost of labor.

Mark well the language—

Of this statement the commission said:

> This statement was not in accordance with the facts in the case. Had the income of the year 1910 been properly reported, the net income for the following year, instead of showing a decrease, would have shown an increase of about $2,800,000 over the net income of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910. The reference to the great increase in the cost of labor was no less at variance with the real facts.

What I have just read are only samples of the modern, up-to-date methods by which the old, old game of robbing the public is still played by the railroads. I could give you many other illustrations, but this is enough to show that the railroad officials of to-day need just as close watching as they did in the old days. It is not any more safe to-day to allow them to make a law for themselves than it was in the days of Jay Gould, Oakes Ames, and others of their ilk. The crude methods by which railway managers robbed and exploited the public have largely given way to new and subtler ones. The railroad buccaneer of the early days has been succeeded by the high financier of the present day. Instead of continuing as lawbreakers, the railroads now essay the rôle of lawmakers. The latter is much safer, and also more effective.

Mr. President, even if the demand of the railroad security holders that they have a guaranteed net income on their investment was put into this bill, I can not understand how, if the public interest was at all regarded, there was not some provision put in the bill relating to the gross amount which the railways might collect from the public—the gross amount. The net operating income, of course, is only what is left after all expenses have been paid.

Why not put a provision in this bill limiting the salaries of railway officials? I notice that when the railroad bill was before the House a short time ago, Judge SIMS submitted a list of 208 general officers of railroads in 1917, before real Federal operation, including attorneys and receivers, drawing over $20,000 a year salary and running from $20,000 to $120,000 per year; and he proposed to limit the salaries of these gentlemen to $20,000 a year in so far as they were to be a charge on or against operating cost. This item alone would have saved a good many million dollars to the people of this country, who in the long run pay, in the increased cost of the necessaries of life, the exorbitant salaries of railway officials. It was not part of the plan submitted by the railway executives to have any limitation of this sort placed on the expenses of the roads, so we find nothing of the kind in the bill.

I pause here, Mr. President, to refer to the list presented by Judge SIMS when the railroad bill, known as the Esch bill, was pending in the House. I am not going to take the time to read this salary list clear through; it is somewhat extended; but it is taken from the official report made, as I understand, to the Interstate Commerce Commission. I will read just a few of the salaries:

> The following were the officials and attorneys of the Pennsylvania system who received salaries of $20,000 and in excess of that sum for the year 1917:

Samuel S. Rea, president	$75,460
James J. Turner, vice president	40,620
W. W. Atterbury, vice president	40,000
W. Heyward Myers, vice president	35,200
Edward B. Taylor, vice president	31,235
G. L. Peck, vice president	30,030
George Dallas Dixon, vice president	30,000
D. T. McCabe, vice president	30,000
B. McKeen, vice president	28,020

Why not have put into the bill a provision prohibiting interlocking directorates of railways, to become immediately effective—it is provided in the bill that it shall become effective after a certain lapse of time—instead of postponing it for two years, within which time most of the high financiering will have been completed under the terms of this bill? Why not put into it a provision to the effect that no officer or director of a railroad should be interested, directly or indirectly, in any construction company, supply company, or other concern selling supplies or materials to the railways? Provisions like these were no part of the railway executives' plan, so they are not to be found in the bill.

Think for a moment what all the vast plan of reorganization which this bill proposes means to the financiers, attorneys, and employees in the way of fees and bonuses and commissions and profits! Why, every railroad corporation in the country is to be broken up; new corporations are permitted, not only permitted but required; the securities of the old companies have got to be given up in exchange for the new. Why, sir, this bill simply lets loose an orgy of railroad manipulation which makes all that has gone before seem insignificant. It requires the reorganization of all the railroads in the country, and places no limit upon the commissions, fees, or profits that may be extracted from that proceeding. The records of the Interstate Commerce Commission show something of the fabulous profits that the insiders make out of the reorganization of a single railroad. Multiply that by the number of railroads in the country and you get some idea of the amount which is ultimately taken out of the public in the vast scheme of reorganization and consolidation which this bill requires, and nowhere is there a limitation or a check upon the amount of these expenditures. This bill puts a premium on extravagance and the squandering of the money collected from the people. This will continue even after the reorganization of the railway companies, because it guarantees a fixed net income without in any way limiting the expenditures.

I shall not consider at any length the proposal of this bill to take the profits of the more successful roads and use them for the benefit of the weaker roads, because I have no doubt that the Supreme Court will declare that particular provision unconstitutional. Ex-Justice Hughes and many other leading lawyers have already given opinions to that effect, and I fail to see how, if the constitutional provision against taking private property without compensation is to be given consideration, any other conclusion can be reached than that this provision in the bill, if it should ever become a law, will be held unconstitutional. The distinguished chairman of the committee, in the very able and candid argument he made in support of this bill, admits that there is a grave question respecting the constitutionality of this provision.

So that all you are sure of, if this bill becomes a law, is that you will have made the people of this country guarantee a net operating income to the railroads of 5½ to 6 per cent; that the value upon which that percentage is based will be fixed by the roads themselves; and that there is no limit upon the gross and extravagant expenses which must be paid out of the rates charged before the net income is provided for.

What you will accomplish, and all you are sure of accomplishing by this provision of the bill, if you succeed in writing it into the statutes of the United States, will be to mortgage the people of this country to the railroads. Jay Gould would turn green with envy if he could see how his successors in railway manipulation, under the plan of this bill, are about to exploit the people under a law passed by Congress far more successfully than he was ever able to do by his unlawful methods.

[At this point Mr. LA FOLLETTE yielded the floor for the day.]

Thursday, December 11 (legislative day of Wednesday, December 10), 1919.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, last night when the Senate recessed I had just concluded discussing one point of the divisions of the discussion as I had arranged them in my argument, and had reached this proposition with which I desire to begin my discussion to-day.

II. THE LARGE INCREASE OF RATES WHICH MUST FOLLOW, IF THIS BILL BECOMES A LAW, WILL GREATLY INCREASE THE PRICE OF THE NECESSARIES OF LIFE.

Mr. President, it is not stating it too broadly or too strongly to say that at the present time there is an imperative demand, the gravity of which can not be overstated, that the prices which the people of this country are now obliged to pay for the necessaries of life must be speedily and materially reduced. If this be not done and done quickly the suffering that will come to this country in the near future will have no parallel in all our history, in my humble opinion. We have reached the limit.

Back of this condition also stalks the specter of social and industrial unrest, the menace of which is admitted by every one. Sir, it seems incredible to me that any legislation which is certain to result in a great and immediate increase in the cost of the necessaries of life should find support in this body at the present time; yet, sir, that is exactly what this bill, if it becomes a law, will accomplish. Indeed, that is the very command of the language of the section which I have been discussing.

The Interstate Commerce Commission, as soon as the roads are returned to private hands under this bill, are by the terms of the bill compelled to initiate rates, fares, and charges so that the net operating income of 5½ or 6 per cent shall be earned upon all railway property, the value of which will be fixed in the manner I have described, because it can be fixed at the present time in no other way. It was not contended by any witnesses appearing before the Interstate Commerce Committee that the present rates would supply the net operating income required by this bill, and such contention has not been made and will not be made I undertake to say by any person with the least knowledge of the facts. It is not, in the conditions, possible. On the contrary, all the testimony and all the opinions of experts was to the effect that a return of the roads to private hands must immediately be followed by increased rates; and this opinion was held even before it was settled that this bill would contain a guaranty to the roads of the excessive rates I have been discussing.

Mr. President, Mr. Cuyler, the chairman of the railway executive committee, to whose evidence and plan I have already referred, gave some illuminating testimony before the Interstate Commerce Committee on January 9, 1919. I refer to this testimony on page 324 and subsequent pages of volume 1 of those hearings, and I quote.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], addressing an inquiry to Mr. Cuyler says:

Senator TOWNSEND. Do you think if you could merge the small lines tributary to the Pennsylvania Railroad that you could finance them under this scheme of yours?

Under a scheme that should require a certain percentage to be paid on all the securities held by the security holders.

Mr. CUYLER. I think we could; yes, sir. I think the roads generally could finance themselves if the bankers and the investing public felt that there was a proper superstructure of rates that would insure their return.

Mr. TOWNSEND. What page is the Senator reading from?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Page 324 of volume 1.

Senator TOWNSEND. A large part of the matters rests upon rates?

That is not an assertion. That is a question asked by the senior Senator from Michigan. Mr. Cuyler makes this answer:

Mr. CUYLER. It seems to us that it is the keynote of the whole situation.

Rates! Rates! Rates!

Senator TOWNSEND. Could you operate the railroads successfully on the present rates?

Mr. CUYLER. Assuming the present rate of wages and cost of materials, and everything of that kind?

Senator TOWNSEND. Yes.

Mr. CUYLER. No, sir; and I do not think the Government could either.

When he said "No, sir," he answered the question propounded to him by the Senator, and if he had been in a court the other part of his answer would have been stricken out as unresponsive and volunteered testimony, offered to bolster up his bill.

He says:

I do not think the Government could either.

But the Government is, on the present rates, operating the roads, and has been since July, at a profit.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator stated yesterday that the roads were operating under the Government at a net profit of $12,000,000.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I said a net profit of $12,000,000 for the month of August, and a net profit of $19,000,000 for the month of September, and a net profit of $11,000,000 for the month of October. We have not yet got the returns on November, although we are in December.

Mr. OVERMAN. And but for the increase of the wages we would have had a profit of about $10,000,000 for July, as I understood the Senator?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes. There was an increase.

I tell you, Senators, we have turned the corner in Government operation. I have been supplied with testimony, thousands upon thousands of letters tending to show that there has been some underhand work on the part of the old railroad organizations to make Government operation a failure, but I am not reflecting upon the head of the administration of Government operation. I want that distinctly understood. Mr. McAdoo, I think, brought to the Railroad Administration great executive ability. That, I think, has to be accorded to that man even by his enemies. Mr. Hines, who succeeded him, is one of the ablest railroad men in the country. But you must remember—and I think we ought to be practical in looking at this question—you must remember that the railroads do not want to have the Government continue this operation. They want the property back in their own hands.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, one other question. I understand from the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] that the roads owe the Government, and will owe when this bill passes, $600,000,000. The Senator's contention, I understand, is that if we have to continue the plan under which we are now operating, we will be compelled to pay that debt?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. We shall absolutely wipe it out, I will say to the Senator from North Carolina, and we shall begin to pile up a surplus. On the other hand, just as sure as the sun shines on the world to-day, if you turn the roads back—and I will show you in a few minutes from the presidents of the roads themselves—they will demand an increase in rates of practically three-quarters of a billion dollars. Mr. President, by the terms of this bill we say, "You shall immediately adjust the rates to pay a certain percentage, to pay 5½ or 6 per cent on all securities, to pay these railroads all these vast sums," and I say to you, Mr. President, that the Interstate Commerce Commission will be under the command of Congress to proceed to increase these rates. They will not have the responsibility—you will have it. Do you understand what Director General Hines has figured out as the result of any increase in rates? He has traced it out. He is an old railroad financial expert. Every time I have seen him before the Committee on Interstate Commerce I have been a good deal impressed with his technical knowledge of the financial side of railroading. He says that when you advance rates $1, so that the producer of the product is charged $1 more than he was on a given shipment as it leaves the factory, and you trace the result of that $1 of increase of rates from the manufacturer to the jobber, and from the jobber to the retailer, you find that $1 of increase is multiplied to $5 of cost on every $1 of increase in railroad rates by the time it reaches the ultimate consumer. That is the calculation of a man who has been affiliated with railroads all his life.

Let me go back just a minute here to get the connection:

Mr. CUYLER. Assuming the present rate of wages and cost of materials, and everything of that kind?

Senator TOWNSEND. Yes.

Mr. CUYLER. No, sir.

That is, they could not operate the railroads successfully on the present rate, taking into account wages and cost of material and everything of that kind.

Mr. CUYLER. No, sir; and I do not think the Government could either.

Mr. Cuyler was not asked what the Government could do, but knowing that it must be admitted that a return to private management would require an immediate increase in rates, he volunteered the information that the Government would have to increase rates also just the same as the railroads would have to if they were taken back.

On this point, however, I prefer to take the testimony of Mr. McAdoo, who knew the facts thoroughly with respect to Government operation, rather than the testimony of Mr. Cuyler. Mr. McAdoo testified that under continued Government control, mark those words, "under continued Government control," not only would there be no advance in rates, but that the rates would very soon be reduced. Now, just think of that, Senators. I assume you would all like to see us turn the bend in the road, and reach a point where the cost of living would begin to fall. It would solve a lot of things. Mr. McAdoo says if you continue Government operation you will soon be able not only to successfully operate the roads under the present rates but to begin to reduce the rates. I quote from page 71, volume 1, of the hearings, the testimony of Mr. McAdoo:

Director General MCADOO. My feeling is that the cost of materials and supplies is likely to decline. Take coal, particularly. Our fuel bill for 1918 for 10 months was $140,000,000 more than for the same period in 1917.

I do not believe coal is going to remain at any such high price as that. I think that the cost of crossties and lumber and steel and all of those things will be reduced to a more reasonable basis. The railroads will get the benefit of those things. I think there are further economies in operation in peace time which were not possible under war conditions.

I think there are further economies—

Says Director General McAdoo—

further economies in operation in peace times which are not possible under war conditions. The excessive pressure of necessities for war purposes will be relieved. I think we will be able to effect very large economies in 1919 under the unified plan which I think would not be possible under diversified control, and I think that at the end of the year 1919 we will be able to reduce the rates.

As I hope to show before I finish, Mr. McAdoo's prediction so far as the facts are available has been shown to be correct, and there is no reason why a reduction of rates can not be made very soon if Government operation is continued. I am speaking now, however, not of the probable reduction of rates under Government control but of the certainty of an increase of rates if the roads are returned to private control.

Mr. Howard Elliott, president of the Northern Pacific Railway, on the 21st day of last month—that is, only 20 days ago—at a meeting of the Academy of Political Science in New York, made some very illuminating statements upon that subject; that is, the matter of the immediate necessity for an increase in freight rates.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I do not desire to interrupt the Senator from Wisconsin in his very clear discussion of this matter, but I want to ask him a question. I ask if his conclusions and the facts which he has stated, as shown by subsequent events since the hearings in which Mr. McAdoo testified, have not since been borne out; and if he does not think that the showing of the roads will continue equally as good as it has in the last few months under present freight rates?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I did not quite get the Senator's question. Does he mean that the showing for the recent months would tend to support the statement that railroad operation by the Federal Government is a failure or that it is a success?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. My question is, Would not the showing which the railroads have made in the last few months, as outlined by the Senator from Wisconsin, indicate to him that that showing will be continued under the present freight rates?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes. Mr. President, I think perhaps the Senator from South Dakota was not on the floor when I stated that earlier in my observations this morning. I think that is shown by the trend of the financial current, the showing month by month of the rate sheets, expenditures and receipts, the fact that there has been a net profit month by month, notwithstanding that it has been necessary to adjust wage differences and extend the readjustment back to May; and by the fact that the railroads have been able to show a very considerable profit in August, in September, and October, notwithstanding the steel strike was on throughout the latter month. I am inclined to the view that they will be able to show a profit under Government operation in November, notwithstanding both the steel strike and the coal strike.

The quotations which I shall make from the report of the proceedings of the meeting which Mr. Elliott addressed are taken from the New York Tribune account, which was published on November 22, 1919. That is pretty recent evidence. The Tribune report of the proceedings is very complete. I quote the opening paragraph from the Tribune, as follows:

How is the investor to be persuaded to provide a matter of more than $2,000,000,000 annually to rehabilitate the Nation's railroads?

Railroad and labor officials, financiers and students put their heads together in an effort to find an answer to the question yesterday at three sessions of the Academy of Political Science.

Those two paragraphs are the comment of the writer upon the proceedings at the session of the Academy of Political Science.

You will observe that the problem of the railways was how to get $2,000,000,000 annually out of the investors. That two billions annually is to be borrowed money. That was the argument of Mr. Elliott, and he advanced the following propositions, which I shall take up one by one:

First. That a day's pay or a unit of quantity of any article of commerce will purchase far more transportation, both freight and passenger, to-day than ever before in the history of the country. In other words, rates have not increased in proportion to the increase in wages and prices of commodities.

You will observe that he is laying the foundation for a demand for a rate increase.

It is undoubtedly true that the freight and passenger rates have not increased in proportion to the increase in the price of commodities.

A further proposition of Mr. Elliott was, and I quote again from him, as reported:

Second. The so-called standard return of $935,000,000 for all roads does not represent a sum large enough to attract new capital needed for future expansion, and the net operating income for the year ending June 30, 1917, was $1,035,000,000, or $100,000,000 more than the standard return. Since then the plant has been increased in value and capacity and is fairly entitled to a much larger return.

Mr. Elliott neglected to state that the plant has been increased in value and capacity at the expense of the Government. As stated by Mr. McAdoo in the testimony I have heretofore quoted, the improvements definitely authorized by the Government up to December 1, 1918, amounted to $1,254,396,158. The Government, at its own expense, increased the value and the capacity of the railroad plant. The proposition now is to capitalize that increased value for rate-making purposes.

The next proposition was that—and I quote again from Mr. Elliott—

Third. That many millions of dollars must be spent in doing work on equipment and tracks that could not be done during the war period, and additional expense must be met in 1920, such as higher prices for fuel and additional charges not included in the 1919 accounts, and that there is a steady and large increase in taxes.

These are given as a further reason for an increase in rates. One of the beauties of the railroad business is that when taxes increase or prices go up on anything that has to be purchased it is not necessary to practice any economy to meet the situation, as it is in other business, as it is for individuals, but the increased prices furnish an excellent basis for an increase of rates.

Mr. Elliott then stated as his next proposition the following:

A failure to obtain additional revenue will mean bankruptcy for many roads and serious financial difficulties for all.

Of course, upon such a showing to the Interstate Commerce Commission there will be no doubt about the roads getting an increase in rates. Concerning the amount of additional revenue, Mr. Elliott says:

Fourth. The total additional revenue needed, while running into very large figures, is not large considering the needs and powers of a virile nation of 105,000,000 people, that has absorbed $21,000,000,000 of Liberty bonds in two years. They can well afford to have a good transportation machine and to encourage rather than discourage the owners to create and maintain it.

Mr. Elliott, you will observe, leaves us in doubt as to the exact amount of increased revenue the railroads will require, but he seeks to prepare us for it somewhat by saying that it will run into "very large figures," but he thinks that a people who have absorbed $21,000,000,000 of Liberty bonds in two years can absorb another very large increase in fares and rates and charges by the railways. That this "very large sum" is to be raised by increased rates is made clear by Mr. Elliott, for in his next statement he says:

Fifth. For the purpose of making good the disparity between income and outgo, for the purpose of restoring the earning power of the roads, for the purpose of establishing that earning power as a basis that will create a credit for the immediate upbuilding of the transportation machine, the railroads are now preparing to ask for an increase in rates.

You will observe that the railroads are going to demand rates not only high enough to make good the disparity between income and outgo but high enough to vastly improve the credit of the railroads. That means, of course, high enough to boost railway stocks. When a railroad talks about credit it does not mean credit in the sense that ordinary business men use the term, as equivalent to ability to borrow money on the faith that it will be returned. That is one thing; that is a business proposition.

The sale of bonds secured on the property of the railroads involves very little credit. The sale of stocks, however, is largely an affair of credit. The increased value of railway bonds and the decreased value of railway stocks in recent years has been a matter of great concern to the roads; but, of course, if this bill becomes a law railway stocks will become as good as railway bonds, or even better, for the pledge of the Government will back them, and they will bring far more in dividends than the bonds will pay in interest.

Mr. Alfred P. Thom, general counsel for the Association of Railroad Executives, from whose testimony I have already quoted, was at this meeting addressed by President Elliott, from whose address I have just been reading. I copy the following paragraph from the proceedings, as reported, which purports to give the substance of some of the remarks of Mr. Thom:

> Because of the necessity of expansion to new and undeveloped fields, Alfred P. Thom, general counsel for the Association of Railroad Executives, declared that much new money must not only be attracted from private investors, but they must be coerced. The problem of the railroads—

I am still quoting from Mr. Thom, as reported in the New York Tribune—

> The problem of the railroads and the problem of the public in respect to transportation is a problem of credit, he said. The test of any governmental regulation of privately supported transportation facilities is whether it adequately provides for and maintains the necessary railroad credit.

No doubt he felt that the people of this country had submitted to so much coercion lately that it will not be difficult for the railways to coerce them into paying a few billion dollars more in increased railway rates and charges.

Mr. President, those are the statements of Mr. Elliott and Mr. Thom on this subject. I do not know whether there are many Members on the floor of the Senate who heard or have read the testimony of President Kruttschnitt, of the Santa Fe road. Of all the railroads in the United States, I suppose the Santa Fe is recognized as one of the best managed; and of all the men who have testified before the Committee on Interstate Commerce for a good many years, since I have been a member of that committee, I think Mr. Kruttschnitt gave evidence of a comprehension and a mastery of railway problems exhibited by no other man, and I do not think there is any other railroad president in the United States who is in his class at all.

You may have seen in the newspapers in the last 10 days the statement that there was to be a campaign inaugurated by the railroad companies of the United States within the present month of December in which they were to expend more than a million dollars in advertising to put this bill through. Such a statement as that appeared in the Washington Herald a few days ago, and yesterday I read it into my remarks, copied from the Washington Herald. Yesterday one of those advertisements appeared in a New York paper, the New York Sun, and another is to appear to-day. That is already announced. There are large, glaring headlines. The railroads of the country are starting out to "educate" the public to sustain Congress in passing this bill. They are going to have an orgy of advertising, paid for by the railroads, who expect to profit out of the advanced rates that will follow the passage of this bill, and security holders, who expect to realize on 20 and 30 per cent investments of watered securities that will be brought to par when this bill passes. They are to finance the advertising campaign that is now to deluge the press of the country.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, does the Senator have reference now to the Cummins bill?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have reference to the pending bill; I have reference to any bill that seeks to return these roads to the owners at this time. I say to the Senator from Texas that if you return the roads to the owners at this time we will at once be confronted with a proposition to increase rates in order to "save them from bankruptcy." They have the campaign all planned for that purpose.

I have a certain faith that Government ownership is the ultimate solution of this question, but I believe that the best course for the people of this country, for the Government, for everybody concerned, is to continue Federal operation until such time as a thorough study of this problem can be made, because we have every reason to believe that we can continue Government control without further increasing rates upon the people of this country or further loss to the Government and that we can continue Government operation with a growing profit each month that will enable us to wipe out all of the losses of the extravagant war period; and we know from the testimony that is on every hand, the demand of Mr. Elliott, the demand of railroad men everywhere, that immediately upon the return of the roads to the private owners there shall be a tremendous increase in rates.

Now, Mr. President, I say that with regard to any measure now, in view of all the facts as I have been able to gather them, there is but one safe course open to us, and that is to defeat the pending bill, defeat likewise the House bill, and continue Government operation. How long we should continue it is another question. I should like to see it continued for a definite period.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Let me ask the Senator this question: Do these late efforts to mold public opinion in behalf of the early return of the railroads, as evidenced through publication to the country, specify any particular bill, or does the propaganda favor any bill to return the railroads at an early date?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I had in my hands just before I came on the floor an advertisement which appeared in the New York Sun of yesterday, but I returned it to the gentleman who brought it to me, who was going to show it to one of the other Senators, who he thought might desire to present it to the Senate, otherwise I would have had it. It may be returned to my desk before I conclude, and if so I will present it and have it read into the RECORD. This campaign has just begun. Last Sunday Mr. Kruttschnitt, the president of the Southern Pacific, of whom I have been speaking, gave out an interview. It had a conspicuous place. It was manifestly the beginning of this campaign in the newspapers.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Under this campaign would the Esch bill be as acceptable to these people as the Cummins bill?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I have no doubt that the railroads would prefer the Cummins bill, but I also have no doubt they would take the Esch bill if they could not get the Cummins bill; anything to get the roads back, and get the increase in freight rates, and free the roads from absolute Government control.

They do not want Government control to have a test under normal peace-time conditions. Therefore we are to have a million-dollar campaign of advertising, flooding the newspapers with all manner of exaggerated statements to back up Senators on this floor to vote to put this bill or the Esch bill through.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. With pleasure.

Mr. KING. The Senator has been assuming—and I am not questioning the accuracy or the propriety of the assumption—that a return of the railroads to private control under either the Esch or the Cummins bill, or some other bill of similar terms, will involve a large increase, necessarily, in freight rates; or, at any rate, an appeal will be made for an increase in freight rates, presumably based upon the fact that there will be a large deficit. I was called out for a little while this morning, and did not hear all the Senator's discussion. Has the Senator demonstrated, or furnished the reasons which he has to suggest, that there may not be a demand for an increase in rates if the roads are continued under the control of the Government, in view of the fact that quite likely there may be, with the period of readjustment in this country, a reduction in the freight and passenger traffic of the United States?

I know the Senator has stated that in July, August, September, and October—at least, in August, September, and October—instead of there being a deficit there was a surplus in the earnings. Has the Senator any reason to believe that there will be an increase in the earnings, or that this record will be continued, in view of what seems to me inevitable, namely, a fall in prices, and more or less of a dislocation of our business resulting from getting back to normal conditions, and a reduction in the passenger and in the freight traffic?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I answer the Senator with great pleasure. Of course, I am not able to furnish any statistics further than those that each day brings to the desks of the financial division of the Government Railroad Administration. But if the Senator will go down to the Interstate Commerce Building—the Hurley-Wright Building—and will interview the Railroad Administration, as I have, he will, I am sure, come away with the best opinion of the men who are in touch with existing traffic conditions of this country that there will be no necessity for an increase in freight rates if the roads remain with the Government; that, on the contrary, there is a strong probability that freight rates will be decreased if the roads remain under Government operation; that it is the belief of the Railroad Administration that the coming year is to be the largest and most profitable year in traffic. I will not say as against the abnormal condition of the war period, but that there will be the largest tonnage of railroad traffic that this Government has ever known outside of that; and I am not sure but that was included; but, for safety, I will say outside of the peak point of the war period.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GAY in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. At a later time I shall examine, as best I can, the suggestion that the operation for the last three months by the Government has resulted in a profit. Just now, however, assuming the verity of the statement that there has been Government operation in the last three months at a profit, and, assuming that the Interstate Commerce Commission is convinced of that fact, I want to ask the Senator from Wisconsin if it be not true that it is utterly impossible that under this bill there will be any increase in rates?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from Iowa whether he relies upon the Interstate Commerce Commission, which he denounced upon this floor—and I have his speech and I have his minority report made on the confirmation of certain of the interstate-commerce commissioners—whether they can be relied upon always to protect public interests when the railroads come pressing upon them for an increase in rates?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have had occasion in the past to criticize somewhat severely certain decisions of a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission and I have nothing whatever to retract.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Not of a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, if the Senator will permit me to interrupt him, but of the commission.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is quite true.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It was not the decision of one member.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is quite true, but I at least have never fallen into the habit of believing that the Interstate Commerce Commission, because it decided wrongly in a particular case could therefore never decide rightly. I have not lost my confidence in the integrity of the Interstate Commerce Commission, much as I differ from some of its members and at times from a majority of its members with regard to its application of the law. But if we are not to place confidence in the administration of the law by the Interstate Commerce Commission then there is no hope of regulating the railways of course.

I only assert that if the statements that have just been made by the Senator from Wisconsin are well founded, that with the 5½ per cent provided in the bill for a net operating income based upon the value of the property, it is impossible that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall raise the rates——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Is it? Let us see.

Mr. CUMMINS. Unless it violates the law.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will answer that.

Mr. CUMMINS. Under any provision of any statute that has ever been suggested the discretion must be reposed in some regulating tribunal and that regulating tribunal up to this time is the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Now, the Senator says that because we had a profit of $12,000,000 in one month, $19,000,000 in another month, and $11,000,000 in another month, for that reason, if we pass the bill and guarantee 5½ or 6 per cent profit on all the water that there is in the railroads, they will not have to raise the rates to meet it; that is the argument.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is not the argument. We guarantee in the bill no return upon water. The Senator from Wisconsin must, according to his own statements here, realize that it is to be a 5½ per cent return upon the value of the property. If the value of the property——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let me interrupt the Senator right there. He knows that the Interstate Commerce Commission can not immediately proceed, as required by this bill, to find the value of the property upon any evidence that they have in their hands at the present time. He knows that perfectly well. He knows perfectly well that the true valuation of the railroads will not be ascertained for years to come. I have here a recent report of the Interstate Commerce Commission in which they say that without that valuation they are absolutely at sea on the subject of ascertaining what is the reasonable and proper rate to return. They can not determine how to return 5½ per cent on the true value of the property unless they know the true value of the property, and if the railroad valuation provided for by Congress in the act of 1913 is not completed, how are they going to find the value of the property except by taking the "investment" account of the railroads as a basis?

Mr. CUMMINS. They can find it a great deal better than we can. They have a great deal more information about it than we have.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. They have the same information that we have—that is, they have the book values—the "investment account." They have those padded and inflated and watered statements that the Senator himself is obliged to say are unreliable, and they say themselves and they have said it for 13 years to the Congress of the United States, that without an accurate and scientific valuation of the railroad property, an inventory of the property, they "have no means of meeting the statements in the book accounts of the railroads."

Mr. CUMMINS. They are making the rates now——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; they are making the rates now, but they do not pretend that they are making rates that are reasonable. They can not tell whether they are reasonable or not. There never has been a reasonable rate under the law down to the present time. The Interstate Commerce Commission has said over and over again that there is no method of obtaining information upon which to base a reasonable rate until they have accurate information as to the value of the railway properties.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Rates have been made that are not reasonable. They have had to be made in that way.

Mr. CUMMINS. I understand, but somebody must make the rates for the years intervening between now and the completion of the valuation. The Interstate Commerce Commission must do that.

I agree that the Interstate Commerce Commission can not accurately determine the value of this property. I do not question that, but it is the only thing that we can do, it is the only body to which we can commit that power.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. We have not any measure for ascertaining what are just and reasonable rates, no measure that can be applied by the Interstate Commerce Commission or by the Railroad Administration. You have the record of the Interstate Commerce Commission. You have men put upon that body who have yielded to unjust demands for increases in rates since 1910, and yielded to the demands for increases when the Senator from Iowa said it is wrong they should. We have a Railroad Administration that is conducting the business at the present time upon a basis that renders a profit to the Government, and they will tell you, as they told me, that no increase in rates will be necessary if the roads remain with the administration for the present.

On the other hand, we have the statements of the railroad presidents and railroad representatives that they will demand an increase of anywhere from $400,000,000 to $700,000,000 in rates if the roads go back to private management. This boils it down to a very definite alternative. You have a bill before you that says the Interstate Commerce Commission shall immediately adjust these rates so as to pay 6 per cent on the value of the property, and the only value of the property that the Interstate Commerce Commission can resort to, since by the terms of this bill it is commanded to adjust these rates immediately, is the book values, the "investment" accounts, the railroad valuations furnished by the railroads themselves.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Had the Senator fully answered, or at least as fully as he desired, the question that I propounded a moment ago?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think I did. I think I answered it pretty fully.

Mr. KING. I want to suggest to the Senator that he has been criticizing, and perhaps very properly—I will not say criticizing, but he has been animadverting upon the fact that certain railroad employees who have been in charge of the railroads, governed by the selfishness that human nature manifests, have adopted a certain course and are anxious for the return of the railroads to private management. The Senator has been stating that certain persons in the employ of the Government in connection with the operation of the railroads have made certain statements with respect to the ability of the Government to make a profit upon the operation of the roads if the railroads are permitted to remain under the Government.

Does not the Senator think that perhaps those persons are influenced by a desire, first, to keep the roads in their present situation so that they may retain their positions, probably positions which are profitable, and, secondly, because the criticism, whether just or unjust, has gone forth that they have mismanaged the roads and if they can prevent their return to private operation there may be an opportunity upon their part to so manage the roads in the future as to relieve them of those criticisms, or at least to cover up in a proper way the mismanagement with which they are charged? Does not the Senator think he ought to discount the statements of those men who claim that the operation of the railroads by the Government will result in profits?

Let me say furthermore that the charge has been made to me repeatedly that many of the roads have been discriminated against, that they have deteriorated in value and run down, and assuming that there has been a profit, if there had been a proper expenditure of money and proper bookkeeping, there would have been losses for September, October, and November.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I am entirely at a loss to surmise what could have gotten into the Senator's mind to lead him to believe that there is any defect in their bookkeeping. Is that a thing to be presumed? I suppose these Government accounts are entitled to absolute credit as to their integrity.

I will say to the Senator from Utah that if he will interview members of Interstate Commerce Commission and members of the Railroad Administration, I am confident that he will come out of his investigation with exactly the same views that I have—absolutely confident of it. I think that all the members of the Railroad Administration have had it thoroughly ground into them that the roads are going back to private ownership and that they have weeks and months ago adjusted themselves to that view.

The statement that the President made months and months ago that he would turn the roads back on the 1st of January, unless Congress legislated otherwise, I think laid the foundation for that belief. Then the propaganda that followed has further impressed that upon them. They have adjusted themselves to it. They are in that attitude of mind. They are not giving any credit to Government operation to which it is not entitled. It would be much more to their advantage, going back into private railway employment, to discredit than to give credit to Government management and operations. There is no discounting these figures. This much we have got; this much we know: We know that net receipts are increasing under conditions that have not been very favorable. We have had the big steel strike on; we have had the big coal strike on; and those conditions have unmistakably affected railroad revenues.

I do not know now whether I have fully answered the Senator or not. I want to answer him as fully as I am able.

Friday, December 12, 1919.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, as a forerunner of the campaign by the railroads which is just at hand and the preliminary advertisements of which are beginning to appear in the newspapers in quarter and half page and full-page advertisements—some of which I have seen and which, if they are not presented by any other Senator upon the floor and incorporated in the RECORD before the debate closes, I shall put into the RECORD—as a preliminary to the advertising campaign conducted by the railroads in order to pave the way for this legislation, last Sunday, December 7, the New York Times had on the front page of its news section an interview with Mr. Kruttschnitt.

From which I read:

To escape bankruptcy the revenues of the carriers must be increased, and the only way to do this, with present volume of traffic and wage schedules, is by increasing rates. The amount of the increase is measured by the amount which the earnings of 1919 (partly estimated) fall short of being a fair return, say 6 per cent, on the property investment of the carriers.

Not upon the value of their property, but upon what their books show, which is known by every student of railway finance to be a grossly exaggerated and padded account.

Here is the leading railway executive of the country confirming the views expressed by the distinguished Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] the other day on the floor of the Senate when he suggested it was the only basis—the only means at hand—by which to determine the rates at present.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I made no suggestion of that character. I asked the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] whether the property-investment account was the basis of valuation which would be taken to establish the rule of rate making. It was an interrogatory and it was not a statement by me in any way whatsoever. The Senator from Iowa replied that the Interstate Commerce Commission were not directed in the act in any way to take the property-investment account, but that they themselves could determine under the act what valuation should be taken.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I happen to have the exact language of the Senator right before me, taken from the reporter's notes.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. From what is the Senator quoting?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am quoting from what the Senator said as taken down by the reporter, exactly as the Senator said it.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. All right; read it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will read it into the RECORD:

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Is it not true that the only basis of valuation that can be established for a fixed return of rates is through the property investment account?

Does that not indicate an opinion in the back of the Senator's mind that that was the only basis? He puts it up to the Senator from Iowa and it is a plain disclosure of what was in the mind of the Senator from New Jersey, a member of the committee:

Is it not true—

he says—

that the only basis of valuation that can be established for a fixed return of rates is through the property-investment account?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I asked the Senator from Iowa that question, and he said it was not, and I accepted his answer.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. But evidently the Senator came out of six weeks' deliberation on the bill as a member of the committee with the fixed notion in his mind that book investment would be accepted as the basis upon which the rates would be made under the bill. That is all I said about his position and his own words confirm what I have said.

The statement of Mr. Kruttschnitt, that I have just read, presented to the public in last Sunday's issue of the New York Times, shows that is what they are going to demand. I resume reading from that interview just at the point where I left off to make some comment upon it:

The amount of the increase is measured by the amount which the earnings of 1919, partly estimated, fall short of being a fair return, say, 6 per cent, on the property investment of the carriers. Freight rates—

Now listen further—

Freight rates would have to be sufficiently raised to produce—

Now you will get the figures, now you will get the measure of the railroad demand—

Freight rates would have to be sufficiently raised to produce $742,000,000, the estimated shortage.

A study made in September, 1919, of the relation of freight rates and value of commodities transported on the railroads shows that the needed $742,000,000, just one-half of 1 per cent of the estimated value of commodities transported, otherwise stated, would increase their value per ton from 119 to 119.59.

There you have, Mr. President, the statement of the leading railroad president of this country as to the exact extent of the demand which they are going to make if this bill ever becomes a law.

Mr. Robert Woolley, member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, in his address delivered in Philadelphia recently, referring to the increase in rates which it was agreed must follow upon the return of the railroads to private management, said:

What the measure of this increase may be, I am sure I do not know. It seems to be generally agreed that it will have to be at least 25 per cent; some have placed it as high as 50 per cent. In a speech delivered at St. Louis in June last Director General Hines said that an advance of $300,000,000 on freight rates would be reflected in the cost of the finished article to the consumer to the extent of $1,500,000,000. Investigations made in normal times amply justify such predictions. For instance, when an increase of 10 cents per ton was granted on anthracite coal in 1902 the price of a ton of anthracite coal to the consumer advanced 50 cents, and it has never come down. An increase of 25 per cent in freight rates would mean approximately $875,000,000 additional.

Kruttschnitt says $742,000,000. Commissioner Woolley was reckoning pretty close to the figures later issued by Kruttschnitt.

Eight hundred and seventy-five million dollars additional which the people would have to pay to the railroads; and, using Mr. Hines's ratio, $4,375,000,000 additional which the ultimate consumer would have to pay for what he uses, eats, and wears, because when he buys the finished article he pays an accumulation of increases.

The private-control propagandists have been desperately trying to lull the public into the belief that the manufacturer, the jobber, or the retailer, possibly all three, would absorb this rate increase and the consumer not be allowed to feel it. I do not think in a final showdown—

Says Mr. Woolley—

the American people will stand for such an insult to their intelligence. We are fighting the high cost of living—

I am still continuing to read from the commissioner's address—and Congress is now enacting legislation strengthening the arm of the President and the Attorney General. We are trying to bring about industrial peace. Those who have got a vision from the war and the economic revolution that has followed in its wake are pleading with us as a Nation to produce more, to save more, to spend less, in order not only that we may improve our present condition, but that we may be prepared to play a wonderful part in the future.

Does Congress propose to turn back the railroads to their owners at this perilous time, and thereby make new high price levels inevitable, instead of lower price levels possible, or does it propose to enact legislation requiring the holding of these roads for a fixed reasonable period following the proclaiming of peace, and thereby aid the vitally important work of checking the profiteer and getting us back to normal? That is the problem in a nutshell. There is no blinking or evading it.

Who is to be benefited by this tremendous increase in rates? Who is to be benefited by fixing a level of assured return on stocks? How large a proportion of the people of the country are going to receive the benefits of this tax that is levied upon all the rest? In order to make this return, according to Kruttschnitt, you have got to levy enough to produce $742,000,000. Multiply that by five and you will see what the people have got to pay—nearly $4,000,000,000 added to the present desperately high cost of living. To benefit whom? To benefit a few stockholders.

It has been suggested during the course of this debate that railroad stockholders represent the vast body of our citizenship. I have on my desk the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission made on the 25th day of March, 1919, showing that there are in round numbers some 600,000 stockholders in the first-class roads, which roads represent 97 per cent of the traffic of the country. But who owns the majority of that stock? A little handful of men—20 of the biggest stockholders in each one of those roads and their subsidiaries own a majority of the stock; in other words, 1.3 per cent of the stockholders in class 1 roads, numbering only 8,301 individuals, represent a majority of the stock that is to have the benefit of the enormous increases that are to be levied as a tax upon the consumers of this country, amounting to $4,000,000,000.

Put this added burden upon transportation and it will mean fully $1,000,000,000 of increase to the agriculture element of this country alone. I get those figures from a letter which came in my mail this morning from the Farmers' National Council. They say:

Fully $1,000,000,000 of the increase in the prices consumers must pay for goods will fall upon the farmer, and he will have to pay the railroads for carrying farm products at least $200,000,000 more.

A total of at least $1,200,000,000 yearly the farmers are to be compelled to pay in addition to their present enormous financial burdens if this bill becomes a law.

Mr. Joseph B. Eastman, also a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, in a statement filed before the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce last July—mark the date—said:

The roads have recently been operating with earnings which would drive many of them into bankruptcy if in private hands; but the director general has felt, and I think wisely, that the depression may be the temporary result of the uncertainty following the cessation of hostilities, and that the country can better afford, for a time at least, to carry the burden of insufficient revenues through taxation as a part of the war cost than to suffer further advances in rates, whose ultimate effects no man can foretell.

Backed by the resources and powers of the Nation, he has been able to base his policy upon this belief, and it must be clear that no such policy could be pursued either now or in any similar situation in the future if the roads were in private hands.

It is fair to say that since Mr. Eastman filed that statement with the committee the experience of the Government with the roads has shown that there is no longer a monthly loss under Government operation but a profit each month amounting to several million dollars. This means, of course, a profit after all charges and expenses of Government operation have been paid, including the exceedingly high compensation paid to the railroads, which is based upon their average income for the three best consecutive years in their history.

But even suppose that for the next year or two, during the period of readjustment after the war, the Government could not operate the railroads at a profit. Suppose there was even a loss. Would it not be far better to pay the flat amount of the loss out of the Treasury than to have the amount multiplied fivefold, as it will be, when it reaches the consumer, if it is taken care of by an increase in rates?

There is another point that deserves mention right here. We are apt to forget that railway rates and charges under Government operation were not increased in the same proportion that prices of commodities have increased generally in this country during the war period. Mr. Woolley makes this point so clearly in his address from which I have quoted that I will adopt his statement. He said:

The chief criticism of the average man against Federal control is the increase in freight rates; yet Mr. Daniel Willard is quoted as having stated at Boston a few weeks ago that a ton of freight buys more transportation in the United States to-day than ever before in the history of the country. Of course, he meant that whereas the Interstate Commerce Commission beginning in June, 1917, had first increased class rates in official classification territory 15 per cent, and had later granted a similar increase of commodity rates, and that in June, 1918, the Director General of Railroads had granted a general increase for the whole country of 25 per cent, making in the most favored section the net increase only about 43.75 per cent, the prices of other commodities, such as food, cloth, steel, fuel, etc., had gone up from 75 to 300 per cent.

Whatever the exact percentages may be, there is no doubt that under Government operation railway rates have been lower than they would have been under private control.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. EDGE in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. STANLEY. Were the troops moved during this period and the materials moved during this period for the Government, for war and other purposes, charged up to the railroads? Were they given credit for the cost of this work just as in the case of private individuals, or was it simply a matter of bookkeeping? That is a matter that would affect this result.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I want to say this: I made inquiry about that. I could not get definite figures as to freight. My impression is, from the best information I could get, that the Government paid the same rate for freight hauled for the benefit of the War Department and the other departments that the public paid; but, of course, when it came to transporting men, these men had a commutation. I do not remember just what it was. It seems to me it was something like a cent a mile. I think they rode for a cent a mile wherever they were transported, and, of course, that greatly reduced the return to the Government.

I repeat, whatever the exact percentages may be, there is no doubt that under governmental operation the rates have been lower than they would have been under private control, and have been operated to keep the costs of the necessaries of life, such as food, clothing, and fuel, from going up higher than they otherwise would have gone.

It can not be doubted that the return of the roads to private control would be the signal for an increase of rates amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars when paid in the first instance by the shipper, but which will amount to several billions of dollars in increased rates on the necessaries of life when passed on to the consuming public and paid by it.

Support of this bill means that you are ready to take the responsibility of placing that unnecessary burden upon the people at this time.

On yesterday I picked up the Boston Post. I note that the shippers are beginning to understand what the passage of this bill will mean to them. From the Boston Post of yesterday I read the following:

TEXTILE MEN ALARMED.

Heads of the various manufacturing plants see nothing but an increase in rates. Textile men in particular have been annoyed by the crisis they see just ahead, because increased transportation means advances in prices of raw materials, in finished products, and in everything that enters into the determination of what their goods shall sell for in the markets of the world in competition with manufacturers from other and more favored sections of the country.

Although there has been no settled policy agreed upon, there is a belief among those who have been most intimately concerned with the situation that about the only way out is for the New England governors to unite in a request to the Federal authorities to continue their control of the railroads beyond December 31, or until some definite congressional action shall be taken to readjust conditions generally, so that the roads may be operated on a scale which will not be ruinous to the manufacturing and transportation interests alike.

III. GOVERNMENT REGULATION OF RAILWAY SECURITIES.

It is claimed as a merit for this bill that it gives the Government full control of railway securities. Section 12 of the bill provides that two or more railway corporations engaged in interstate commerce may form a new corporation under the provisions of this bill for the purpose of consolidating their properties, or any part thereof, into one corporation for the management and operation thereof.

This section in subdivision (c) provides:

The bonds of the corporation, at par, together with the outstanding capital stock, at par, shall not exceed the value of the consolidated properties as determined by the commission, including in said properties a reasonable working capital.

It is then provided that—

It shall be the duty of the commission to proceed immediately to the ascertainment of such values for the properties involved in the proposed consolidation.

Section 21 provides: Five or more persons, citizens of the United States, with the recommendation of the board, may form a corporation for the maintenance and operation of existing railways or for the construction, ownership, and operation of new lines. The provision with respect to securities under this section is as follows:

> The capital stock of any such corporation shall be fixed by the commission, having due regard to the value of the railway property contained in the system which the corporation is organized to own, maintain, and operate, as ascertained and determined by the commission, with the power to increase the same as additions, betterments, and extensions are added to the system through expenditures properly chargeable to capital account.

Section 13 of the bill provides, in effect, that after the expiration of seven years, if the plan of complete railroad consolidation has not been carried out, then the Government, acting through the board, shall form a corporation and compel the remaining railroads to come into the scheme.

I am sure if Senators have followed the discussion by the two members of the committee who have already spoken they will see that provision of the bill is of more or less doubtful validity, and is somewhat questioned by them. Indeed, I think the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], if I remember his statement rightly, expressed the very gravest doubt as to the validity of that proposition and as to the wisdom of it if it could be made valid. It is provided that the capitalization of such corporation "in bonds and capital stock shall not be greater than the value of the properties ascertained by the commission under the said act of March 1, 1913, with such additions thereto as may be necessary on account of enlargements of the properties so to be consolidated."

That is quoted from the bill. I will refer to it a little later. Section 14 provides that—

> Any railway corporation which now owns and operates any line of railway engaged in the transportation of interstate or foreign commerce, having been incorporated under the laws of any State or Territory, is hereby authorized and empowered to reincorporate itself and become a corporation under the laws of the United States in the manner and subject to the terms and conditions herein provided.

Section 24 contains the provision authorizing the issuance of short-time notes not to exceed at any one time 5 per cent of the par value of securities of any railroad which are to be exempt from the regulatory provisions of this bill. There are various other provisions not necessary to mention regulating the details of the contemplated exchange of stocks and securities by which the existing railway corporations are to be transformed into a new corporation under the Federal law. The fundamental provisions, however, in regard to the issuance of railway securities in all of these different provisions, are to the effect that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall immediately value the property, and that the stocks and bonds issued shall not exceed the value of the consolidated property so determined, including, however, in said property, as it is stated, "a reasonable working capital." This provision has, of course, the same vice as the one previously discussed, in that it requires the Interstate Commerce Commission immediately to value railway properties.

The railways know that the Interstate Commerce Commission can not do this, except it accepts the valuation which the railways themselves may place upon the properties. I shall not repeat the argument I have already made on this subject in discussing section 6, but call attention to this important difference between the evils arising under the provisions of this section and those I am now considering.

If an improper valuation is made for rate-making purposes, if the Interstate Commerce Commission is deceived and afterwards learns of the deception, the error can be corrected. The injury to the public occasioned by the false valuation used in fixing rates may be serious, but relief from it can eventually be obtained after the error is discovered.

In the case of valuation, however, for the purpose of an issue of bonds and stocks an error once made can never be corrected. The Government may disclaim responsibility for the value of the securities issued in the strongest and most positive terms, but it can never escape the compelling force of the argument that the individual bought the securities on the Government's assurance that they represented only the fair value of the property of the company, and that the Government is in honor bound to permit the railroads to maintain a schedule of rates and charges sufficiently high to pay the promised interest on the bonds and dividends on the stock so issued.

As one goes into the relations of the railroads to the public he first sees the vice of overcapitalization as an excuse for excessive transportation charges.

Mr. STANLEY. Would the efficiency of these railroads be impaired by an amendment to that provision providing that in any finding by the Interstate Commerce Commission based upon the physical value of the railroad only a certain per cent of the property values as indicated by the property accounts could be issued in stock? In other words, if the book values or the property account, as they call it, showed the railroad properties were worth $100,000,000, suppose they were permitted to issue 60 or 70 per cent of that amount of stock. Could not the railroad be operated just as well on a stock issue of 60 per cent of its value as 100 per cent? I am just asking for information.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, my objection to this provision, as the Senator will observe if he follows me for 5 or 10 minutes further, is fundamental. I think that this Government can not take the responsibility of sanctioning a new issue of railroad securities without incurring the responsibility of approving all the issues that have gone before. If the Government authorizes on the existing property an additional issue of securities, it is tantamount to validating all the water in the securities now outstanding, and I am confident that any honest, thoroughgoing valuation of the roads will show that 40 to 50 per cent of the capitalization is fraudulent and fictitious.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PHIPPS in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. STANLEY. The point I wish to make is this: Leaving out of consideration the direct question which the Senator presents, namely, that they ought to be allowed to issue new capitalization, new stocks, and bonds at this time, even if that were done, whether wise or unwise, if a given railroad was prepared to consolidate with certain others under the provisions of the bill, to surrender and cancel the existing evidences of ownership, and to accept in lieu thereof the new issue of stocks—I presume that is what would be done, as they did in the cases of other consolidations like the Great Northern and the Northern Pacific—in that event, if a new stock issue was 50 per cent or 60 per cent, or any other per cent of the old capitalization, with the right to issue additional stock in the event investigations of the Interstate Commerce Commission justified it, would such a provision impair the efficiency of the road or materially affect the total value of the securities issued or have any other effect upon the railroad issuing the stock except to provide a smaller basis and a weaker argument for increased freight rates?

The public generally knows about what the railroad properties are worth, and the value of the securities will depend not upon the face value of the stock but upon the dividends declared upon it. If a property, as indicated by the property investment account, should be valued at $100,000,000 and they issued $50,000,000 of stocks, they will pay twice as much in dividends as if they issued $100,000,000 of stock. The income of the railroad from the sale of $50,000,000 worth of stock will be practically what it would be from the sale of $100,000,000, because the public is going to buy the stock, not on account of the book valuation but on account of the return it pays the holder. If it is watered stock and pays a small amount the purchaser of it will buy it at a depreciated figure, and it will be worth correspondingly less than its face value.

In the event the bill is passed and the issue of stock is authorized, would it not be wise, in the opinion of the Senator from Wisconsin, to limit the capitalization to a certain per cent of the value as indicated by the property account pending investigation by the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I must say in answer to the question of the distinguished Senator from Kentucky that I can not give my assent to any proposition which contemplates the Government assuming the responsibility of regulating the issuance of securities by private corporations, even when they are engaged in the transportation business.

I am going to define it. I suppose I shall stand quite alone in my view upon the question, but it is the result of no sudden conclusion upon the subject. It is a matter upon which I have had occasion to do such thinking as I am capable of doing in the years gone by.

I contend that it is no business of the Government to undertake the regulation of the securities or the financial affairs of public-service corporations. I will now proceed to give my reasons for that belief.

As one goes into the relations of the railroads to the public he sees first the vast overcapitalization as an excuse for excessive transportation charges. It is quite natural that he should first think of correcting the evil by limiting the capitalization to the actual value of the railroad property—many years ago I entertained the same view—but it is inevitable that he should ultimately realize that the true relation of the common carrier to the public and the true principle upon which that relation should be controlled does not impose upon the Government the necessity to regulate the complex financial affairs of great national railways. In short, all interests with which the public is in any way concerned can be fully protected by a simple and logical method, a method which protects the people against obligations and responsibilities which they can not escape if their Government attempts to regulate the financial operations of the great interstate railways.

What interests have the public in the control of the railways? As to interstate transportation the people of the country are interested in, first, the character of the service rendered, and, second, the price which they must pay for that service. Now, sir, they have no other or further interest.

What obligations do the railroads owe to the public? The Government charters the common carrier and clothes it with the sovereign power to take private property, even against the consent of the owner, for the carrier's use. The acceptance of this sovereign power operates to dedicate the property of the railway to public use, and imposes upon the carrier the obligation to so use its property as to furnish to the public—what? Three things: Adequate service, impartial service, reasonable rates.

What duty does the Government owe to the public in regard to the common carrier that it has chartered and given this great power? It has created the common carrier. It has invested it with power to take private property for public use. From its nature, within a limited area along its course, the railroad is a natural monopoly. Possessed of this great power the railroad might ignore its obligations and oppress the public. The Government is therefore bound to see to it that the creature it has clothed with its sovereign power shall discharge its public obligations. It therefore becomes the duty of the Government to so control this carrier-monopoly that the public shall be guaranteed adequate service, impartial service, and reasonable rates. The interest of the public goes no further. The obligation of the Government goes no further.

To acquit itself of this obligation to the public what is the Government required to do? It must of necessity ascertain the fair value of the property which the common carrier uses for the public. It owes no duty to the public to undertake the regulation of the financial operations of the railroads. The Supreme Court has well said:

> If a railroad company has bonded its property for an amount that exceeds its fair value, or if its capitalization is largely fictitious, it may not impose upon the public the burden of such increased rates as may be required for the purpose of realizing profits upon such excessive valuation or fictitious capitalization.

The fair valuation of the property is the true basis. The public need not concern itself at all with the villanies of overcapitalization which abound in the history of every railroad in the country.

To execute its public trust, the Government must, in addition to ascertaining the fair value of the property, know exactly the amount of money which the common carrier expends in maintaining the property used for benefit of the public. It must also know exactly the cost or outlay of the common carrier in operating the railroad.

Having ascertained these three important essentials—the fair value of the property, the cost of maintaining the property, and the cost of operating the property—the Government is then prepared to enforce adequate service, impartial service, and reasonable rates.

To this end it must make rates sufficiently high to pay the operating expenses, and also to meet the entire cost of maintenance, and enough in addition to insure an adequate return upon the fair value of the property of the common carrier.

It is charged with no duty to become legally or morally answerable for the financial juggling of the railway management. The rate which it fixes may indirectly operate to restrain overcapitalization; it may even tend to squeeze the water out of excessive stock and bond issues already set afloat, but neither the railroads nor the dealers in railway stocks and bonds have any cause for complaint. The railroads have no right to exact from the public rates high enough to pay excessive interest and dividends upon stocks and bonds which exceed the fair value of the property.

No warrant or excuse can be offered for the Government assuming any responsibility regarding capitalization of common carriers for the protection of investors.

The purchase by an individual of railway stocks and bonds as a speculation or for investment is solely a matter of option with the purchaser. He buys in his own right and at his own risk. Upon principle, the Government owes no other or different obligation to the man who buys railroad stocks and bonds than to the man who buys Standard Oil or Tennessee Coal & Iron stocks and bonds, or to the man who purchases a horse, or a house and lot, or a farm.

But should the Government assume the responsibility of controlling the issue of railway stocks and bonds, it will enter upon an undertaking fraught with the gravest danger to the public, an undertaking certain to impose unnecessary and unjust burdens upon transportation.

A dozen or fifteen years ago every railroad in the United States would have taxed its resources to the last limit to resist conferring upon the Government the power to supervise and regulate its financial operations. To-day they hail with satisfaction and delight the prospect of such legislation, and it is to be noted that the organs of Wall Street and the stock exchanges especially commend this particular feature of this bill.

The reason, sir, is obvious. The railroads of the country carried their fictitious capitalization to a point where within the last few years the public has grown suspicious of the soundness of these securities. Values rapidly declined. Various schemes were devised to boost the market. They failed. Then came the bold demand for some Government action that would rehabilitate these depreciated securities and stimulate the languishing business of the stock exchanges. Now the railroads are hungry to have some form of Government sanction for all future bond and stock issues. Such an approval would at once make an issue of bonds and stocks "a good thing" in the market. The Government may disclaim that its action is a guaranty of the value of such securities. The proposed law may even so provide, as it does, in specific terms, but for all that, the investor will claim that in good morals the Government is bound, in its dealings with the railroads, to make the transportation charges high enough to protect the securities which it has authorized the railroad companies to place upon the market. But, more than this, Mr. President, when the Government through its commission has authorized a railroad to make an additional issue of bonds or stocks it will in effect have validated all its issues of stocks and bonds then outstanding.

If it were a proper function of government to superintend and regulate the issue of railroad securities in which private parties speculate or invest, it would be vital that the commission charged with this great responsibility should know the true value of the property of the railroad underlying such securities. But the Interstate Commerce Commission does not possess such information. It will be years before the commission will have completed its valuation of the railroad property of the country under the law recently enacted. When the commission has finished that great economic undertaking and submitted its tentative findings, its work will under the law have to be tested and tried out in the courts before it becomes even sufficiently stable to form a basis for fixing railroad rates and charges, much less of issuing securities upon it. In the meantime is the Interstate Commerce Commission to be called upon to guess at the value, and upon that guess to authorize railroads to increase their capitalization?

The commission has been completely at the mercy of the railroads in every contest over rates where the companies have raised the question that the rates fixed by the commission would not permit the earning of a reasonable return upon their property. And now it is proposed to require the commission to decide, upon the facts presented to it, that securities may be issued, upon which the railroads are "henceforth to be supplied with the money they need."

Referring to the fact that the railroads had control of all evidence regarding the value of their properties and that it was powerless to meet that evidence in any contest involving the value of railroad property, the Interstate Commerce Commission in its report for 1909 said:

> There is no way by which the Government can properly meet this testimony.

I have before me here another report in which reference is made to the investment account. It says:

> Thus at the first touch of critical analysis the balance sheets published by the American railways are found to be inadequate.

This was after the commission had been authorized and empowered to enforce a uniform system of bookkeeping upon the railway companies of the country—

> They are incapable of rendering the service which may be rightly demanded of them. One cure seems possible for such a situation, and one only, and that is for the Government to make an authoritative valuation of the railway property and to provide that the amount so determined should be entered upon the books of the carriers as the accepted measure of capital assets. Under no other condition can the commission complete in satisfactory manner the formulation of a standard system of accounts.

If the commission can not in this fundamental issue "meet the testimony" of the railroads in a case involving merely the fixing of a freight rate, how dangerous to impose upon them the infinitely greater responsibility of determining whether railways shall issue, it may be, hundreds of millions of dollars of stocks and bonds, which will become a permanent burden upon transportation. Consider the lasting wrong which this may work upon the public. The railroads will always have the advantage. They are more familiar with the case as it is to be presented than the commission can hope to be. They have a powerful organization. They have an army of trained engineers, statisticians, accountants, masters of railway finance, and special counsel.

If the railroads win wrongfully in a rate case, it is a hardship upon the public; but an erroneous decision on fixing a rate too high may be corrected. The case may be reviewed; the excessive rate may be lowered in a subsequent proceeding, but a wrongful decision by the commission allowing a railroad to issue millions upon millions of dollars of securities, which are at once thrown upon the market, is an everlasting burden upon the public and an everlasting injury to the people.

Whoever buys railroad securities now buys at his own risk. Whoever buys securities upon the issue of which the Government has set the seal of its approval will, in good morals, hold that the Government must under all circumstances maintain railroad rates so high as not to impair the value of those securities. The moment that investments are made in securities authorized by the Government, that moment property rights in those securities become fixed. The commission may find that it has been misled; that it has grossly blundered; but its mistake is irrevocable. It is not simply the question of having temporarily imposed a hardship upon a community; it is a case of having inflicted an irreparable injury upon a helpless and unoffending public.

If the plan of railway reorganization and reissue of railway securities was to become effective only after there had been an actual valuation of railway properties and it was provided that the securities issued should be cut down to the actual value of the railway properties, something might be said in its favor. Even then the Government would have no business to place its stamp of approval upon the securities of privately owned railroads any more than upon the securities of any other corporation. But the purpose of the present legislation seems to be to forestall the actual valuation of the railway properties and at the present time secure the Government's approval to the present vastly inflated stock issues.

In what I have so far said upon this subject I have assumed that it was the purpose of this bill to require the Interstate Commerce Commission to limit the stocks and bonds a railroad company may issue under the provisions of this bill to an amount substantially equal to the actual value of the property. A critical examination of the sections of the bill, however, would seem to indicate that the commission is not held to that rule.

Section 21, which relates to the formation of a new corporation to own and operate one of the existing railway systems or to construct, own, and operate a new line, provides only that the capital stock of such a corporation shall be fixed by the commission, "having due regard" for the value of the railway property contained in the corporation.

Section 24 gives the railway 90 days after the approval of this act to issue securities, without any sort of Federal regulation, and provides that after that time all State control of the regulation of securities of corporations organized in the respective States shall cease.

The provision of section 24 effecting such a result is as follows:

> The jurisdiction conferred upon the board by this act shall be exclusive and plenary, and such carriers subject to this act may issue securities in accordance with the provisions of this section without securing approval other than as specified herein.

Of course, in the charters of many railways organized under the laws of different States, control over securities as well as rates is expressly reserved to the States. It is clearly the purpose of this section to free the railroads at the expiration of 90 days from the passage of the law from the control over the issuance of securities which the States now possess. I find nothing in section 24 limiting the amount of the securities which the board may authorize under the terms of that section. It would seem, therefore, that at the end of 90 days after the passage of this act all State control over the issuance of railway securities under this section is abolished and the whole matter is left with this newly created board, with absolutely no limit placed upon the amount of securities it may authorize a railroad company to issue.

Mr. President, there are many other features in this bill sufficient to condemn it utterly. It takes the first step, and a very long one at that, toward wiping out State railway commissions and all State control of railroads. It deprives the States of the right now generally exercised of levying and collecting inheritance and transfer taxes on railway securities issued by corporations organized under the laws of the respective States. In a State like Wisconsin, under the laws of which several great railroad corporations were formed, the loss of this item of revenue alone from inability to collect the tax from nonresidents is a serious matter. It pretends to preserve some sort of competition among railroads, but it really destroys all incentive to competition, for it leaves little or no profit to compete for. It is an invitation to the grossest and most reckless extravagance and waste of money by guaranteeing a fixed net income without any limitation upon expenses.

The very natural desire of the railways to control the numerous boards and commissions and regulatory bodies which the bill sets up invites them to even greater political activity than heretofore, while their consolidation and unification under the provisions of this bill will make them a more sinister and dangerous force in the life of the Nation than they have been before.

But, sir, I am not going to dwell further upon these or many other vicious features of the bill, but I will go directly to certain provisions which, if they are enacted into law, will create a crisis in the affairs of this country the result of which no man can foresee. I now address myself to the labor provisions of the bill.

[At this point Mr. LA FOLLETTE yielded the floor for the day.]

Saturday, December 13 (legislative day of Friday, December 12), 1919.

IV. THE LABOR PROVISIONS OF THE BILL.

Section 25 of the bill creates a "Committee of Wages and Working Conditions" and also three "Regional Boards of Adjustment." The Committee of Wages and Working Conditions is to be composed of eight members, four of whom are to represent labor and to be selected by the board from a list furnished by the railway labor organizations and four to represent the railway carriers and to be appointed by the board from the list of names submitted by the carriers. By the same section it is provided that "the Committee of Wages and Working Conditions shall have jurisdiction over controversies respecting wages and working conditions of employees upon railway carriers subject to this act." It is made the duty of the Committee of Wages and Working Conditions to consider all complaints respecting wages and working conditions submitted by representatives of employees or carriers and to make decisions, by majority vote, as soon as practicable. The decisions of the committee shall be certified to by the board and "shall take effect when approved by the board."

If the Committee of Wages and Working Conditions is evenly divided, the question "shall be referred to the board, whose decision shall be binding."

It is thus seen that no decision of the Committee of Wages and Working Conditions amounts to anything until it is approved by the board; and in any case where the committee is evenly divided, as it would be, of course, in every contest where there was a substantial dispute between employees and employers respecting wages or working conditions, the board would take charge of the controversy, and its decision would be final.

The board, it will be recalled, consists of five members, appointed by the President, and there is no provision that labor shall have any representation on the board. Therefore, every decision with respect to wages and working conditions is ultimately decided by a board upon which labor has no representation.

Section 27 confers upon the Regional Board of Adjustment jurisdiction of questions arising in ordinary railway controversies other than controversies relating to wages and working conditions.

Section 30 of the bill provides—I shall not take the time to read that section, because I assume that every Senator here must have read section 30 of the bill.

Section 30, after prohibiting any agreement between employees of the railroad to cease work in order to achieve any improvement in wages and working conditions, contains the following proviso:

> Provided, That nothing herein shall be taken to deny to any individual the right to quit his employment for any reason.

The framers of this bill give to the individual the poor privilege of quitting his job if he can not make enough to sustain himself.

A man who works on the railroad for a number of years unfits himself for any other business in proportion as he qualifies himself for that business, and if there comes a time where there is imposed upon him conditions under which he finds it impossible to maintain himself and his family, to support them, to educate them, this provision of the proposed law will force that man to deal single handed and alone with the railroad corporations.

As practical men of affairs, Senators must know that any individual workman, particularly in dealing with a railroad company, puts his position and his employment in jeopardy if he complains about his working conditions and the wage orders that affect them. He must go hat in hand into the office of the superintendent. A discipline runs through this system of employment that is not unlike that of the Army; and you might as well expect a private soldier under military regulations to secure for himself better conditions affecting his employment as to expect one single individual in the railway service to do so.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. GRONNA. It may be that my question is rather a simple one, but, as I understand the Senator from Wisconsin, the provisions of this bill authorize the individual laborer to quit his job as an individual. Does not it also apply collectively—that is, to labor organizations? Would not such an organization, if it sees fit, have the same privilege under the proposed law as an individual?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In response to the Senator's inquiry, let me read him section 30 of the bill, which is as follows:

SEC. 30. It shall be unlawful for two or more persons, being officers, directors, managers, agents, attorneys, or employees of any carrier or carriers subject to the act to regulate commerce, as amended, for the purpose of maintaining, adjusting, or settling any dispute, demand, or controversy which, under the provisions of this act, can be submitted for decision to the committee of wages and working conditions or to a regional board of adjustment, to enter into any combination or agreement with the intent substantially to hinder, restrain, or prevent the operation of trains or other facilities of transportation for the movemen of commodities or persons in interstate commerce, or in pursuance of any such combination or agreement and with like purpose substantially to hinder, restrain, or prevent the operation of trains or other facilities of transportation for the movement of commodities or persons in interstate commerce; and, upon conviction, any such persons shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500 or by imprisonment not exceeding six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment:

Then follows the proviso to which I was addressing myself—

Provided, That nothing herein shall be taken to deny to any individual the right to quit his employment for any reason.

But let me say to the Senator from North Dakota that if a body of employees of a railroad company acting in concert as a body, in order to improve wages or working conditions, decline to continue in the service of the company, of course the direct effect will be to interfere in a material way with the operation of trains upon which they are employed, and I do not believe that any lawyer here would undertake to say that a Federal court would not instruct a jury that from that act alone they would be warranted in finding that these men quit with the intention of interfering in a substantial way with the operation of trains.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let me say just a word further. The very purpose of this provision is to prevent strikes, and the very benefit which the employee derives from the strike is that it gives him collective strength in grappling with the great corporations to bring them to a serious consideration of the demands labor makes.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, if the Senator will further permit me, I have not had the benefit of hearing the discussion before the committee—if that provision means that labor would have no right to hinder or to prevent others from taking the places of the men who have quit, I should favor it.

I am frank to say to the Senator from Wisconsin that I never shall vote for any provision or for any law that will compel any man or any body of men to work, whether singly or collectively, because that is a cheap form of slavery; but I do believe that we ought to have laws to regulate labor as well as everything else and prohibit them from preventing other people from working.

I wish to say to the Senator from Wisconsin that that is as far as I would want to go. If it is the intention of this provision simply to say that it shall be illegal for labor organizations or any other kind of an organization to prevent labor from working, of course I could vote for that, but I never could support a proposition that labor individually or collectively shall not have the right to quit, and if that is the purpose of the section I think we ought to know it before we vote upon it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I do not believe that any lawyer in this body, I do not believe that anyone reading this provision of the bill, can be in any doubt as to its meaning.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KNOX. I should like to have the matter cleared up in my own mind. The Senator from Wisconsin said that the purpose of the thirtieth section was to prevent men from striking. Is that purpose avowed? Is that admitted?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think it is. Permit me; I think I can answer that question by quoting the statement of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. KNOX. While the Senator is looking for the matter that he is seeking, I should like to say that in my mind there is a distinction between a prohibition by a law which enjoins men from seeking to prevent the operation of lines of transportation and a provision that would prevent them from striking, although the strike might have the indirect or the direct effect of clogging the lines of transportation. The courts have drawn that distinction in quite a number of cases. I remember that in the earlier trust cases the court announced that the combination of productive industries was not prohibited by law, although the direct effect was the blocking of the channels of interstate commerce; and what I want to know is whether we can proceed upon the theory that that is the intention of the framers of this bill—that it is to prevent railroad men from striking for just cause.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I do not think there can be the least doubt concerning it. Let me quote this from the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, in the majority report which accompanied the bill as it was laid before the Senate.

The report says:

In making the strike unlawful, it is obvious that there must be something given to the workers in exchange for it.

Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that the purpose of this section—and I think the majority of the committee will all of them concede what I am saying—is unmistakable. It is to make the strike unlawful under any circumstances. It is to compel all the employees of the railroads to submit their grievances first of all to a committee composed of four railroad employees and four employers, called the Committee of Wages and Working Conditions; but that committee can render no decision that is effective. It may render decisions, but no decision it renders can go into effect until it is approved by the transportation board, which not only has an absolute jurisdiction over the Committee of Wages and Working Conditions but has a large jurisdiction over very many of the operations of the railroads. This Committee of Wages and Working Conditions, to which the railway employees are first required to go, passes upon the grievance, but the decision of the committee can not go into effect until the board passes upon it. The employee has representation upon the Committee of Wages and Working Conditions. He has no representation upon the board.

Since when has it been the policy of legislation in modern times, under any system of compulsory arbitration, to send laboring men to a board upon which they have no representation? That is what is proposed in this bill. True, they have equal representation with the employers upon the Committee of Wages and Working Conditions, but that committee can decide nothing final with respect to any matter of controversy. Before any of its decisions can be effective they must go to the board, upon which labor has no representation.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, will the Senator tell me how the board is constituted? Is there any requirement at all as to the character of men that shall compose it?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The board is composed of five men. It is appointed by the President and must be confirmed by the Senate. That is the only limitation upon the President in making the appointment.

Mr. KNOX. There is no restriction? Labor may be represented on the board if the President sees fit, may it not?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. There is no restriction. The President could make them all labor men if he wanted to.

Mr. KNOX. That is just what I wanted to know, whether there is any restriction upon the power of the President?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; no.

Mr. KNOX. And none on the power of the Senate? The Senate could reject the board if they did not think they were the right kind of men?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Oh, yes; but there is no assurance that upon that board there will be any representative of labor. Furthermore, as an illustration of the way labor fares when its interests are to be disposed of by some committee or some conference which is appointed by the President, look at the personnel of the Industrial Commission that met here recently. It had some labor representatives on it; that is true. I suppose that personnel probably would have been approved and confirmed had the personnel of the recent industrial labor conference that met to Washington been submitted to the Senate; and yet the representation that labor had upon that conference was such that it was tied hand and foot. It was utterly helpless and powerless. And let me say to the Senators here that no country on the face of the earth, in all the history of the differences between labor and capital, has ever been able to enforce compulsory arbitration upon labor. Everywhere that it has been attempted it has failed. We are starting out here upon a line of policy that for a generation of time has been demonstrated to be a failure—a failure in Canada, a failure in New Zealand, a failure wherever it has been attempted. Arbitrary and oppressive legislation with regard to labor has always resulted in conditions where the Government itself has considered it impracticable to enforce those harsh provisions.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. STERLING. Granting that what the Senator says in regard to compulsory arbitration is true, is it quite true with reference to what we term compulsory investigation—that is, a law which will prevent the carrying on of a strike or will prevent a lockout during the period when a controversy is being investigated by a competent tribunal?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Oh, yes. The experience of Colorado, which has a statute of this kind, has demonstrated as I think the representatives of the State of Colorado will agree with me, the utter futility of that sort of legislation. The investigations that were imposed upon the authority that was named in the statute were so onerous and so multiplied by one side or the other of the controversy that it broke down in its execution. It has been ineffective there. They had a compulsory-arbitration statute somewhat similar to that of Canada. Indeed, I think it was modeled upon the Canadian law.

Mr. STERLING. I have not followed the operation of the law in Colorado, but my understanding is that the compulsory-investigation law of Canada has been reasonably successful.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will excuse me, the compulsory-arbitration law of Canada——

Mr. STERLING. It is not a compulsory-arbitration law, if I may interrupt the Senator. It does not require, it does not compel, arbitration.

Mr. STANLEY. If the Senator will excuse me, in using the term "compulsory arbitration" I made use of an expression that is found in this bill and is used on this floor. It is a misnomer and a contradiction in terms. You can not have compulsory arbitration—that is, compulsory agreement. An agreement must be voluntary; but we have fallen into the habit of speaking of this paradoxical and impossible thing and have incorporated it in this bill.

The compulsory-arbitration law of Canada, as applicable to common carriers, is different from the law as applicable to employees generally. There are two acts—I forget the technical name of each of them, but they possess the same principles, and in the main I think they are salutary. They provide explicitly, both the act governing employees upon common carriers and the act governing employees generally, that strikes shall not be prohibited except under certain conditions. The law provides, as the Senator has said, for an investigation. After that investigation is made it provides for giving it the widest publicity, the investigation having been made by a board composed of representatives of each of the contending parties, labor and capital as a rule. The employees name a representative and the employers name a representative and the Government names a third party, and they make a thorough investigation. The law prohibits strikes during the pendency of this investigation, which can not exceed a limited time. After the investigation is made the law provides for the widest publicity. It is to be published in the official labor journals, to be published in certain other publications, to be given to the editor of each newspaper requesting it, and to be furnished to all other persons at the cost of publication.

Then if either party after this investigation, and after this publicity, agrees to abide by the finding of this board, after such agreement that finding has the force and effect of a decree of a court. But unless and until the contending parties voluntarily concur and through their duly accredited representatives indicate their acceptance of the agreement it has no binding force whatever.

Mr. STERLING. The Senator from Kentucky has given the version of the law as I understand it in the main. The point I wished to bring out is that pending the investigation and prior to the publication of the findings of the tribunal investigating it a strike or lockout is prohibited.

Mr. STANLEY. That is a fact.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I am not quite sure whether I have responded to the question that was asked of me. If I have, I would like to resume my argument where I broke off.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] asked the Senator whether it would not be entirely possible for the President to appoint upon this transportation board railroad employees. I would like to ask my colleague whether in his opinion the duties devolving upon this board are not of such a character that it would almost inevitably follow that the members of the board would be practical railway men who have had experience in executive management?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is a very good point, Mr. President, to be taken into consideration in this connection. The duties imposed upon this board are duties that require training in railroad traffic, railroad operation, and railroad finance. This board must deal with the question of the reorganization of the railroads, the reissue of securities, and so forth. It is to be a board the importance of whose functions I do not think is to be considered inferior at all to those of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. STANLEY. Will the Senator yield right there?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. STANLEY. This board requires, as I understand it, the highest character of technical skill on account of the fact that the enforcement of the safety-appliance act and the car-service act and a great many similar acts will devolve upon it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should say that the enforcement of those acts, while upon the human side are vitally important, of course, will be subordinated in importance and magnitude to the consideration of the financial side.

Mr. STANLEY. In either event, assuming that the President would appoint upon the board practical railroad men, some of them operators and some of them operatives, all of them vitally interested in the success of this business as segregated from other business, as conductors, firemen, and engineers, and as railroad presidents usually are in the raising of a rate, for instance, with such a board as that, taken entirely from one end or the other of this railroad proposition clothed with the right to fix wages and to reflect them in rates, what would become of the shipper?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think that is a pertinent question.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. There is no limitation or attempted limitation in the bill with regard to the power of the President in making the selection of members of the transportation board.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Oh, no.

Mr. CUMMINS. In response to the suggestion just made by the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], I have a somewhat intimate acquaintance with some of the chiefs of the brotherhoods, their character, their attainments, their ability, and I say here that in view of the duties which are to be performed by the transportation board, any one of those heads of the certain unions who have attained prominence would be in every way highly qualified. I do not know anyone who would be more highly qualified than some of the heads of these brotherhoods. But it is perfectly obvious that the President can appoint whomsoever he likes, and if those appointments are confirmed by the Senate, they would enter upon the discharge of their duties. I only make this suggestion with regard to any limitation outside the law upon the President in making the selection.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I quite agree with what the Senator from Iowa, the chairman of the committee, has said with respect to the qualifications of some of the heads of these railroad organizations, perhaps of all of them. They are men of not only liberal education, but men with practical knowledge of all transportation matters. But, Mr. President, that is not the type of men who will be selected for this work, and if it were, there would not be more than one representative of labor on the board, and labor would hand itself over to a control that would render it helpless. It would be credited with having representation, but it would have no power. It would be submerged. It would be in the minority.

I believe that the controversies of labor that have been most successfully handled have been handled by boards where there was an even balance, and where if one side stood out against the other they had to submit to the public the basis upon which they stood, and public opinion compelled the side that was manifestly in the wrong to yield.

But that is quite beside the question that was asked of me when I was diverted from the line of my argument by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA]. It is plain that we have a proposal in this legislation with regard to controversies in which labor is affected which denies labor the right to quit work in a collective body, and which makes it an offense punishable by fine and imprisonment if they cease from their employment by concerted agreement, because I am sure that if any lawyer reads section 30 he will be bound to say that the courts would be warranted in so construing the law and in authorizing the jury under the facts submitted to it to so find.

Now, Mr. President, that is the reason why I take it that the Senator from Iowa, the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, said:

> In making the strike unlawful, it is obvious that there must be given something to the workers in exchange for it.

What the worker is given by this bill in exchange for his right to strike is a decision by a board in the selection of which he has no voice, and a board which, by reason of its constitution and the power it will exercise, will inevitably come under the domination of the railroads. When we get through with the fine phrases of these sections of the bill we will find that what it proposes is exactly this:

First, the compulsory reference to a board of five members appointed by the President of all disputes which may arise between railway managers and the employees respecting wages and working conditions; and, second, a prohibition of strikes under penalty of a $500 fine and six months' imprisonment.

The law on this subject, as it exists up to this hour, was laid down over 25 years ago by one of the ablest jurors that this country ever produced, in a celebrated case that arose in the State of Wisconsin.

I will not take the time of the Senate to go into the litigation in detail. It is sufficient to say that in 1894 Henry C. Payne, of Wisconsin, and two others were the receivers of the property of the Northern Pacific Railroad, and as such receivers, following a familiar practice, they gave notice that they were going to reduce the expenses of the operating company by a substantial cut in the wages of the employees. The employees gave notice that if the threat of the receivers were carried out they would go on a strike. The receivers applied to Federal Judge Jenkins, of the eastern district of Wisconsin, who promptly issued his injunction prohibiting the strike, and in language not unlike that of this bill, prohibited the men from "combining and conspiring" to quit the service of the receivers, "with the object and intent of embarrassing the operation of the road."

That is the language reported in his order of injunction. This case is reported as Farmers Loan & Trust Co. against Northern Pacific Railway Co., Sixtieth Federal, 803.

An appeal was taken to the circuit court of appeals, and the case on appeal is reported as Arthur and others against Oakes, Sixty-third Federal Reporter, 310. The case was heard before Mr. Justice Harlan and Circuit Judges Woods and Bunn. Mr. Justice Harlan wrote the opinion, and I quote from it the following well-settled statement of law:

> The right of an employee engaged to perform personal service to quit that service rests upon the same basis as the right of his employer to discharge him from further personal service. If the quitting in the one case or the discharging in the other is in violation of the contract between the parties, the one injured by the breach has his action for damages; and a court of equity will not, indirectly or negatively, by means of an injunction restraining the violation of the contract, compel the affirmative performance from day to day or the affirmative acceptance of merely personal services.

Again, the opinion says:

> It was competent for the receivers in this case, subject to the approval of the court, to adopt a schedule of wages or salaries and say to employees, "We will pay according to this schedule, and if you are not willing to accept such wages, you will be discharged." It was competent for an employee to say, "I will not remain in your service under that schedule, and if it is to be enforced I will withdraw, leaving you to manage the property as best you may without my assistance." In the one case, the exercise by the receivers of their right to adopt a new schedule of wages could not, at least in the case of a general employment without limit as to time, be made to depend upon considerations of hardship and inconvenience to employees. In the other, the exercise by employees of their right to quit in consequence of a proposed reduction of wages could not be made to depend upon considerations of hardship or inconvenience to those interested in the trust property or to the public.

Now comes the gist of the decision and the important and fundamental principle of law, and I quote further:

> We have said that if employees were unwilling to remain in the service of the receivers for the compensation prescribed for them by the revised schedules it was the right of each one on that account to withdraw from such service. It was equally their right without reference to the effect upon the property or upon the operation of the road to confer with each other upon the subject of the proposed reduction in wages and to withdraw in a body from the service of the receivers because of the proposed change. Indeed, their right as a body of employees affected by the proposed reduction of wages to demand given rates of compensation as a condition of their remaining in the service was as absolute and perfect as was the right of the receivers representing the aggregation of persons, creditors, and stockholders interested in the trust property and the general public to fix the rates they were willing to pay their respective employees.

There is one other quotation from the opinion, which I should have stated was also the unanimous opinion of the court. The quotation I am now about to read——

Mr. STANLEY. Will the Senator from Wisconsin give me the citation of the case to which he is referring?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It will be found in Sixty-third Federal Reporter, page 310.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Federal Reporter is not a report of the United States Supreme Court?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; but the opinion was rendered at the time when one member of the Supreme Court sat with the judges of the district court and formed the circuit court of appeals. They tried the cases that came up from the district court, and then from their determination appeals, if any, were taken to the Supreme Court.

Mr. OVERMAN. This was not the Supreme Court?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; but it is the opinion of Justice Harlan when he was a Supreme Court judge, sitting with the Federal judges in that circuit to dispose of this case.

Mr. STANLEY. Was that case appealed?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; the case was not appealed. It is my understanding that this is the law, decided by the highest court that passed on it, down to this hour.

There is one other quotation from the opinion which I should have stated to be also the unanimous opinion of the court. The quotation I am now about to read does not relate directly to the principles of the bill under consideration, but it relates to the injunction order or covers a case such as that in which the order of injunction was issued, as I believe unlawfully, a short time ago in the coal miners' strike.

I quote from page 317 of Mr. Justice Harlan's opinion, where it is said—and I just stop here for a moment to say that I regret beyond expression that the action of the Federal court at Indianapolis is not in some form or other to be reviewed by the Supreme Court of the United States, because I regard it as absolutely a reversal of all the authorities and entirely unwarranted in law.

I quote from page 317 of Mr. Justice Harlan's opinion, where he said:

> But the vital question remains whether a court of equity will, under any circumstances, by injunction, prevent one individual from quitting the personal service of another? An affirmative answer to this question is not, we think, justified by any authority to which our attention has been called or of which we are aware. It would be an invasion of one's natural liberty to compel him to work for or to remain in the personal service of another. One who is placed under such restraint is in a condition of involuntary servitude, a condition which the supreme law of the land declares shall not exist within the United States or in any place subject to their jurisdiction.

The proposition is to change the law relating to the right to strike, as I have just read it, by declaring that it is a crime for employees to agree together to quit their employment in a body for the purpose of maintaining their side of a dispute with their employers over wages and working conditions. There are two sufficient reasons why a law of this kind should never be passed. One is that it can never be enforced. The other is that if it could be enforced it would mean the degredation of labor and eventually the subversion and destruction of our free institutions.

Consider for a moment what would follow the passage and enforcement of such a law. No one is foolish enough to contend that the principle established by such legislation would be confined to railroad employees. There is no body of labor in all the world less likely to go on a strike than the great railway brotherhoods. Every Senator knows, every man in the country knows, that members of those great organizations would never go out on strike unless there was no way left them to maintain their most cherished and fundamental rights.

Every argument that can be made in favor of applying such a law to the railroad brotherhoods can be made for its application to employees in practically every other business conducted in the country. In the complex organization of society to-day there is scarcely a line of business the cessation of which would not bring hardship and suffering to the public. Any substantial interruption or suspension of the telegraph or the telephone service or mining or the operation of street cars, the manufacture of clothing, or the raising or storing of food products would cause immense hardship to the public.

So that once we admit the principle of this bill into our law it would only be a short time, two or three years at most, until the right of labor in any employment to strike will be destroyed, and I will go further and say until the right of those engaged in production will come under the same control, under the same principle, and farmers will be subject to dictation by the Government as to what and how much public necessity and public demands require that they shall produce.

You are entering upon an uncharted sea in writing a precedent for legislation of this sort into the statute. Laws like this once existed in England and in other countries. They exist to-day in India and among other subject peoples, and we know the methods by which they are, and ever have been, enforced. They are enforced, and ever have been, by the sword and the bayonet, by the destruction of every vestige of free speech, of free assembly, and of free press. The enforcement of such laws has ever brought in their wake poverty and ignorance, indescribable suffering and degradation of the masses, and luxury and power to the few.

But, Mr. President, it is unthinkable that such a law as this can ever be enforced in the United States. There is no body of labor in the United States so uniformly of American stock as the railroad brotherhoods. Their ancestors had fought for centuries and suffered and died by thousands to establish and maintain the right which by a stroke of the pen you propose to take away from them in this bill. You will do well to read the history of the labor movement in England for the last three or four centuries before you try to enforce this sixteenth century law upon the labor of this country.

In 1349–50 England passed various statutes compelling a man "if he has no means of his own" to serve whoever required his services." (23d Edward III.)

A distinguished English historian tells us that—

> The main object of these statutes was "to check the raise in wages consequent upon the great pestilence called the 'black death.'" (Stephens's History of Criminal Law, England, vol. 3, p. 204.)

In 1548 England passed an act which might have been taken as a model for section 30 of the bill. It forbade laborers to "conspire not to make or do their work but at a certain price or rate" under the penalty of losing an ear and of being declared infamous. (2d and 3d Edward VI, ch. 15.)

In 1720 England passed another act declaring all agreements of various laborers "for advancing their wages or for lessening their usual hours of work" to be null and void and imposing a penalty of imprisonment for entering into such an agreement. (7 George I, ch. 13.)

In 1800 England passed a statute which provided imprisonment with hard labor for the workman who "enters into any combination to obtain an advance of wages or lessen or alter the hours of work * * * or who hinders any employer from employing any person as he thinks proper, or who, being hired, refuses without any just or reasonable cause to work with any other journeyman or workman employed or hired to work." (40 George III, ch. 60.)

If there had been real merit in any legislation prohibiting strikes, surely it would have manifested itself during the years covered by these antistrike laws in Great Britain; but everyone who is familiar with the labor movement of England knows that the men struck in spite of the statutes and because of the statutes, and finally not only forced their repeal, but in 1906 caused the adoption of the trades-dispute act, whereby combinations and agreements among laborers in furtherance of a trade dispute are made legal and the parties thereto are specifically exempted from prosecution. Instead of our learning anything from the history of the world, we are going back to fifteenth and sixteenth century legislation and forgetting all that has happened in the long struggle in England in the meantime. Here is the more recent legislation which has been worked out by the processes of evolution from just exactly such provisions as have been written into the pending bill. It took two or three centuries to do it, but we ought not, with the enlightenment of this country and our advanced civilization, to put aside that history. We ought to learn something and take some advantage from the experience of the world in dealing with these matters.

Section 5, subdivision 3, of the act passed in 1906, provides:

> An act done by a person in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute shall not be actionable on the ground that it induces some other person to break a contract of employment or that it is an interference with the trade, business, or employment of some other person or with the right of some other person to dispose of his capital or his labor as he wills.

The same section gives the following definition of a trade dispute:

> The expression "trade dispute" means any dispute between employers and workmen or between workmen and workmen, which is connected with the employment or nonemployment or the terms of employment, or with the conditions of labor of any person; and the expression "workmen" means all persons employed in trade or industry, whether or not in the employment of the employer with whom a trade dispute arises.

Speaking of this statute in a case brought under it, the court said:

> It is plain that the main object of the act was to put trade-unions in a peculiar and preferential position and to treat trade disputes differently from all other disputes. Thus section 1 altered the law of conspiracy—or, rather, I should say, repeals the law of conspiracy—where there is a trade dispute, but leaves it intact in every other case. Section 2 sanctions peaceful picketing where there is a trade dispute. Section 3 was probably intended as a rider to section 1. It alters the established common-law liability of an individual apart from conspiracy, not generally, but only where there is a trade dispute, either in contemplation or in existence. (Conway v. Wade, L. R. King's Bench Division, 1908, Vol. II, p. 844.)

Mr. President, it is my information that the statesmanship of England long ago recognized the wisdom of fostering labor organizations and that their legislation has been so shaped and formed and their policy has been so directed as to encourage the organization of all labor into unions, so that the Government in dealing with labor has a responsible organization, with a responsible representative, with whom it can communicate and with whom it can discuss the problems of labor. It may be that it is the law of human institutions that we are to take nothing out of the experience of the enlightened nations of the world in handling these problems, but that we too must beat over the hard, rough ground, hew out through the jungle a course for ourselves, and that we can not chart that course and guide our feet by the light of the experience of a great Government like Great Britain. If we profit by the experience of other nations we shall reverse the policy that seems to be taking possession, especially since the war period, of the Congress of the United States and the administration of this Government in its attitude toward labor and labor unions.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRONNA in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. KING. Without expressing any opinion as to the wisdom and propriety of the antistrike provisions of the pending measure, I should be very glad if the Senator from Wisconsin would give his views with respect to the question of providing for or the duty of Congress in this bill or of State legislatures, in dealing with purely State matters, providing——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. With purely State matters?

Mr. KING. With purely State matters, that is, controversies between labor in the States in contradistinction to interstate matters—as to the wisdom of providing legislation that will, if humanly possible, without abrogating the liberties of individuals, prevent strikes.

It seems to me such a waste of resources, such a waste of time, such a destructive policy to have strikes in our industrial system, that if there is any human way possible to avoid strikes that way ought to be followed. If we can do it by legislation—and I should be glad to get the Senator's view as to that—we ought to enact such legislation. If it may not be done, if we are to go on in this, I was going to say revolutionary way—and it is revolution, in a way—of striking, interrupting the processes of production, we must expect that there will in time be a diminution of productivity, an interruption of the orderly processes of government, and certainly an interruption of the transportation system.

It is a very difficult problem, I concede, to deal with, but, if the Senator from Wisconsin is opposed to the strike provision of the pending bill, what remedy does he offer to deal with this question, particularly as to the great corporations engaged as carriers, whose work is so vitally connected with the welfare of the people?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I quite agree with the view of the Senator from Utah that the strike is a terrible thing; it is wasteful; it is tragic. I think we ought, if possible, to work out a solution that would bring on such a condition of equilibrium, such a reign of absolute social justice, as would remove all occasion for strikes. I think that is the remedy; not the application of force at the point where you get the natural and inevitable result of something that has gone before.

But, Mr. President, to outline a remedy for strikes along the line I have suggested to my friend from Utah I would want to take considerable time. I have a very definite notion as to what is the real cause of all this tremendous and menacing disturbance that has been making our social order fairly quake under our feet. I think you have to go back a period of about 20 years to find the source of the trouble and that you have to treat it from its source, or all your treatment is not only a waste but is an aggravation of the trouble, of the disease that has fastened itself upon our business, political, and social life.

So I must say to the Senator—and I feel somewhat flattered to know that the Senator would care to hear from me an expression of opinion upon the subject—that I expect in connection with matters that are coming up, not in relation to this bill but matters that are coming up very shortly before the Senate, to take some time in discussing that question. I do not believe, let me say in conclusion—and I want to go on and complete what I have to say upon this bill, if possible, to-day and at as early a time to-day as I can—I do not believe that we can treat any of the disorders resulting in strikes and other menacing conditions which we see here and there over our whole country from ocean to ocean—criticism of government, denunciation of the acts of Congress, complaint about economic conditions, protest against the growing cost of living which the people of the country can not understand and for which they can not find any justification—I do not believe that we are to find any solution whatever in simply repressing all criticism of existing conditions. I think we have got to hunt back along the trail of the trouble and find the cause of it and treat the cause; in other words, we have got to go to the root of the matter, and we can not do it by prescribing a drastic treatment of the surface manifestations of the disease which is deep-rooted and of long standing.

Our Clayton Act, in section 20, was evidently intended to adopt the principle of the English statute. We had, as I think, a flash of enlightenment, of real, progressive, democratic enlightenment, in dealing with labor when we enacted the Clayton Act.

In this connection I call attention to what is taking place in England to-day. The press of this country under date of November 17, 1919, carried the following news dispatch from London under date of November 16:

[Associated Press.]

LONDON, November 16.

James Henry Thomas, general secretary of the National Union of Railway Men, in a special at Bristol to-day, outlined the plan of the Government to give the men representation on a joint board of management, and expressed the hope that the arrangement would be accepted.

The Government proposed, Mr. Thomas said, that the railways be managed by a joint committee of executives on which the workers would have three representatives, with powers equal to those of the general managers.

The plan also would create a joint board, composed of five general managers of railways and five delegates of the locomotive men and the National Union of Railway Men, to negotiate all matters concerning conditions of service. Any dispute arising would be referred to another body of 12, comprising 4 representatives of the railways, 4 appointed by the men, and 4 delegated to look after the interests of the public. One would be a trade-unionist, not connected with the railways, and one would represent the cooperative movement.

Neither body, said Secretary Thomas, could withhold from the men the right to strike, but it was obvious that they would not strike while a matter was under discussion. He would be mad, he added, to suggest that there would be no more strikes, but was convinced the machinery proposed would insure smooth working and improve the men's conditions.

Now, this hasty sketch of English law is instructive. It shows the impossibility of enforcing such legislation even by the most drastic measures. Furthermore, the recent London dispatch which I have read points out the method of dealing with the problem and shows that they are giving the men some substantial control of the conditions of their service.

So far we have been talking about organized labor as distinguished from agricultural labor, but agricultural labor and the farmer everywhere is alive to the danger of permitting the adoption of the principles of this bill. The farmer demanded and obtained exemption from the provisions of the Lever Act; otherwise it would have been unlawful for him to store or hold his grain for a higher price. If you can pass and enforce against labor the antistrike provisions of this bill, with more reason and with less violence to the fundamental rights of men, you can pass and enforce a law forbidding the farmers to combine to hold their products for a better market; you can take from them their right to build their own elevators to store their grain, the right to hold their cotton, because it would restrain or prevent production and transportation and restrict the supply of the necessaries of life.

But even this is not all.

Turn to section 31 of this bill and you will see that it proposes to make it a crime to give so much as a crust of bread or a penny of money to a striking miner or his family, because that would be aiding an unlawful strike. I can not understand how men even contemplate such legislation as this. The danger they have feared of the suspension of transportation and the cessation of mining can all be avoided, not by any such method as is proposed in this bill, but by the simple method of paying the employees decent compensation for their services, and giving them a reasonable control over their conditions of service. It is only a few days ago that the Secretary of the Treasury published a statement that the operators of the coal mines in 1917 made profits from 15 per cent to 100 per cent on what they claimed to be their invested capital; that throughout 1918 their profits ranged from 15 to 300 per cent on invested capital, and that for 1919 their profits are alleged to be less, but the figures are not complete and no estimates are given for this year. These are the gentlemen who are really responsible for the coal shortage of the country, not the men who are seeking only a wage sufficient for the necessaries of life. Suppose they do give up a little of their swollen profits in an increased wage, who will suffer by it? I do not know whether the average wage of the miners is $1,000 or $1,100 a year; I believe it is something like that; but I know that it is insufficient for them to live on and maintain their families in the degree of comfort they ought to have, and their wages would not be sufficient for that purpose even if they were given the increase which they asked for.

There was a short and simple remedy, Senators, for the strike. The Government should have taken possession of the mines, called the miners back to work, and paid them the increased pittance of a few cents a day recommended by the Secretary of Labor, and it would have been a better way to solve it than to drive them back under the threat of their being jailed if they did not go.

You do not cure any of the differences, you do not remove the menace, when you force men to work on penalty of imprisonment. One of the great values of the strike is to call the attention of the public in an impressive manner to the dangerous conditions from which the strikers suffer. The strikers and their families always suffer more as a result of a strike——

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes.

Mr. KING. I dislike to interrupt the Senator, but I am afraid that recent events have demonstrated that some of the strikes which have been called in contravention of the wishes of the leaders of the union organizations have not been called for the purpose of securing wages which were fair, because they were getting fair wages, but were called for the purpose of forcing a change in the economic and industrial system of our Government. I know that the I. W. W. have advocated and are advocating strikes, and still more strikes, regardless of the question of wages or wage conditions or labor conditions; that if you should give them a higher wage to-day, all that they demand, in fact more than the business would justify, they would strike to-morrow, because they purpose overthrowing our form of government and converting this Nation into a communistic or bolshevistic government. I think that ought to be said with respect to some of the strikes that are called in these days.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. What strike, particularly, has the Senator in mind as being brought on with a view of changing the form of government and establishing bolshevism in this country?

Mr. KING. I do not know that I had any particular one in mind when I made that observation. I had in mind the several strikes in New York that were called over the protests of the labor leaders. One was the typographical strike. One was the longshoremen's strike.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. But the Senator understands that the labor leaders are not the men who control the question of whether or not a strike shall be had in any labor organization.

Mr. KING. Oh, I appreciate that fact.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator knows that a labor organization is intended to be a little democracy, and all of the decisive and important acts of the labor organization must come from the membership itself, and that should be so. I am sure the Senator will agree that it should not be an oligarchic sort of an institution, with control from the top down.

Mr. KING. Oh, absolutely.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. But I do not know of any strike that has been brought on in this country excepting it had to do with wages or working conditions of the laboring men.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator will agree with me that the I. W. W.'s have announced over and over again that their purpose was to strike, and if they secured the increase to strike again. Mr. St. John and others who have written for them have said so; indeed, their literature is filled with declarations of that character. It is not a question of the amount of wages. The purpose is to destroy the wage system and to destroy unionism; and many of these people have denounced the trade-unions as bitterly as the most reactionary capitalist has denounced them.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; but surely, Mr. President, in dealing with this labor problem, the Congress of the United States is going to make its laws with reference to the great body of the labor of this country.

There are 4,040,000 wage earners in this country organized into unions and affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

The railway employees, organized in 14 brotherhoods, number 2,000,000 men. These brotherhoods have been maintained many years.

There are also a large number of railway employees who have formed new organizations within the last two years.

There is no class of our citizenship more loyal to the principles of democracy as interpreted by Abraham Lincoln than the wage earners of the United States.

Take the railroad brotherhoods, and they are almost all of them native Americans, practically to a man, between two and a half and three million of them, the finest type of men that you can find anywhere, I think, in this country. That service calls for men of that character, calls for men of courage, and men of sincerity and purpose, men of integrity, of character, and the safety of the public and the stability of business in this country depend on keeping that same high grade of men employed in the transportation industry.

Sir, instead of doing anything to humiliate them, instead of doing anything that shall press them back toward serfdom, it ought to be the purpose of Congress to throw around them all the safeguards possible in order that you should retain in that employment men of the highest type of manhood and the greatest independence of character.

It seems to me that Congress, since the war particularly, has been driving blindly in the wrong direction. I do not know whether it is the effect of the war or what it is, but whenever there is criticism of government, wherever there is complaint of the hard, oppressive economic conditions felt in every American home, it is seized upon by reactionaries in Congress and out and distorted into an attempt to overthrow government. And Senators here from day to day advocate the suppression of all criticism by force. We have come out of an era of force, and it is assumed we must use force on everybody in order to preserve government. It is suggested that Congress write laws on the statute books that shall cripple and destroy the spirit of true democracy in this country in order to silence all criticism of government. There are no strikes in this country for the purpose of overturning this Government or for the purpose of changing our social order. There is not a strike in the United States that did not originate in a reasonable demand for better wages and better working conditions. Do you think it strange that we should have had those come now upon us, and have had so many of them, when you have this enormous increase in the cost of living? And, mark you, in connection with this coal strike, they have been figuring the advance in the cost of living since 1917—as to what it is from 1917 down to now. But do you not know—you must know—that the cost of living has been steadily increasing for 20 years in this country? It ought to have gone down every year. There was every reason for it to go down. But trusts and combinations have acquired such a control of markets and prices on all the necessaries of life that it has been possible for them to increase prices at will. As the prices began to go up, naturally you had a demand on the part of labor for more wages.

And wages, always trailing a long way behind the increased cost of living, began to be raised about 20 years ago, but the cost of living was at all times far in advance of the increase in wages.

The ablest statistical authority in this country has recently investigated the increase in wages covering the period from 1900 to 1912, inclusive, and carried with it, side by side, a scientific investigation of the increase in the cost of living. The result of that investigation established the fact that the increase in wages was more than offset by the increase in the cost of living, so that there was really a decrease in wages of from 10 to 15 per cent for the 12-year period.

And I undertake to say that the cost of living since 1913 has exceeded by more than 30 per cent the advance in wages for the last six years.

So, Mr. President, I say that we ought to approach the consideration of the disturbances and the complaints and the demands of people who have limited incomes and who are dependent largely upon their weekly wages, in view of all that they have suffered in the last 18 years, with a pretty liberal spirit; and instead of saying to them when they strike that a machine gun is the answer, and that "You are going back to work because we need the product that you produce; whether you like conditions or not, you are to go back," I venture to say that we will better serve our country and exhibit a broader and higher statesmanship if we will approach these problems in a somewhat different spirit than has been manifested by Congress since the close of the World War.

In connection with what I have been saying, may I put before Senators this idea: Of course there has been some increase in the wages of these railway employees, and I know there is a prevailing sentiment over the country that railroad employees are the artistocrats of labor that they are very well paid. I think the public is likely to overlook a good many things with respect to that which it is well to remind them of. In the first place, the hazards of this business are very great. Railway employees have themselves to carry the burden of a tremendously heavy insurance charge, and take it out of their wages. It is difficult, if not impossible, for them to make good terms with the old-line life insurance companies. They can not afford to do it, their business is so hazardous. We slaughter these railroad employees at a tremendously rapid rate.

I am going to give you some figures. I am also going to show you, Senators, if you will be patient with me just a few minutes longer, that under Government operation we have improved that condition, as we have improved pretty nearly every other condition. Before this debate is over, if the question should arise, I want the privilege of laying before the Senate the improvements that have been made under Mr. McAdoo and Mr. Hines in railroading in the public interest. It is simply a wonderful thing.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I am very much interested in what the Senator states and I want to ask him, for my own information only, whether the estimate which was made as to the scale of wages complying with the high cost of living included the difference in hours of labor or not? Does the Senator know?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; it covered everything that could enter into the problem in order to make a thoroughgoing scientific summing up of the whole situation. I shall be glad to refer the Senator to the authorities.

I just want to call attention to one thing that we sometimes forget in considering the increase in wages, for instance, of engineers, conductors, and trainmen particularly. Did you ever stop to think that one train crew earns vastly more for a railroad company to-day than it did 20 years ago? Let me give you the figures.

With the increased size of the engines and length of trains and the improved devices for handling freight, labor costs the railroad less now, even though they pay more wages, than it did 20 years ago.

The labor cost for an engineer per ton-mile unit was one and six-sevenths times greater in 1890 than in 1913. You would hardly believe that, but you had small engines, you had freight cars that would hold only 18 or 20 tons, and a trainload then was not comparable to a trainload now. In the railroad business the volume of traffic and the ability to handle it rapidly and to handle it with the same amount of labor is a great source of revenue. So that labor to-day is earning vastly more for the railroad companies than it ever earned before. I have on my desk here the increase year by year in the train haul, the increase year by year in the load that is put into each freight car, the increase year by year in the capacity of the engines——

Mr. FLETCHER. I wish to ask the Senator if he can inform us as to the increase in the number of employees?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes. I have all those tables prepared, and will submit them to the Senate before the debate upon this bill is concluded.

I will just say in conclusion on the subject of strikes that the strikers and their families always suffer more as a result of the strike than the general public. I think we ought to remember that the railroad employees of the country, together with their families, represent about 10,000,000 of our population. They have their homes, they have their children and their wives. They will never engage in any strike unless they are driven to it by conditions that ought to be adjusted even at the expense of the great disturbance that results from a strike, because they are in a worse position than the rest of the public. Talk about the starvation and the hardship that are to result from the strike! Their resources stop when they strike, their wages are at an end. They have to live off of the accumulation of their earnings, which will be wasted rapidly when they cease to earn, and these stable, steadfast, intelligent American citizens are not going to project upon the country a strike and bring upon their own families all of the suffering and hardship that would result from a general railroad strike unless the evil is so great that it can not be endured.

There is no danger of a strike unless the condition of the worker is intolerable. Insure to the laborer a decent wage for his service and reasonable control of the conditions under which he works and we will have no more strikes. So long as this simple measure of justice is denied to the workman we will continue to have strikes and we ought to have them.

V. CONTINUATION OF GOVERNMENT OPERATION.

My proposition is a simple one. I would continue Government operation of the railroads for some definite period long enough to give the country a complete demonstration of the success or failure of the system. After an intimate experience covering a good many years of attempted railroad regulation, I am convinced that it is impossible to properly regulate privately owned and controlled railroads. I believe that our Government should own and operate our railroads just as they are owned and successfully operated in many of the leading countries of the world to-day. But whether I believe in Government ownership or not, I should favor an extension of the present Government operation for some years to come. No one can fairly claim that our experience with the railroads during the two years of operation under our war conditions is any test whatever of Government operation. We are in a fortunate position at the present time to go forward and make a thorough test of Government operation. We need only to pass a short and simple act providing that Government operation shall be continued for such definite period as we might agree upon. Let a commission be appointed to make a careful study of the results of operation of the railroads under Government operation as well as under private operation. By the time we are ready to legislate upon the subject intelligently the valuation of the railroads will have been completed, and we can then intelligently frame the necessary legislation either for taking over the roads permanently or returning them to private ownership.

It will be recalled that the President in his message to Congress just prior to leaving for Europe to frame the league of nations stated that he had no opinion of his own respecting the settlement of the railroad question in this country, and I think there can be little doubt that a measure such as I suggest for extending Government control for a definite period would meet his approval. His thought has been, as I read and interpret his messages, that it was important to have the question settled promptly whether the railroads were going on for some definite period under Government control or whether they were going to be returned to private hands. If it should be settled that the Government is to continue the operation of the railroads for the next few years all uncertainty would be ended. Plans for equipment and extension and betterment could go forward and there would be no interruption or disturbance of business conditions whatever.

The alternative of that course is the adoption of some hasty, insufficiently considered legislation concerning which neither the Congress nor the people are informed. It may be that the course I suggest would lead ultimately to Government ownership. If it did, it would be because Government operation proved a success.

I listened attentively to such testimony as was produced before the Interstate Commerce Committee; I have listened attentively to the debate, so far as there has been any upon the bill, and I have yet to hear a substantial argument against the course I suggest.

THE RESULTS OF NEARLY TWO YEARS OF GOVERNMENT OPERATION.

I hold no brief for the former or present Director General of Railroads, but I have no patience with the attempt to belittle and misrepresent the great work that has been accomplished in the transportation service of the country during the two most trying years in all our history. I am aware that it is constantly charged that under Government control wages have been raised and the number of employees increased, thereby greatly increasing the cost of operation. These statements are undoubtedly true, but it has not been shown that the wage increases have been excessive or that the numbers of employees have been unnecessarily increased.

There is undoubtedly very marked difference between the course which will be pursued by the railway executives if the railroads are returned to them and the course which the Government will pursue if the roads continue under Government operation. The railway executives frankly avow their purpose to secure an immediate and large advance in railway rates and charges. Under Government operation we are sure there will be no increase in rates or charges, and it is hoped that even a reduction will be made therein. If Government operation continues there will be no attempt to reduce wages. If the roads are returned to private hands such an attempt, it is probable, will almost immediately follow.

Considerable interesting testimony was given on this subject before the Senate committee. Mr. Cuyler, from whom I have previously quoted on this subject, testified as follows:

Senator TOWNSEND. What would be the effect if you had charge of the roads and attempted to reduce wages?

Mr. CUYLER. Senator, I think it would be a bold man who would answer the question. I come from the quiet town of Philadelphia and I do not want to get into trouble.

Senator GORE. Do you think if the Government owned the roads it would ever reduce the wages?

Mr. CUYLER. I do not think it would.

Senator TOWNSEND. If the Government should continue to control the railroads, it is almost certain that wages would not be lowered, is it not?

Mr. CUYLER. I believe so. I may say that I am, perhaps, not an unbiased witness on that subject, because I am so strong in my feeling that the railroads ought to be permitted to conduct their business the same as any other line of business in that respect.

Note now the testimony of Mr. McAdoo. I quote from his testimony:

Senator CUMMINS. What effect do you think it would have upon the railroads if you were to dismiss them from Government operation on the 1st of March?

Director General McADOO. They would be in a great deal better condition and in a better situation than they were on the 1st of March, 1917—infinitely better.

Senator CUMMINS. Physically or financially?

Director General McADOO. Physically and financially.

Senator GORE. You mean 1918, do you not?

Director General McADOO. I mean 1917 or 1918. In the first place, their properties have been kept up and their motive power and equipment are in much better condition, and they have not been scrambled. There is not a single railroad in the United States to-day the integrity of whose property has not been preserved. While the wages of labor and working conditions have been properly improved and defined, they are now enjoying rates sufficient to meet those wage increases and to maintain those conditions, and I think adequate rates ought to be preserved. We put wages and rates on a fair basis, I think. In addition to that, they will have had the benefit of a great deal of financing done by the Federal Government for their account. Of course, the terms of the settlement of these debts that must follow must be eased. The roads are not hurt by having the Federal Government as a creditor for the equipment, etc., that has been supplied.

Senator CUMMINS. Well, let us see about that. Let us analyze that a moment. As far as wages are concerned, it is not probable that they would be decreased.

Director General McADOO. I should think they would not be.

Senator CUMMINS. Or lessened?

Director General McADOO. I should think they would not be. I think they should not be.

I will merely quote a paragraph now from the testimony of Mr. Coyle, president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Station Employees. In response to a question by a member of the committee whether if it were assumed that the employees wages under private operation would be as satisfactory as under Government operation, that would remove the feeling of preference that the employees had for Government operation, Mr. Coyle testified:

Why, that would have a tendency to do that, but the great talk of a great many railroad officials—not all of them, but a great many of them—has been—and, of course, it has its effect on the employees—"What do you think you are going to receive after the Government gives these railroads up?" And that naturally has the men in a turmoil, more or less, as to how soon that is going to be; and we believe that as long as these plans are being considered it would be well for the employees if they knew that for a definite period at least they would be able to earn enough to enable them and their families to get along in a fairly decent way.

Here is the crux of the matter: Continue Government operation with no decrease in wages and no increase in rates, or go to private control and decrease the wages and increase the rates.

Now, sir, there has been a great deal said with regard to the expense of Government operation. I touched upon that matter a little in the minority report which I filed and showed that the monthly deficit, of which so much was made by the critics of Government operation, had already been turned into a monthly profit from the operation of the railroads, and that the Government, far from losing money on them, was now making money.

On page 7 of that report I gave a table showing the net gain and loss from the operation of the railroads for the last five months. At the time that report was prepared the figures for October were not available. They have since been procured and show a net gain from Government operation for the month of October of $11,000,000. Had it not been for the steel strike I am convinced that the gain would have been many millions greater. The result of the last six months of Government operation, therefore, stands as follows:

Month.	Net gain.	Net loss.
May		$37,642,128
June		26,031,860
July		2,031,547
August	$12,397,112
September	19,000,000
October	11,000,000

In other words, the proposition of the gentlemen who demand the return of the railroads at the present time is that the Government, having operated the roads during the period of the war and borne the losses, shall now turn them back at a time when we are reaching something like a settled condition and when it is realizing a profit from their operation.

There is one other phase of Government operation too little considered, but to which I wish briefly to call attention, and that is the work which has been done under Government operation to promote the safety of the employees and the public. Accident Bulletin No. 66 of the Interstate Commerce Commission, on page 11, shows that the total casualties to passengers, employees, and the public resulting from the railroad service for the year ending December 31, 1916, was:

Deaths	10,001
Injured	196,722

For the year ending December 31, 1917:

Deaths	10,087
Injured	194,805

The figures for the year ending December 31, 1918, are

Deaths	9,286
Injured	174,575

Shortly after the Government took control of the roads it made a survey of the field of accidents resulting from train operation, and organized a department to minimize such accidents as far as possible, with A. F. Duffy at the head of the department. This bureau did not get into operation until the latter part of 1918, but the result of the work that they were able to do in the last two or three months of that year is reflected in the substantial decrease of deaths and injuries even for 1918. The result of the work of this department for 1919, as far as the figures are available, is remarkable. Official bulletins issued show that the decrease for the first seven months of the year in employees killed was 774, and in employees injured was 20,447. The decrease in the total of deaths, including employees and the public for the same period, was 1,389 killed and 22,106 injured. It is estimated by the officials connected with the work of this department that the deaths and injuries from railroad operation can easily be decreased by at least one-half. Where was the mark of efficiency during all the years of private operation when it let this useless slaughter of its employees and the public proceed unchecked?

The figures that I have given do not by any means reflect the full benefit to the public and the employees which will accrue from this single department of the public service. It must be remembered that during the time covered by these figures millions of soldiers were moved, the train schedules were disarranged, and there is no reason to doubt when conditions become completely normal the deaths and accidents resulting from the operation of trains under private management will be reduced much more than one-half if Government control is continued. Of course this kind of work costs money, and so it was neglected under private management, and will be again neglected just as soon as the roads are permitted to go back to private hands, where they will be run for the dollars they will make for their owners without regard to saving the lives of the public or the employees.

Mr. President, I shall have occasion as the bill is further considered to bring to the attention of the Senate some other matters which I consider of much importance to the issue raised by this proposed legislation, and, sir, I shall feel at liberty to do so as the consideration of the bill goes forward, but for the present I will content myself with what I have said.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, at the conclusion of a brief explanation which I desire to make in connection with a resolution which I am about to offer, I shall ask unanimous consent to present the resolution out of order and have it referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

I have reached the conclusion that there is quite a propaganda going on at the present time in the country in reference to the pending railroad bill. While I am not complaining of that, and while I fully concede that all citizens or any group of citizens interested either for or against this or any other legislation have a perfect right to pursue any honorable means to advance their ideas and have them placed on the statute books if possible, I think when such a propaganda is apparent that the people ought to know just what is being done, how it is being done, and, if possible, what it costs. If we are to be influenced by evidence we ought to know its source and know whether those who produce it have any prejudice or bias in its production. I am offering the resolution and saying what little I shall say in connection with its presentation in that kind of a spirit.

I repeat, I am not complaining that the propaganda to which I shall call attention is wrong or that it is illegal, but I do believe there is a propaganda of considerable extent to bring about the passage of this bill, and I think the people of the country ought to know, if possible, who is behind it, who is interested in it, and what it is costing.

I have here, Mr. President, a copy of what purports to be an advertisement, which is headed as follows:

To the American people:

It is the declared purpose of the United States Government to restore the railroads at an early date to the control of their owners.

The Association of Railway Executives represents those upon whom at that time responsibility will again rest for the prompt and successful movement of the country's commerce.

Those constituting this association are keenly conscious of their accountability to the public.

They have accordingly determined to present as fully as they can the fundamental facts and considerations which they themselves must face in their efforts to provide satisfactory railroad service.

It is hoped to engage the interest of the whole American people, whose welfare is so vitally dependent upon adequate transportation.

The country can grow only as the railroads grow. The railroad problem must be solved—and solved rightly and soon—if our country is to prosper.

It is to promote that prosperity—permanently and in the interest of the whole people—that railroad executives will present to the public the situation as they see it.

Mr. President, I think that is a fair and an honorable statement, and I am not finding fault with what is said; I do not want anyone to get that idea. I think, however, that the propaganda will go much further, and that its indirect influences will be much greater than as outlined by the plan suggested in the paper which I have read. This statement I have read is signed by 80 or 90 heads of railroad corporations, their attorneys, chairmen of boards of directors, and so forth. I will not stop to read the signatures, but I ask that the signatures be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts in the chair). Without objection, the request of the Senator from Nebraska will be complied with.

The names appended to the paper are as follows:

ASSOCIATION OF RAILWAY EXECUTIVES.
(Thomas De Witt Cuyler, chairman.)

Alfred P. Thom, general counsel; Frank Andrews, chairman board of directors, Gulf Coast Lines; J. A. Baker, receiver, International & Great Northern Railway Co.; A. R. Baldwin, receiver, Denver & Rio Grande Railroad Co.; W. H. Beardsley, president Florida East Coast Railway Co.; W. G. Besler, president and general manager Central Railroad Co. of New Jersey; S. T. Bledsoe, general counsel, Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Co.; W. G. Brantley, president and general counsel Atlanta, Birmingham & Atlantic Railway Co.; Harry Bronner, president Missouri Pacific Railroad Co.; E. N. Brown, president and chairman Pere Marquette Railway Co., St. Louis-San Francisco Railway Co.; William Buchanan, president Louisiana & Arkansas Railway Co.; E. G. Buckland, president Central New England Railway Co., Rutland Railroad Co., president and general counsel New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co.; Ralph Budd, president Great Northern Railway Co.; H. E. Byram, president Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co.; M. J. Carpenter, president Chicago, Terre Haute & Southern Railway Co.; James T. Clark, president Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha Railway Co.; W. A. Clark, president Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Co.; W. R. Cole, president Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway Co.; Walter P. Cooke, president and general counsel New Orleans Great Northern Railroad Co.; E. R. Darlow, president Buffalo & Susquehanna Railroad Corporation; A. T. Dice, president Philadelphia & Reading Railway Co.; W. M. Duncan, president Wheeling & Lake Erie Railway Co.; Howard Elliott, president Northern Pacific Railway Co.; Newman Erb, president Ann Arbor Railroad Co.; S. M. Felton, president Chicago Great Western Railroad Co.; W. H. Finley, president Chicago & North Western Railway Co.; W. R. Freeman, receiver, Denver & Salt Lake Railroad Co.; Carl M. Gage, president Huntingdon & Broad Top Mountain Railroad & Coal Co.; S. R. Guggenheim, president Nevada Northern Railway Co.; Carl R. Gray, president Western Maryland Railway Co.; John H. Hammond, acting president Bangor & Aroostook Railroad Co.; Charles Hayden, president Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway Co., chairman of board, Minneapolis & St. Louis Railroad Co.; Thomas D. Heed, receiver, Chicago & Eastern Illinois Railroad Co.; J. M. Herbert, president St. Louis Southwestern Railway Co.; C. W. Huntington, president Virginian Railway Co.; J. H. Hustis, temporary receiver, Boston & Maine Railroad Co.; C. E. Ingersoll, president Midland Valley Railroad Co.; L. E. Johnson, president Norfolk & Western Railway Co.; Larz A. Jones, president Alabama & Vicksburg Railway Co., Vicksburg, Shreveport & Pacific Railway Co.; Morgan Jones, president Abilene & Southern Railway; Howard G. Kelley, president Grand Trunk Railway System; William T. Kemper, receiver, the Kansas City, Mexico & Orient Railroad Co.; J. R. Kenly, president Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Co.; John B. Kerr, president New York, Ontario & Western Railway Co.; Julius Kruttschnitt, president and chairman of executive committee, Southern Pacific Co.; H. R. Kurrie, president Chicago, Indianapolis & Louisville Railway Co.; A. R. Lawton, president Central of Georgia Railway Co.; C. M. Levey, president Western Pacific Railroad Co.; E. E. Loomis, president Lehigh Valley Railroad Co.; L. F. Loree, president Delaware & Hudson Co., Kansas City Southern Railway Co.; Robert S. Lovett, president Union Pacific Railroad Co.; Morris McDonald, president Maine Central Railroad Co.; C. H. Markham, president Illinois Central Railroad Co.; N. S. Meldrum, president and chairman Texas & Pacific Railway Co.; J. L. Nesbit, general agent, Georgia, Florida & Alabama Railway Co.; William T. Noonan, president Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburgh Railway Co.; William C. Osborn, vice president, Detroit, Toledo & Ironton Railroad Co.; A. H. Payson, president, Northwestern Pacific Railroad Co.; C. A. Peabody, chairman executive committee, Illinois Central Railroad Co.; E. Pennington, president Duluth, South Shore & Atlantic Railway Co., Minneapolis, St. Paul & Sault Ste. Marie Railway Co.; C. E. Perkins, president Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Co., Colorado & Southern Railway Co., Fort Worth & Denver City Railway Co.; Mark W. Pottern, president Carolina, Clinchfield & Ohio Railway; Samuel Rea, president Pennsylvania Railroad System; J. H. Reed, president Bessemer & Lake Erie Railroad Co.; E. P. Ripley, president Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Co.; Bird M. Robinson, president American Short Line Railroad Association; W. L. Ross, president and receiver, Toledo, St. Louis & Western Railroad Co.; C. E. Schaff, receiver, Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Co.; T. M. Schumacher, president El Paso & Southwestern System; A. H. Smith, president New York Central Lines; E. C. Smith, president Central Vermont Railway Co.; Milton H. Smith, president Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co.; W. T. Stewart, vice president, Gulf & Ship Island Railroad Co.; R. H. Swartout, president Norfolk Southern Railroad Co.; I. B. Tigrett, president Gulf, Mobile & Northern Railroad Co.; W. H. Truesdale, president Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co.; Frank Trumbull, president and chairman of board, Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Co., Hocking Valley Railway Co.; F. D. Underwood, president Erie Railroad Co.; O. P. Van Sweringen, president New York, Chicago & St. Louis Railroad Co.; Roberts Walker, president Chicago & Alton Railroad Co.; Henry Walters, chairman of board, Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Co.; Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co.; William H. White, president Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad Co., Washington Southern Railway Co.; Charles A. Wickersham, president Atlanta & West Point Railroad Co., Western Railroad of Alabama; Daniel Willard, president Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co.; W. H. Williams, president Wabash Railway Co.; B. A. Worthington, president Cincinnati, Indianapolis & Western Railroad Co.

Mr. OVERMAN. What is the paper from which the Senator has read?

Mr. NORRIS. I have read everything that is on it except the signatures, and the Senator can judge for himself as to what it is. I take it that it is an advertisement that is going into the newspapers of the country.

Mr. President, I have here, under a New York date line, an article by a newspaper writer which, I presume, has been printed in a large number of papers all over the country, calling attention to this propaganda. It is written by Mr. Frederick M. Kirby. It is as follows:

The railroads of the United States are about to spend $1,000,000 in six weeks to "educate" the people and the legislative and executive governmental officials of the United States. The purpose of this drive is to inspire legislation favorable to the private operation and railroad owners. The million will be spent before the end of December—the date fixed by President Wilson for the return of the roads. It is doubtful whether the necessary legislation will be enacted by that time.

The move is backed by the Association of Railroad Executives—of which De Witt Cuyler is chairman and Frank Fayant is assistant to the chairman. The offices of the organization is at 61 Broadway. The appropriation is being distributed through several advertising agencies. The contracts are cancelable; that is, they can be withdrawn at the pleasure of the agencies placing them.

The article that I have just read is signed by the railroad executives—

"The purpose of this advertising campaign is to influence the public to demand proper legislation throughout the United States on the railroads' needs," said one of the men responsible for the campaign. "It will set before the public the facts in the railroad situation and urge measures essential to the welfare and safety of the roads under private ownership."

Magazines, newspapers, and every kind of periodical publication are to be used.

In size and scope this tremendous campaign of publicity has been equaled only by the advertising which the Chicago packers published while they were being investigated by the Federal Trade Commission.

I have other newspaper articles to the same effect, which I will not read; but I want to call attention to an advertisement appearing in the New York Sun of December 10, from which it will be seen that the propaganda is not confined to the railroad executive or to the security holders, but that other friendly financial institutions are going to the trouble of placing advertisements in newspapers to bring about legislation. This is on page 2 of the issue of the Sun of December 10, and says in big type:

DANGER TO OWNERS OF RAILROAD SECURITIES!

You should realize that it rests with Congress whether your railroad securities will be made valueless or whether you will have a reasonable return upon your investment.

This is no time for you to ignore the situation or expect others to protect your interest; you should write at once to your Congressman and Senators at Washington, D. C., demanding that the railroads shall not be turned back to their owners on any unfair basis.

Act at once and act vigorously! The time is short.

If you don't act you may lose the value of your investment.

NATIONAL SURETY CO.,
World's Largest Surety Company, 115 Broadway.

I want to read, as calling attention to this propaganda, part of the resolutions adopted at Chicago on November 21 and 22, 1919, by a conference of farmer and labor delegates that was held on those dates in Chicago. One of the resolutions reads as follows: There are resolutions on various subjects, and I am reading only what applies to this particular subject, and not all of what applies to this:

We are reliably informed that the railway security holders have organized an advertising propaganda campaign through the press, to cost over $10,000,000, to secure the enactment by Congress of legislation to put into effect these security holders' plan for the return of the railroads.

This plan involves a Government subsidy to railroad security holders, through congressional instruction to the Interstate Commerce Commission to fix rates which will yield at least 6 per cent upon the present capitalization of the railroads, which includes at least $7,000,000,000 of watered stock. The plan will increase the cost of living by about $4,000,000,000, based upon the increase of freight charges of about $1,000,000,000.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. In just a moment I shall be glad to yield to the Senator. Let me finish this:

The efforts of the railroad security holders to buy the press of the country, democracy's last line of defense, is the most un-American act recorded in our Nation's history.

I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. I simply desired to ask the Senator what he was reading from.

Mr. NORRIS. I am reading from the resolutions adopted in Chicago at a farmers' and laborers' conference held November 21 and 22, 1919.

Mr. POMERENE. Who offered the resolution?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know who offered it. It was a resolution adopted at that conference. It was a resolution reported by their committee on resolutions and adopted by the conference.

Mr. President, I have here a statement by Mr. Benjamin C. Marsh, who is secretary and director of legislation of the Farmers' National Council, Bliss Building, Washington, D. C., which says:

Wednesday afternoon, December 10, 1919, Mr. Scully, in the office of Thomas F. Logan in the Hibbs Building, showed me a quarter-page copy of an advertisement sent by the Railroad Executive Association urging fair treatment for the railroads. He informed me that the contracts for placing these advertisements were in the hands of Thomas F. Logan & Co. (Inc.), 680 Fifth Avenue, New York City, and that if I desired to get any advertisements for the Farmers' Open Forum I should communicate with that agency and ask for a copy of the advertisement.

Mr. Scully informed me that the Railroad Executive Association was planning to spend hundreds of thousands of dollars, and perhaps millions of dollars, in this advertising, which he said was to educate the people of America on the railroad situation.

Thursday morning, December 11, 1919, Mr. Harry B. Hunt, of the Newspaper Enterprise Association, office in the Munsey Building, Washington, telephoned me that in reply to a wire of inquiry to the advertising department of the Newspaper Enterprise Association he had received a wire that the contracts for these advertisements of the Railroad Executive Association had been signed between the Thomas F. Logan & Co. and the Newspaper Enterprise Association, but that they had not yet received copy of their advertisements.

Mr. President, in a copy of the magazine called "The Editor and Publisher," of November 27, 1919, there is a page—page 29—headed "Tips for the advertising manager," and it proceeds to give the names of the various advertising agencies for the benefit of the newspaper fraternity, in order, I presume, that they may communicate with them if they desire to enter into contracts for advertising along the lines indicated; and among those addresses and names of people who are taking advertising for various kinds of things is one that reads as follows:

Thomas F. Logan, 680 Fifth Avenue, New York. Making 5,000 1-inch contracts generally for Association of Railway Executives.

So I take it that there can be no doubt that Thomas F. Logan is going to be the advertising medium through which this propaganda, at least on the part of the executives, is going to be given to the people; and in that respect it might be interesting for the Senate and the country to know who Thomas F. Logan is.

In an investigation conducted by the Senate Agricultural Committee about a year ago—I do not remember the date—running over several weeks, when they were investigating the packers, it was disclosed that Thomas F. Logan was at that time getting $500 a month from Swift & Co., packers of Chicago; $500 a month from the Standard Oil Co of New Jersey; $500 a month from the Standard Oil Co. of Indiana, $700 a month from the Atlantic Refining Co.; $500 a month from the Freeport Sulphur Co.; and $500 a month from the General Electric Co.; that he was at that time the Washington correspondent of the Philadelphia Inquirer, an editorial writer on Leslie's Magazine, an editorial writer on the Wall Street Journal, an editorial writer on the American Economist, an editorial writer on the Fourth Estate, which is a trade publication for newspapers, an editorial writer for Forbes' Magazine, and an editorial writer for the Manufacturers' Record; and he had been just prior to that, although I believe at the time of this investigation he had ceased that connection, an editorial writer on the Washington Post.

An exceedingly interesting fact brought out in that investigation was that while Thomas F. Logan—who was getting, among other things, $500 a month from Swift & Co., and at that time his various salaries and the fact that he was representing all these magazines and newspapers were unknown so far as that committee was aware, that, and by the way, the only one of these activities that the committee investigated was the one in reference to Swift & Co., because we were only investigating the packers at that time—while Thomas F. Logan claimed to be getting this salary from Swift & Co. as an advertising expert, yet in all the investigation, the examination, and the cross-examination, both of Mr. Logan and of all the representatives of Swift & Co. who appeared on the stand, which included Louis F.

Swift himself, they were not able to give to the committee, and did not give to the committee, a single identical instance of an advertisement that he ever wrote or that he ever saw. It was said that he gave advice as to how they should advertise; but they were unable to produce and did not produce a single memorandum of advice that he had ever sent, although his office was in Washington and the office of Swift & Co. was in Chicago.

It was disclosed, however, from the files of Swift & Co., which were brought into evidence by the Federal Trade Commission on their investigation, that various communications passed between Thomas F. Logan and Swift & Co. on other subjects than advertising, giving them information as to conditions of legislation and various other things.

I might say, by way of parenthesis, that when the time comes, if it does come, when the Committee on Agriculture reports to the Senate some legislation that is pending before it in relation to the packers I intend to go into it in more detail. I only refer to it now because it is evident that this same man is going to conduct what is called an advertising propaganda. If it is conducted in the same way that his activities for the packers were handled, there will not be so much advertising as, perhaps, other kind of work.

Mr. President, I want to say again, in conclusion, that the only object I have is to let the public know who is behind this propaganda and who is supplying the money and the funds for carrying it on. I will not find fault with the propaganda and I will not complain about it; but I think it is right, when such a thing is going on, that, first, those who have the responsibility of passing on the legislation should know about it; and the people who are asked to write to us and to influence us in our official action should know what the facts are. I therefore ask unanimous consent, out of order, to offer a Senate resolution, which I will ask the Secretary to read, and then I will ask that it be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 261), as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce be, and it is hereby, instructed to make an investigation for the purpose of ascertaining to what extent there has been organized in the country a propaganda to influence Congress in the passage of S. 3288, a bill further to regulate commerce among the States and with foreign nations, and to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended; and particularly to ascertain the amount of money that has been expended and that it is contemplated to expend for such purpose by the Association of Railway Executives, and to what extent such association or others, representing either the railroads or directly or indirectly representing the security holders, are using the newspapers of the country in an advertising propaganda for the purpose of bringing about the passage of said bill.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have no objection to the resolution. I agree with the Senator from Nebraska that when there is a propaganda in favor of any bill the Senate has the right to know the source of it and the forces which are back of that propaganda. But I go a little further than the Senator from Nebraska in this, that I should like to know the source of the propaganda against this bill, as well as of that for it.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator is a member of the committee to which I have asked that the resolution be referred. I will join with the Senator in any amendment to take in any other propaganda, no matter what it is. I agree with the Senator that we ought to have it all.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I think there has been some propaganda in favor of certain other proposed legislation which probably would have been more satisfactory to the security interests. But when the so-called Plumb plan was presented it was heralded throughout the country that a fund of $4,000,000 was to be raised to defeat this legislation and to promote the so-called Plumb plan and to secure its enactment. I am not denying their right to do that, but it seems to me that fairness to the public requires that there should be an investigation on both sides, so that we may know who it is that is back of a proposition which requires the purchase of all the railroads of the country at the public expense, to be turned over to a certain class of employees.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I agree with the Senator. I do not know of any such propaganda. I have not heard of it. They have not come to me very much about any propaganda, except that which I mentioned. But I will join with the Senator in amending this resolution, or helping to pass any other resolution, if he says there is any other propaganda, either for or against the bill, for parts of it or against parts of it. I would be glad, when it comes before the committee, if the Senator will have it amended so as to include them all.

Mr. POMERENE. I think the Senator and I can have no difference of opinion bearing upon that subject. I recognize the fact that there is a certain propaganda for or against any legislation that comes up before the Senate. I am constantly receiving, as no doubt the Senator is, communications by wire and by letter demanding, in the interest of the public, that I vote either for or against certain legislation, all of which is inspired by lobbies here in the city of Washington. I like to know what is going on, and I like to see the wheels going around when it comes to propaganda either for or against any legislation. It is very interesting. I have no objection to the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. KING. I want to ask the Senator from Nebraska whether the resolution is broad enough to inquire as to the propaganda carried on in favor of the Plumb plan?

Mr. POMERENE. That is just what I called attention to. The resolution calls for an investigation as to certain propaganda in favor of the bill, and I made the suggestion that it ought to include propaganda against the bill as well.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, let me answer the Senator's question. It is not broad enough, but I should be very glad to have it broadened so that it would cover all, as I have already said to the Senator from Ohio. If anyone thinks that any other propaganda in connection with the bill ought to be investigated, I shall be glad to see the resolution amended to that end. It can not be too broad to suit me.

Mr. KING. I have had perhaps many thousands of petitions and statements that demand—I want to emphasize the expression, "demand"—that I shall vote for the Plumb plan. I have had only perhaps 10 or 15 in favor of either the Cummins bill or the Esch bill, so called. There is a very wide and extensive propaganda in favor of the Plumb plan, and, of course, many of the demands I have received are that I shall vote against the Cummins bill or the Esch bill. So, speaking for myself, the only propaganda that I have come in contact with is that in favor of the Plumb plan and propaganda against the Cummins bill and against the Esch bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE AND TREATY OF PEACE.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I see the leader of the Republican Party on the floor, and I want to divert a moment from the matter before the Senate and ask to have read an article that I saw in the Washington Post this morning. I think it is quite illuminating and indicative of the fact that something ought to be done. I ask that the Secretary may read the article.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

CANCEL ORDERS IN UNITED STATES—CRISIS IN EXCHANGE FORCES EUROPE TO STOP BUYING HERE—BANKS URGE RATIFICATION—JOIN BUSINESS HOUSES IN DEMANDING EARLY COMPROMISE BY PRESIDENT AND SENATE ON VERSAILLES TREATY—SAY AMERICA WILL LOSE MARKETS AND BEAR BRUNT OF MONEY CRASH.

[By Carl W. Ackerman, special correspondent of the Washington Post and Public Ledger.]

(Copyright, 1919, by the Public Ledger Co.)

NEW YORK, December 12.

The international financial situation is becoming so critical that, in the opinion of several bankers whom I met to-day, the United States will have to ratify some kind of a peace treaty early next year or bear the chief burdens of a collapse in international exchange. Believing that there are only those two outcomes of the present highly dangerous situation, the business interests are doing everything within their power to have the treaty of Versailles ratified by a compromise between President Wilson and the Republican leaders of the Senate.

Because dollars are now becoming so expensive in all European countries, hundreds of foreign business houses are canceling orders in this country. Every day the cables bring a new list, and frankly the exports and foreign departments of the big banks are very seriously concerned.

COTTON ORDERS MAY STOP.

Many instances of canceled orders could be given, from cigarettes to hooks and eyes, but the biggest surprise of all came to-day when several cotton exporting houses received cable advices from Europe indicating that unless there is a readjustment of exchange rates there will be no more orders for cotton from this country.

This week 10,000,000 cigarettes, packed for export, were unloaded at a sacrifice in Brooklyn, following the cancellation of orders abroad. Another concern, marketing hooks and eyes in France, which had orders for $500,000 worth, had the shipments stopped by cable, and have notified the manufacturers here that unless there is some adjustment because of the low market value of the franc they will not accept the goods.

MAY FIND MARKETS CLOSED.

Until very recently this country has not been seriously affected by the exchange situation, as Europe has been buying heavily because of her needs, despite the high cost of American dollars, but with every European currency now greatly depreciated the foreign houses are "calling a halt."

An attorney for one of the big banking institutions of the city, in whose hands has been placed the collection of an account in France, said to-day that within another month not only the business houses of this country doing an export business but the farmers and manufacturers would find practically every market in the world closed to American business unless peace was declared.

"The situation to-day is like this," he said. "France can not afford to pay 1,000,000 francs for merchandise valued at 500,000 francs six months ago. English merchants can not buy in this country, which is now the most expensive market in the world, when English money is depreciated 30 or 40 per cent.

FARMER WILL YET AWAKE.

"The farmer does not understand what this means now, but when he finds there is no foreign market for his wheat or cattle, when the planter learns that no one in Europe wants his cotton, they will awaken to the peril of the international situation."

For several days, now, the pound, franc, lire, mark, and kronen have been dropping on the local exchange. Some foreign countries have placed an embargo on imports. The question which none can answer is: "How low can foreign money go before there is a break?"

BANKERS USING PRESSURE.

Bankers and business men have decided that they must call a halt. I know from conversation with these men that they are bringing every possible bit of pressure to bear upon the White House and Senate to ratify the treaty. Reports which have been received here during the past 12 hours indicate that the treaty will be ratified shortly after Congress meets in January.

It would probably be ratified before were it not for the fact that everyone here realizes there must be a compromise which both sides, Republican and Democratic, can claim as a victory. As soon as such an agreement is worked out, it is said, the treaty of peace will be ratified and signed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I do not want to delay discussion of the pending bill, which I think is most important, but the business situation in the country and the world is becoming so acute, it is filled with so much danger not only to the American business man but especially to the American farmer, that I do not believe the Senate can afford to continue to mark time about the grave matters which confront the country. There can be no question that the statements in the article which has just been read at the Secretary's desk are true and that they present to the American people an alarming situation.

No one can deny that the value of foreign exchange has been cut in half so far as its present purchasing power on the other side is concerned. No man can deny that if the continued drop in the value of exchange goes on the purchasers of cotton and wheat, iron and steel, and the manufactured products from our country in the European markets can no longer continue to buy.

The hour can not be far distant, if this condition is not remedied, when there will be a distinct drop in the prices of all products raised or manufactured in the United States. It will be reflected into the pocket of the cotton farmer of the South. It will be reflected into the pocket of the wheat farmer of the West. It will be reflected into the pocket of the manufacturer of the North and the labor of the North.

There can not be any question about the reason why exchange is in this precarious condition. It is not normal. It is not because 5 French francs will not approximately purchase an American dollar, and it takes 14 francs now to purchase an American dollar; but it is because the European countries have no gold to send to this country and no credit with which to buy our goods.

The only way to establish credit—and the future trade of this country depends upon Europe establishing credit—is by the establishment of peace conditions.

There is American credit. There is American gold that can go to Europe to remedy the condition if we establish peace. But American gold and American credit will not go to Europe to take the chances if there is any possibility of the issues of the Great War being again opened.

Mr. President, I did not rise to-day to criticize anybody about the present situation. We differ radically about whether the treaty of peace should be ratified or how it should be ratified. I favor unconditional ratification. The distinguished leader of the majority party in the Senate favors ratification with reservations that the President in an open letter said would nullify the treaty.

That merely goes to show that there are differences in this body, that we are far apart on many questions. I am not critical of those who do not agree with me. Every man is entitled to his own views. I do not question for a moment that those who differ with me entertain their views honestly. But I do say that there is a responsibility resting on the Senate and it rests upon the majority party at this hour and this time.

I do not care what the people say about the treaty being dead or the treaty being beyond the control of the Senate. The treaty is in the Senate of the United States. Technically speaking, it is on the table of the Vice President, where it was left when the Senate last acted upon it.

A majority of the Senate can bring it back to life. In my judgment the overruling of the decision of the Vice President was contrary to parliamentary law and the best parliamentary practice. I believed then and I believe now that the Vice President was correct in his ruling, but if the Senate made a mistake in that ruling in holding that the treaty did not continue to be before the Senate for action after certain resolutions were disposed of, a majority of the Senate can change that opinion and change that ruling and open the treaty immediately for consideration.

But you may say, What would it avail us to go back to consider the treaty as long as we can not find 64 votes to ratify it? That may be true; but I recall that in the last days of the consideration of the treaty a proposal was made on the floor of the Senate to appoint a committee of conciliation to see whether Members of the Senate could get together and accomplish some results. It was a common-sense treatment of the situation. What I rose to say is that it is a common-sense treatment of the situation now.

I want to say to the leader of the majority party in the Chamber, so far as my viewpoint is concerned, that he is not doing his full duty to the country in the grave emergency and under the conditions that confront us by waiting idly for something to turn up, waiting to see whether the President will withdraw the treaty and resubmit it, waiting to see whether the minority on this side will agree to the proposition that he has already submitted and that has been rejected. The situation requires affirmative action on the part of those who are responsible for the situation, and that is the party in control of the Senate.

I realize that the question goes beyond the Senate. It would be idle for 64 men in the Senate to reach an agreement about ratification of the treaty if we knew that the agreement would not be ratified by the President of the United States. The President has one vote; the Senate has the other. Those two votes must concur in order to accomplish anything. I recognized the fact that the President having promised the European signatories to the treaty compact that he would stand for unconditional ratification, his hands were tied to make a compromise until the Senate by a vote rejected unconditional ratification. But the Senate has made its record vote on the subject. The people of the United States demand peace. They are entitled to peace, and the time has come when a reasonable compromise should be made in the Senate that can be approved of by the Executive of the land.

I should like to have any Senator here say that a ratification of the treaty can not be made that would not be approved by the President. I do not know whether it could or could not, and neither does any other Senator, because the Senate has not made the slightest effort to get in touch with the President of the United States and to work out a compromise of the matter. There is but one way in which it can be done.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I am not sure that I agree with all that the Senator has said or the position which he has taken, if I understood him rightly. I may not have interpreted his position accurately, as I was not in the Chamber when he began his address, but it seems to me the rational, patriotic position to assume with respect to the treaty, one which has been assumed by many of the Senators, was that the treaty was not a party question and should not be made a party issue. I share that view.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. So do I.

Mr. KING. I think the responsibility is as much upon the Democrats as upon the majority side to try to frame a treaty that will be acceptable to the President, assuming that he has the other vote. If I understood the Senator from Alabama correctly, I do not feel that the burden rests merely upon the Republicans, upon the majority side of the Chamber, to formulate reservations, if there be reservations, that would meet the approval of the President. I think that it is a joint enterprise, if I may be permitted that expression, and that the obligation rests upon us all rather than upon any party.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course, as the Senator explained, he did not enter the Chamber in time to hear all of my argument, and therefore did not get the drift of it. I have no combat whatever with what the Senator says. Of course we are all responsible. This ought not to be a partisan question. But when you come to action in any legislative body the initiation of action rests upon those who control the majority. The majority determine when matters shall come up in the Chamber and when they shall not. The majority initiate action, and the majority control is on the other side of the Senate Chamber. Therefore I say that the first move in the matter rests with the majority party in the Senate, and it is their dereliction if they fail to act. That is all there is to it.

So far as I am concerned, I realize that a compromise has to be made. I think that if the Members on this side of the Chamber were not willing to meet Senators on the other side of the Chamber halfway and agree upon a reasonable compromise and bring peace to the land, they would be subject to criticism, and just criticism.

But we can not act alone. From the other side of the aisle is where the initiation must come. That is what I am talking about.

So far as I am concerned, I go this far. I would be willing to vote for any ratification resolution to bring peace to this land to which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the leader of the majority in this Chamber, and the President of the United States can agree. I do not know how any man can go further than that. [Laughter.] That is certainly not throwing any logs in the way of ratification. If the majority party in this Chamber and the President of the United States can not reach an agreement for the ratification of the treaty, then they had better let the country know it. If the majority party is not willing to try to reach an agreement with the President of the United States by which the treaty can be ratified, they ought to send it back to the President, notify him distinctly that they will not ratify the treaty, and give the executive branch of the Government an opportunity to negotiate peace in some other way.

Primarily, the country is entitled to peace. Now, what I want to know is—and I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts—if he is still averse to moving the appointment of a committee on conciliation to try to get the majority side of the Chamber and the minority side of the Chamber and the President of the United States together in an agreement for the ratification of the treaty of peace?

Mr. LODGE. I will answer in my own time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I shall be glad to have the Senator answer.

Mr. LODGE. I prefer to answer in my own time, when the Senator from Alabama concludes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I realize that, and that is perfectly right. I hope, however, when the Senator's time comes to answer that he will give us a clear and distinct answer.

I recognize that the appointment of such a committee is the only way by which we can secure peace. We can not accomplish that result by again bringing the treaty before the Senate and debating it, for that would only get us further apart; but there is a way by which it can be accomplished; that way lies in the hands of the Senator from Massachusetts, the leader of the majority party in this body, and it is to move the appointment of a committee to endeavor to bring the two sides of the Chamber together and ascertain whether an agreement can be made that will meet the approval of the President of the United States. It is idle for us to talk about reaching an agreement here by ourselves.

You may say that the President is on a sick bed and unable to receive a committee; but the President is well enough to appoint representatives to meet a committee of the Senate and to represent his views in the matter, if he desires so to do. I think we should ascertain whether he does so desire and give him the opportunity to act. The only way that opportunity can be brought about is by affirmative action on the part of the Senate.

I will say, if the Senator from Massachusetts, the leader of his party, desires peace, there is yet one mode open to him, and that is to move a committee on conciliation. If he is willing to do that, then the country can realize that the door is not closed to peace. If, however, the Senator from Massachusetts is unwilling, because of reasons that may appeal to him, to attempt to bring the Senate and the President in accord on this great question, then I say the responsibility for present conditions—peace conditions, business conditions—must rest on the shoulders of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] has brought before the Senate an article which I read this morning in the Washington Post by a gentleman named Carl Ackerman, apparently of German origin, whose name, I think, I have before observed during the war. It did not surprise me. I have known for some time that the fall in exchange would undoubtedly be used as a form of pressure to expedite action on the peace treaty, with which it has no possible relation. We are at peace with England and France, yet the exchange with this country has fallen in both those countries. The real purpose of Mr. Ackerman's article is found at the end, where he says that what is necessary to do is to secure a series of reservations in connection with which both sides can claim a victory. That is the purpose of Mr. Ackerman and that is the purpose of this particular form of propaganda.

There is no doubt about the condition of exchanges. Of course, we all know that; we have watched them fall. The ratification of the treaty, amended or unamended, with reservations or without reservations, would have no more effect on the course of the world's exchanges than it would have on the incoming and outgoing of the tide. It is an absolutely vacuous, insincere argument. There is no connection between the two things, as is very well known by the people who are putting it forward. International exchanges rest on certain economic laws which can not be repealed or amended either by statutes or treaties.

Mr. President, I am going to waste no time on the question of exchanges. That involves too many economic laws to be brought in in connection with a subject with which it has nothing to do.

As to duty to the country, Mr. President, in regard to the treaty of peace with Germany, carrying with it the league of nations, every Senator and every American must decide the question for himself. I can only do my duty on this question as I see it; and it seems to me that the most important thing connected with the treaty is to see to it that if we join the league of nations we do not endanger the peace, the safety, and the independence of the United States. That, to my mind, is more important than any other question now pending.

The reservations adopted by a decisive majority of the Senate aimed only at Americanizing the treaty and making it safe for the United States. They interfered with nobody else. There were only two reservations that touched anything but the league covenant. One of them related to the labor clauses, so called.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, they were a part of the league covenant.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me to finish my sentence, I think he will not be dissatisfied. The labor provisions were as much an excrescence upon the treaty of peace with Germany as the covenant of the league, and they were really a part of the league covenant, as the Senator from Colorado says.

The other reservation affecting the treaty of peace with Germany and not relating to the league covenant is, of course, the one in regard to Shantung. I do not believe there can be found any considerable minority in the Senate who will not desire at least to go on record that the United States does not wish to be a party to that particular infamy.

Mr. President, I am not going to rehearse the parliamentary question which was raised and voted upon by the Senate two or three times. Of course, the treaty is here. Every rejected bill is here, but after the vote on the passage of a bill has been taken the bill has been defeated and that vote has been reconsidered, everyone who knows anything of parliamentary law knows that that ends it. It is open to the President at any moment to bring the treaty again before the Senate, according to the rules, according to parliamentary law, about which there can be no dispute. He has nothing to do but withdraw it. The rules provide that he may withdraw it without the assent of the Senate, and he can then at once resubmit it. That apparently he declines to do. I do not know whether his attitude is due to the fact that he declines to recognize the decision of the Senate upon a parliamentary question or whether he is unable to make any concession even on a matter of form; but there is no difficulty about bringing the treaty back here.

Mr. President, on the day before the treaty was finally voted upon I had a conversation with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], who then told me that he was not prepared to make any proposals. He was informed that if he desired to make any proposals before the treaty went to a final vote with reservations we should be glad to consider them. No proposals were made; the opportunity was refused, and we were allowed to proceed to a final vote on the treaty without any proposal being made. There is what we proposed. When I say "we," I am not speaking of Republicans alone, but of the Democrats who voted with us, sometimes as many as 10. They voted with us on this question, and they bear the same responsibility that we do.

I have never sought to make the treaty a party question; I have tried to keep it away from partisan considerations all summer long. I have never used the word "party" in any way in connection with it. The chairman of the Democratic national committee has made it from the beginning a party question. It has been made a party question on the other side; it has been forced on us simply because we furnished most of the votes, although not all. If it is forced on us, we shall take what we believe to be the American side, and advocate what is necessary for the protection of the United States.

Mr. President, it is for those who are the friends of the treaty as it stood without any modification to make proposals if they have any to make. We are ready to listen to and consider any such proposals. We have been willing to do this from the beginning. We have offered our reservations believing them to be sound. Now, if modifications are desired, let them be offered by those who are discontented with the reservations as they stand and who think they might vote for them if they were in any degree modified. Give us an opportunity to see what you propose.

As to a committee of conciliation, Senators on the other side of the Chamber who share the views of the Senator from Alabama have nothing to do but come forward, if they are duly authorized by the President, and tell us what modifications they would like us to consider. The committee of conciliation is sitting on both sides of this aisle.

Now, Mr. President, the Senate is not going to deal, with my assent at least, with some unofficial collection of persons whom the President may select to discourse about the treaty with a majority of the Senate. The Senate, of course, can deal with the President. We are coordinate branches of the Government, and of course we can meet. Also, Mr. President, we can arrange it among ourselves, and I think it is better that we should arrange it among ourselves. Those of us who have voted for the reservations have no one to consult except ourselves, and when we make an agreement to anything it will be carried out. If the President desires to present to the Senate any modifications or concessions from his position, it is open to him to do it. He has nothing to do but withdraw the treaty, resubmit it, send in a message, tell the Senate what changes he thinks ought to be made, and we will consider them. It is he, and he alone, who is standing immovably on his original position, which was that the treaty must be ratified without crossing a "t" or dotting an "i." He has not suggested a single modification. We have suggested—those of us who were dissatisfied with the treaty as it stood—14 reservations or conditions which we believed would lead to the ratification of the treaty, which we know would lead to its ratification, if the President did not stop it; but he stands there perfectly immovable. He directed his party to vote against the treaty with those reservations. He said it was a nullification of the treaty. It is not a nullification unless "nullification" is equivalent to the word "Americanization." There is not a reservation there that is not put there to protect the United States.

That is the situation as it stands to-day. If the President desires to suggest modifications in the reservations which have been offered and adopted by a decisive majority of the Senate, let him do it. We, of course, are ready to consider them with all the respect that they deserve.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts rejects the theory that the conclusion of a treaty of peace with Germany in any way affects the condition in reference to foreign exchange. Of course a large number of the great bankers and business men of America disagree with him in that position. I believe myself that the world will not get back to peace conditions in reference to business and prices until a treaty of peace is ratified; but that is neither here nor there on the matter of grave importance before the Senate.

The Senator from Massachusetts says in one breath that this treaty is dead and can not be acted on, and in the next breath he invites the Members of the Senate on this side of the Chamber, if we have any proposals to make by way of modification of the treaty, to introduce them and bring them before the Senate—to bring our proposals before the Senate for consideration on what he terms a dead treaty of peace! Well, now, either the Senator desires to scoff at our helpless position, or in his heart he does not feel that the treaty of peace is as dead as he says it is.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, I have not a word of objection to make to his argument, but I do not think he ought to misstate what I said. I said that if the President would send the treaty back here, so that it would be before us, then, of course, we could consider any suggestions he had to make. I did not say it was before us now, because it is not.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I was referring to a prior statement of the Senator in reference to our offering reservations or amendments, and not to his later statement about the President.

Now, Mr. President, it is true, I have no doubt, that the President of the United States could withdraw this treaty and resubmit it, but why should he do so if he can expect only unfriendly treatment at the hands of the Senate? And that is indicated in the atmosphere of this body. Why should he do it? What is to be accomplished by it? There is not a Member of the Senate who does not know that if we want to consider the treaty a majority can put life into it. If the President were to withdraw it and send it back, it would not be before the Senate. It would be before a committee that took months to report it to this body before. What the country wants is action, not delay.

The proposal that I made to the Senator from Massachusetts did not go to the technicalities in which he has indulged in the debate. It went to the substance of the matter. I did not ask him to yield the question as to whether he is right or wrong about the treaty being dead or what its status is. I asked him whether he would ask for a committee of this body on conciliation, to see if it was possible, in some way or somehow, to reach an agreement with the Executive by which the treaty could be confirmed; and, of course, we all know that if that agreement was reached there would be no difficulty in disposing of the technical details that confront us. If an agreement was reached, and it pacified the Senator from Massachusetts in any way, I have no doubt the President would yield and withdraw the treaty and resubmit it. Of course, the President of the United States would not let a detail of that kind stand in the way of the ratification of this treaty and the peace of the land.

The proposal I made does not go to the technicalities of this debate. The Senator from Massachusetts answers my question by arguing the position that he took before, and contending that his position is the only American position in this matter. I do not desire to indulge in general debate as to who is right or wrong. If we continue that debate, we will continue to make the people of America suffer. I think the time has come when the technicalities of this debate should be dismissed, when the Senate ought to make an earnest effort to secure the ratification of this treaty of peace, and an agreement with the President. The President lies to-day on a sick bed. He is amply able to attend to the business of the Nation; but it is not fair for the Senate to say, when it holds the treaty here in its own possession, that the fault lies with the President of the United States because he does not initiate action in the matter.

If the Members of this body want peace, it is no reflection on the dignity of the Senate in a proper way to propose a conference to bring about peace; but that proposal the Senator from Massachusetts, standing here as the representative of the majority party in this body, repudiates. He will have no peace unless the President of the United States will yield to his imperial will. That is the situation that confronts the country; and I say this country is in a bad way, with its Executive disabled by sickness and the Senate of the United States obstinately refusing to take action for fear that it may yield on some technicality that it has heretofore insisted upon.

Mr. President, no man can tell what this condition may lead to, not only in the personal life of the Nation but in its business affairs. No man can predict what the future holds if we continue to stand on this precipice with dogmatic obstinacy, each man insisting upon his own position, and no man willing to yield in behalf of his country, his countrymen, and the peace and happiness of this Nation.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I had not expected to participate in this discussion, which I think, unfortunately, interrupts the railroad bill, but the Senator from Massachusetts saw fit to refer to a conference which he and I held together the day before the treaty was voted on, and bringing my name into the matter he sought to leave the impression that we on this side of the aisle were not desirous of reaching a compromise with those who were insisting upon the so-called Lodge reservations. I desire to give my recollection of that conversation, and I shall be glad to have the Senator from Massachusetts interrupt me if he thinks I make any error.

The meeting was held for the purpose of seeing whether it might be possible to bring about a settlement of the reservation differences by a compromise. I agreed with Senator LODGE, as I thought substantially as to the fact, that his resolution of ratification, with the reservations in it which we called destructive, would be beaten. We agreed, furthermore, in the expectation that after his resolution was beaten in the Senate a resolution of unqualified ratification would also be defeated. We agreed also in the expectation that a resolution of ratification containing reservations which I should propose on behalf of the minority of the Senate would also be beaten. I put it to the Senator from Massachusetts at that time, as a proposition from this side, that after those respective defeats of the various propositions, the Senate should thereupon take a recess and give opportunity for the two sides to get together in a conference and effect a compromise. The Senator from Massachusetts thereupon informed me that he was anxious for the ratification of the treaty, and that he would see whether he could bring about such a suggestion as I proposed.

After that time I heard no word from the Senator from Massachusetts. I fully expected, and I told my associates on this side that, after the various resolutions were defeated, as we believed they would be defeated, I thought it probable that we would have a recess of a day or two, and that a compromise might then be effected.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me——
Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.
Mr. LODGE. I told the Senator that we were ready to receive proposals, but they must be made before we went to a vote. I have no recollection about any recess agreement. I certainly agreed to nothing of that sort, for I had no authority to agree to it, and we waited here, giving opportunity, as we thought, for any proposals to be made. None were made. That is all that I said, and I think that is correct; none were made.
Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is not inconsistent with my statement that I urged the Senator from Massachusetts, after the inevitable defeat of his resolution and of our two resolutions, that we should have a recess; and he told me he would see if he could bring it about, and that was the last word I heard from him.
Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, that I can not agree to. I have no recollection of anything of the kind.
Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is my very distinct recollection; and the subsequent events bear out the statement which I have made.

When the so-called resolution containing the Lodge reservations was brought to a vote it not only failed to receive a two-thirds vote of the Senate, but it did not even receive a majority vote of the Senate. It received only 39 votes upon the first occasion of its being brought to a vote, only a little more than a third of the Senate, and that was due to the fact that a large number of the very Senators who had been instrumental in injecting these destructive reservations into the resolution themselves voted against the resolution.

That brings me to say, Mr. President, that the Senator from Massachusetts, in my opinion, had a solemn obligation which he owed, not only to the Senate of the United States but to the country at large. He, as chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, was in charge of the treaty. He had said that he desired to see it ratified in some form.
Mr. LODGE. I did not say in some form; I said with the reservations that I offered.
Mr. HITCHCOCK. With the reservations. But, Mr. President, instead of consulting with those who also desired ratification of the treaty, who were willing to make concessions, he consulted only with Senators upon the other side of the aisle, and chiefly among the 14 or 15 Republican Senators who never would vote for the treaty under any circumstances.
Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I can not permit that statement of my conduct to pass. I consulted many Senators on our side, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] will bear me out; and I will say that I consulted chiefly with those who were known as mild reservationists.
Mr. HITCHCOCK. My proposition stands, Mr. President, that the Senator from Massachusetts, charged by the Constitution and by the organization of the Senate with the duty of conducting the treaty to ratification, if possible, made no effort to secure the support of 45 Senators on this side of the aisle who wanted the treaty ratified, and who were willing to make concessions; but instead of that he came to his understanding with 14 or 15 Senators on the other side of the aisle whose votes could not be depended upon for the ratification of the treaty.
Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield?
Mr. HITCHCOCK. In a moment. If the Senator from Massachusetts intended to favor the ratification of the treaty, felt that it was his duty to bring about ratification if possible, here was his field, on this side of the aisle, where there were more than 40 Senators anxious for ratification, and when, instead of that, he arranged with 15 Senators on the other side of the aisle for reservations when they would not even vote for the treaty, he was inviting and planning, as I believe, the destruction of the treaty.
Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not think, if the Senator will allow me, that he has any right to charge motives on anybody. My object was to get the treaty ratified with the reservations that had been put on by a majority of the Senate. I did not go and consult with the Senator from Nebraska and the others to whom he refers, because their votes were not their own.
Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield?
Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.
Mr. LENROOT. I would like to ask the Senator from Nebraska if it is not a fact that during the time the reservations were being prepared, and negotiations were going on with reference to them, he repeatedly stated to Senators upon this side of the aisle that the time had not come when he and his colleagues could consider reservations at all?
Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not gather the significance of the Senator's inquiry.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator from Nebraska has just charged the Senator from Massachusetts with the obligation to consult him, and he left the inference that if the Senator from Massachusetts had consulted him they might have gotten together upon reservations, when during all that time the Senator from Nebraska absolutely refused to consider any proposition with reference to reservations. That is the significance of it.
Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, that statement is as far from the truth, almost, as the insult which the Senator from Massachusetts has flung to Senators upon this side of the aisle, in stating that their votes do not belong to themselves. The Senator from Wisconsin very well knows that weeks ago—yes, I think it was months ago—upon the floor of the Senate I stated that we would take up the reservation question when we reached that question, but we realized that reservations must be considered in their due course.

But we have never had the opportunity, on this side of the aisle, to arrange an adjustment of differences upon the question of reservations with Senators upon the other side of the aisle. We have sought little conferences with a few men, but upon the other side of the aisle there has been a unanimous agreement as to reservations, and even when we from this side of the Chamber have offered reservations which we knew to be absolutely acceptable to seven or eight Senators on the other side of the aisle, those Senators themselves have voted against the reservations which they had created and which we had offered.
Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield?
Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; I decline to be interrupted until I finish my statement.

The Senator from Massachusetts indicates occasionally that he is in favor of the ratification of the treaty; but his whole course in the conduct of the treaty in the Senate of the United States, in cooperating with the enemies of the treaty in the framing of reservations, makes it almost impossible to give credence to the statement which he makes. Now, let us see what there is in the way of corroborative evidence as to the position of the Senator from Massachusetts.

When the vote had been taken upon the resolution of ratification offered by the Senator from Massachusetts, and the vote had been taken upon the other resolutions of ratification, and they had all failed of a majority even of the Senate, we on this side first sought an adjournment in order that we might have time to consult and possibly compromise with Senators on the other side of the aisle on the subject of reservations. That was refused, and an adjournment was forced, not, however, until the Senator from Massachusetts had accomplished what he thought would kill the treaty definitely. It was he who moved the reconsideration; it was he who moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table; and it is he who stands in the Senate now and proclaims that the treaty is dead. And when the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] offered a resolution providing for a committee of conciliation the Senator from Massachusetts led the Senators on the other side in tabling the resolution at that time. How can the Senator from Massachusetts, after all these acts, claim that he proffered and we refused a compromise?

That is not all. After the deed had been done, Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts came out in an interview, which was carried by the Associated Press all over the United States, which I shall take the liberty of reading, at least in part. It was published in the papers of November 22. I think, in justice to the Senator, I had better read the whole statement:

> I have no especial comment to make. The case is very simple. After four months of careful consideration and discussion the reservations were presented to the Senate. They were purely American in their character, designed solely to Americanize the treaty and make it safe for the United States.
>
> Under the President's orders the followers of the administration in the Senate voted down these reservations. It was also shown by a vote that there was a decisive majority against the treaty with the reservations.

I suppose that means "without reservations."
Mr. LODGE. It is a misprint. It should read "without."
Mr. HITCHCOCK (reading)—

> Those reservations as presented to the Senate will stand. There is no room for further compromise between Americanism and the supergovernment presented by the league. All I ask now is that we may have the opportunity to lay those reservations before the American people. To that great and final tribunal alone would I appeal.
>
> WOULD INJECT THEM INTO CAMPAIGN.
>
> I wish to carry those reservations into the campaign. I wish the American people to read and study them. They are not like the covenant of the league. They are simple. I do not see that there is one of them to which any American can object. I want the people to see them, understand them, and think of them in every household, on every farm, in every shop and factory throughout the land. Then let them decide.

Mr. President, that is entirely harmonious with my view of the action taken by the Senator. He refused the opportunity to compromise. He led his party in defeating the offer made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] for a committee of conciliation. He insisted on going to the parliamentary limit of offering a resolution of reconsideration and then moving to lay it on the table so that it might be considered as absolutely dead, in his opinion, with which I do not agree. After that had been done he insisted on an adjournment of the Senate sine die, in order that there might be no possible other opportunity of getting together. Then he goes to the public in a public statement and rejoices that now the treaty is dead and it is to be the political issue in the next campaign.

The Senator from Massachusetts can not escape from that record. He can not escape from the record which he has made here in the Senate to kill the treaty. He can not even convince the American people that he believes in the treaty or wants to have it ratified.

It is not fair for him to stand here and charge us, who made every effort of compromise and settlement and who are now ready, as the Senator from Alabama says, to meet any compromise and settlement. The Senator instead of standing here and claiming that the treaty is dead might accede to the proposal for the appointment of a committee for conciliation and compromise as originally made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE]. Nothing might come of it, but it is a hope; and anyone who believes in having a peace settlement, anyone who wants to stop the terrible effect of an indefinite postponement of peace on business, on labor, on society in general, and on government, ought to grasp even at the last straw to bring about a settlement.

We have as many votes on this side to give as the Senator has on that side, and more. We are entitled to some consideration. We alike are Senators of the United States, and it is not right for the Senator from Massachusetts, after he has been able to develop only 41 votes at the most, a minority of the Senate, in favor of his resolution of ratification, to say that there shall not be a single other change.

It has been said that I have stood here and declared that there should not be any reservations in the treaty. What I did say was that the treaty should not be amended, and the Senate has said it. The Senate itself by nearly 50 votes has said that there should not be the dotting of an "i" nor the crossing of a "t" in the treaty. But we recognized long ago that reservations were inevitable. The Senator knows very well that reservations were submitted to the Democratic conference weeks ago, and that that conference authorized me to present reservations to the Senate, as I did. The Senator from Massachusetts knows that I did have those reservations printed, and that I offered them one by one here in the Senate as substitutes for reservations which he presented; and the Senator knows also that after the treaty had passed from the Committee of the Whole into the Senate proper I again offered those reservations as a whole as a substitute for his.

He therefore is in no position to say that we have proffered nothing. We have proffered something. If the Senator is willing to take those offers as made by us and take the reservations made by him and voted down by the Senate, we are willing to meet him in a compromise, we are willing to meet him in a give-and-take committee, and we are willing to do it not only because we believe that it is ordinarily important to have this treaty ratified but we believe that the world is in a crisis, that business is going the way of destruction in the United States. Not only is foreign exchange being ruined so that our exports will be largely choked up and our storehouses and warehouses will soon be filled to overflowing with 15,000,000 tons of agricultural products of one sort or another that we will find difficulty in marketing—not only that, but he knows as I know that we will be in imminent danger of losing over 600,000 tons of German shipping, our only title to which is found in the treaty. The Senator from Massachusetts knows that we seized a hundred vessels in our ports after we went to war with Germany, which German companies had left with our ports when we were a neutral Nation, and that we have no title to those vessels, and that if, after peace comes between Great Britain, France, and other countries and Germany, those vessels go into a European harbor, they can be libeled by the former German owners in the courts of France or Great Britain or any other standard country of Europe, and can be taken away from us by the decree of those courts.

Moreover, $800,000,000 of the property of German nationals which we have seized in this country and proceeded to liquidate, the funds of which we propose to hold for the payment of claims of our citizens against Germany, either for damages upon the sea or damages in Germany, the Senator knows very well that we can not hold without a serious controversy with Germany.

So I say there are material reasons why we should at this time waive some of our convictions if necessary and modify some of our views and qualify some of our differences. We hold out the olive branch. We are ready for the appointment of a committee. We are ready for conferences. We are ready to find out whether there is a spirit of compromise on the other side, or whether you want to definitely defeat the treaty, upon which not only depends so many of our great material interests but upon which also may depend to a large extent the safety and the stability of government all over the world.

There is the offer. If it is not taken, the country will judge who is sincere. The country will know whether there is any honesty in the professions of those who say they are for the league and vote to kill it. There it is.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think I have served long enough as an object of competition between the two distinguished aspirants for the Democratic leadership.

I only want to say by way of correction that I never said the treaty was dead except in the Senate. I knew very well that it could be brought again before us by action of the President, as I know it now. The work of resurrection lies with him.

One other point has been raised by the Senator from Nebraska. What he says about me is a matter of indifference. My opinion of him and his opinion of me are of no consequence. What is of consequence is dealing rightly with the treaty.

But the Senator from Nebraska raised one point with great eloquence and earnestness, as always, as to what we should lose—600,000 tons of German shipping and $800,000,000 of German money. I do not think we should lose them, but even if we should, I will say that the great and vital interests of the United States, not now, but in the future for unborn generations, are not for sale for 600,000 tons of German shipping or for $800,000,000.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, every Member of the Senate, I am very sure—I certainly speak my own sentiments—entertains the very highest respect for the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. He has served long and very faithfully in this body, and some deference is due to a man of his age and experience. But I can not allow to pass unnoticed the remark of the Senator from Massachusetts—and I wish he would not leave the Chamber for just a moment—to the effect that he did not confer with Senators on the Democratic side in relation to some adjustment of the difficulty over the treaty because their votes were not their own. That language, I think, Mr. President, is quite clearly violative of the rules of debate in the Senate—Rule XIX. I refer to subdivision 2 of that rule, which is as follows:

> No Senator in debate shall, directly or indirectly, by any form of words impute to another Senator or to other Senators any conduct or motive unworthy or unbecoming a Senator.

I call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to it, in the hope that perhaps he will be glad to withdraw the utterance.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] attacked my motives, which is against the rules. He went so far as to say that credence was not to be given to my statements. It never occurred to me to call him to order or to try to take his statement out of the RECORD. But if it will soothe the feelings of the Senator from Montana to have me withdraw the statement that I made, which I think is absolutely true, that the votes of certain Democratic Senators on the other side are not their own, I will withdraw it and ask that it be stricken from the RECORD.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I call the Senator to order for repeating the statement, and I ask that he withdraw the statement in which he asserted that his former statement is true.

Mr. LODGE. I beg the Senator's pardon; I did not hear him.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I raise the point of order that the Senator is again in violation of the rules of the Senate by making the statement that the former statement made by him is true.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator thinks my apology was out of order, I will apologize again. I regret that I should have hurt the feelings of the Senator from Montana by stating that I thought the votes of some of the Democratic Senators were not their own. I can not do more than regret it and ask that it all be stricken from the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no power in the Chair to require a Senator to do anything but sit down, and the Senator from Massachusetts has sat down.

The Chair has a number of times recently—and this is a good time to mention it—observed that Senators are imputing improper motives to other Senators upon the floor of the Senate. It is not a pleasant task for the Chair to decide the question. It is not a pleasant task for a Senator to object. What the purpose of the rule was I do not know. Whether it was to prevent personalities, bitterness, assaults, and things of that kind I do not know, but the rule is there. This is not the first instance. There have been a great many instances. There have been two or three to-day which, in my judgment, I will say were in violation of the rule. The Chair hopes that Senators will take the rule to heart and neither tell a truth nor a falsehood about each other.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words on the subject, as it was referred to in a newspaper interview given by one of the Senators some time ago. I did not feel that an expression of view in that way called for any particular comment from anybody upon this side at that time, but I embrace the opportunity to say that it is hardly right for a United States Senator to be interviewed by a newspaper and to attribute to a great mass of his colleagues, 30 or 40 of them, the position of being simply automatons.

Why, Mr. President, I am included in that class, as a matter of course. I am not conscious that anybody commands my vote in this body upon the treaty or upon any other question. It may be that it is done without my knowledge. It so happens that I am, and from the beginning have been, very heartily in favor of the ratification of the treaty. Before the treaty was negotiated at all I raised my voice in favor of a league of nations for the settlement, in some peaceful manner, of international controversies likely to lead to war, and when a scheme was worked out which was the best that the statesmen of the world could devise, I was in favor of it, not because the President of the United States, who happens to be a member of my particular political party, was one of the drafters of it; but, very naturally, I endeavor to accommodate my views as closely as I can at all times to those of my party associates. Who is there in this body who does not do so? If I had some misgivings concerning some of the features of the measure, I was disposed to yield those to the judgment of the great man in the White House, whose actions and whose declarations in connection with the war, and whose enunciation of the principles for which the war was fought and upon which it should be settled evoked the plaudits of the world. As a matter of course, I was quite willing to counsel and advise with him and to accommodate any views I might have to his own views upon this important question. Further than that, sir, neither he nor any other man controlled my vote.

But now, Mr. President, because there are nearly 40 Members upon this side who believe with the President of the United States that this is the great opportunity to substitute the peaceful adjustment of international controversies for a determination of them by the arbitrament of war, why are any of us to be charged with having surrendered our convictions?

This is not the first time that a great many of the Members upon this side have been in entire harmony with the President of the United States upon some very important public questions. Some of us sometimes have differed from him. I am myself in that class. I did not hesitate to differ from the President of the United States upon a matter upon which he had set his heart almost as strongly, perhaps, as he ever did upon the ratification of the treaty with Germany. I refer to the legislation in relation to the Panama Canal tolls. I did not hesitate to speak in this body and to record my vote against him on that question. Later developments have rather convinced me that, perhaps, he was right about the matter and I was wrong, although upon the ground upon which I voted the way I did I have no hesitancy in indorsing the position I then took. But, Mr. President, why am I subject to be charged with surrendering the commission that I received from the people of the State of Montana and being regardless of my oath simply because I happen to agree with the President of the United States? Why should anybody because upon this particular matter the great majority of the Democrats upon this side—three-fourths of them—agree with the President of the United States, as they have upon most of the legislation which he has recommended to Congress, be charged with being under his domination or dictation?

Has not the same situation of affairs been presented with respect to Republican Senators and Republican Members of the House of Representatives when a Republican occupied the presidential chair? There was, as you recall, some considerable division of opinion between the two branches of Congress and the last Republican President of the United States, but between the Congress and his predecessor things went on pretty smoothly, and I do not recall any very great controversies between the Members of Congress and Republican Presidents in the past. They have endeavored to work in harmony. It is the theory of the Government that they will work in harmony. Very likely the President was disposed to yield something to a positive expression upon the part of members of his party in Congress and members of his party in Congress were disposed to yield something of their own opinions to accommodate them to his views in order that legislation might be enacted at all. What is the difference between the existing situation and that? I trust, Mr. President, that at some time or other we shall be given credit on both sides of the Chamber for an endeavor to discharge our duties as we see them.

Now, just a further word, Mr. President. The Senator from Massachusetts has again asseverated in this body his desire to see the treaty ratified with reservations. I am very glad to accept his statement. I have not previously heard such a statement emanating from the Senator from Massachusetts. Perhaps at some time or other he did declare that he desired the treaty ratified with reservations, but if he ever made the statement it was during my absence. I have always assumed since he made his speech on the 12th day of August, 1919, that he desired to see the treaty killed. I am unable to understand his speech on that occasion on any other theory whatever. I will read a brief paragraph from it. The Senator from Massachusetts starts out with this statement:

> Mr. President, in the Essays of Elia, one of the most delightful is that entitled "Popular Fallacies." There is one very popular fallacy, however, which Lamb did not include in his list, and that is the common saying that history repeats itself. Universal negatives are always dangerous, but if there is anything that is fairly certain it is that history never exactly repeats itself. Popular fallacies, nevertheless, generally have some basis, and this saying springs from the undoubted truth that mankind from generation to generation is constantly repeating itself. We have an excellent illustration of this fact in the proposed experiment now before us of making arrangements to secure the permanent peace of the world.

If that means anything at all, it means that any arrangement between nations for securing the permanent peace of the world is a "popular fallacy." He continues:

> To assure the peace of the world by a combination of the nations is no new idea.

Then he proceeds, as most of you will recall, to tell how the Holy Alliance failed in that regard and how other attempts of like character failed. The obvious conclusion to be drawn from all this is that this experiment would fail as all of its prototypes had done. But I read another paragraph. After having talked about the Holy Alliance, he said:

> I have taken the trouble to trace in the merest outline the development of the Holy Alliance, so hostile and dangerous to human freedom, because I think it carries with it a lesson for us at the present moment.

He compares the preamble of the Holy Alliance and the preamble of the covenant of the league of nations, and then says:

> No one would contest the loftiness or the benevolence of these purposes. Brave words, indeed! They do not differ essentially from the preamble of the treaty of Paris, from which sprang the Holy Alliance. But the covenant of this league contains a provision which I do not find in the treaty of Paris, and which is as follows:
>
> "The assembly may deal at its meetings with any matter within the sphere of action of the league or affecting the peace of the world."

He goes on to discuss that feature of the covenant, condemns it most heartily, and then adds:

> If Europe desires such an alliance or league with a power of this kind, so be it. I have no objection, provided they do not interfere with the American continents or force us against our will, but bound by a moral obligation, into all the quarrels of Europe. If England, abandoning the policy of Canning, desires to be a member of a league which has such powers as this, I have not a word to say. But I object in the strongest possible way to having the United States agree, directly or indirectly, to be controlled by a league which may at any time, and perfectly lawfully and in accordance with the terms of the covenant, be drawn in to deal with internal conflicts in other countries, no matter what those conflicts may be.

Mr. President, I invite your attention to the fact that not a single reference is made in any of the 14 reservations which have been proposed, and which were adopted by a majority of the Senate, touching in any manner that feature of the covenant. Accordingly I can not resist the conclusion, except, of course, for the statement made by the Senator to-day, that he is against a league which contains any such covenant as that proposed.

I am not going to continue the analysis of the Senator's remarks; they are all of the same tenor and lead inevitably to the same conclusion, namely, that the Senator from Massachusetts does not want any of this league at all. I think, perhaps, unless his sentiments concerning the matter have undergone a radical change, in that fact lies the explanation of why the treaty was not ratified.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, common sense is a rare talent. It does not seem to me that it has been overexercised or unduly developed in some of the debates in the Senate recently. What is the status of the treaty to-day, and what is the public to think of the discussion that has gone on here? What is to be expected about the procedure for its ratification hereafter?

The majority leader says that the treaty has been finally disposed of so far as the Senate is concerned and so far as it can be done under parliamentary usage. He relies on the first and second subdivisions of Rule XXXVII, both of which I ask to have inserted in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the matter referred to will be inserted in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

RULE XXXVII.

EXECUTIVE SESSION—PROCEEDINGS ON TREATIES.

1. When a treaty shall be laid before the Senate for ratification, it shall be read a first time; and no motion in respect to it shall be in order, except to refer it to a committee, to print it in confidence for the use of the Senate, to remove the injunction of secrecy, or to consider it in open executive session.

When a treaty is reported from a committee with or without amendment, it shall, unless the Senate unanimously otherwise direct, lie one day for consideration, after which it may be read a second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole, when it shall be proceeded with by articles, and the amendments reported by the committee shall be first acted upon, after which other amendments may be proposed; and when through with the proceedings had as in Committee of the Whole shall be reported to the Senate, when the question shall be, if the treaty be amended, "Will the Senate concur in the amendments made in Committee of the Whole?" And the amendments may be taken separately, or in gross, if no Senator shall object, after which new amendments may be proposed. At any stage of such proceedings the Senate may remove the injunction of secrecy from the treaty or proceed with its consideration in open executive session.

The decisions thus made shall be reduced to the form of a resolution of ratification, with or without amendments, as the case may be, which shall be proposed on a subsequent day, unless by unanimous consent the Senate determine otherwise, at which stage no amendment shall be received unless by unanimous consent.

On the final question to advise and consent to the ratification in the form agreed to, the concurrence of two-thirds of the Senators present shall be necessary to determine it in the affirmative, but all other motions and questions upon a treaty shall be decided by a majority vote, except a motion to postpone indefinitely, which shall be decided by a vote of two-thirds.

2. Treaties transmitted by the President to the Senate for ratification shall be resumed at the second or any subsequent session of the same Congress at the stage in which they were left at the final adjournment of the session at which they were transmitted, but all proceedings on treaties shall terminate with the Congress, and they shall be resumed at the commencement of the next Congress as if no proceedings had previously been had thereon.

3. All treaties concluded with Indian tribes shall be considered and acted upon by the Senate in its open or legislative session, unless the same shall be transmitted by the President to the Senate in confidence, in which case they shall be acted upon with closed doors.

Mr. KIRBY. The Senator from Massachusetts says that the treaty is finally disposed of so far as the Senate is concerned. The Democratic leader of the fight on this side gets up and says the consideration of the treaty ought to be resumed, and the distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] says it ought to be and must be resumed, that not only the interests of the United States but the interests of the world require it.

Now, what has been done? The Democratic leader did not move to reconsider the vote by which the treaty failed of ratification. The Senator from Alabama did not make any sort of a motion whatever to bring the matter to the further consideration of the Senate; and no Senator on the Republican side has done so. Why? Evidently because all agree that it can not be done under the rules of the Senate—either that or we are disposed to talk here rather than do things that we all seem to think ought to be done.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. KIRBY. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. For myself, I wish to say that I shall certainly not make any motion calculated to bring up the treaty until we have been able by means of conferences to ascertain whether there is any chance of doing something with it. I think it would be very unwise to attempt to bring it in here and merely kick it around like a football. I believe the time for discussion has passed and that we should not continue discussion of it; but when it is brought in here it should be acted on finally and ratified.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I agree to the Senator's statement. He thinks, as a matter of expediency, that the discussion of the treaty should not be revived now; but it has been revived. What is the purpose of the Senate relative to the treaty? It is insisted on the one side, and practically conceded on the other, that the treaty has been finally disposed of, so far as it is within the power of the Senate to do so under its rules and under the Constitution by which the Senate is given authority to advise and consent to the ratification of treaties. If that is the case, the whole discussion this afternoon has been out of order, and I do not know whether or not any benefit has resulted from it.

I believe this is the greatest question before the people of the United States to-day and that it is only approached in importance by the problems involved in transportation and the control of the railroads. I should like to see it finally disposed of. I voted for the ratification of the treaty without reservation or amendment. I even favored one or two of the reservations that were proposed after our side began to propose reservations, but that was yesterday. That is all in the past. As I understand, this treaty can be laid before the Senate at any time for its consideration, and until it is laid before the Senate the majority leader has said that it shall not be further considered, and all of us seem to agree that under the rules that it probably can not be done.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I only want to suggest that the rules themselves provide that they may be waived by a two-thirds vote. I believe the treaty is here. I believe the Senate can deal with it. Certainly, if it can not be done by a majority vote, it can be done by a two-thirds vote. The Senate can take it up if any desire to take it up is manifested by those who hold such a relation to the subject, the chairman of the committee and others having charge of the measure and who are friendly to it. Unquestionably, the treaty could be laid before the Senate by regular process at any time. It will take two-thirds to ratify it. Two-thirds can take it up and consider it.

Mr. President, I am not going to enter into discussion about it; but that, to my mind, is clearly the situation. I remember that when the final vote was taken I inquired of the Senator from Massachusetts whether he was proposing to move to send the treaty, together with the action of the Senate thereon, back to the President. He said no; that was not necessary. The treaty never has been sent back to the President; but the Senator from Massachusetts can not very well dispose of the article which has formed the basis of this discussion, submitted by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], as being mere propaganda work and as originating, as he has indicated, from some sort of questionable source. The sentiment expressed in the article is pronounced and country wide. I am getting letters and telegrams and resolutions passed by chambers of commerce and boards of trade and business institutions all over the country, calling for some action upon the treaty, and insisting that the treaty ought to be ratified and that we ought to get back to normal conditions.

What I hold in my hand is but a sample of such resolutions. It is a copy of resolutions that were unanimously adopted by the board of directors of the Baltimore Chamber of Commerce on December 8, 1919. I should like to have it read, Mr. President, and with that I will conclude what I have to say now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of California in the chair). Is there any objection?

Mr. CUMMINS. What is the request of the Senator from Florida?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request is for the reading of the resolutions which the Senator has sent to the desk.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Florida if he will not consent to have it printed without reading. There are very few Members in the Chamber, and we ought to proceed with the railroad bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Very well; I am agreeable to that. Perhaps it is just as well. I thought it might be of interest to some who had heard the other article read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

BALTIMORE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.
OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT,
Baltimore, December 10, 1919.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am directed by the board of directors of this chamber to transmit to you copy of the inclosed resolutions, which are respectfully submitted for your consideration.

Very truly, yours,

W. H. HAYWARD, President.

Resolutions unanimously adopted by the board of directors of the Baltimore Chamber of Commerce December 8, 1919.

Whereas our United States of America brought to a successful end a great war, fought by all the people, irrespective of creed, race, or political following, at an untold cost in human lives and vast sums of money, willingly spent for humanity's cause for justice and freedom; and

Whereas more than a year has passed since the signing of the armistice and still no peace treaty has been signed, the delay creating an unsettled and chaotic state for the entire civilized world, and at the same time jeopardizing the fruits of war won at tremendous sacrifice of life and treasure; and

Whereas the board of directors of this chamber, varying from its usual custom of taking no part in affairs of a political nature, now believes itself justified in this crisis in abandoning its traditional policy, feeling that the question at issue is not that of a political or party affair, but a question of vital importance to the entire business world, and being fully persuaded that no international financial plans for extension of credit to Europe can be arranged until a peace treaty is signed, and that without such credits being extended our export trade must obviously suffer, causing reaction that will be reflected unfavorably in our own domestic trade; and

Whereas the board of directors is assured that the peoples of these United States, irrespective of party, demand that a treaty shall be signed, such as will secure to us the glories of victories won and in keeping with the faith pledged our allies: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the board of directors of the Baltimore Chamber of Commerce, speaking for the important interests it represents, urges upon the President of the United States and upon the United States Senate the great need for immediate action upon the peace treaty, and most earnestly appeals to them, personally and individually, to put beyond them all political and partisan consideration, and in humanity's name and in the interest of the world's commerce, industry, and finance make an honest and strenuous endeavor to harmonize existing differences now preventing action, to the end that a compromise may be immediately reached that will command the two-thirds vote of the Senate necessary for ratification; and be it further

Resolved, That the President of this chamber be, and hereby is, requested to immediately transmit to the President of the United States and to every Member of the United States Senate a copy of these resolutions.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, the other day the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] lectured the Senate for not expediting the consideration of the railroad bill. The Senator from Alabama then opposed the taking up of the sugar bill because of the paramount importance of the railroad bill; and then the Senator from Alabama proceeded to make a partisan speech—he admitted it was a partisan speech—upon the peace treaty, and the Senate that day lost about two hours in the consideration of the railroad bill because of the injection of this question into the Senate at that time by the Senator from Alabama. The Senator from Alabama again this afternoon injected this question into the Senate, and again we are losing about two hours in the consideration of the railroad bill; and with all due respect to the Senator from Alabama, it does seem to those of us who have listened to his speech that it has been an afternoon of political sharpshooting rather than a manifestation of any sincere desire to expedite the consideration and disposition of the peace treaty. I am only going to say one word upon the subject, Mr. President, in reply to what the Senator from Nebraska has said, and a word as to what the Senator from Alabama has said.

The Senator from Nebraska knows full well that during the time these reservations were under consideration and being prepared, not by the enemies of this treaty but by the friends of the treaty who desired ratification with proper reservations, he absolutely declined, upon behalf of the friends of the treaty upon the other side of the aisle, even to consider reservations; and it ill becomes the Senator from Nebraska to charge the Senator from Massachusetts with bad faith in not consulting him and the other Democratic Senators with reference to these reservations. Unless he would have made a different reply to the Senator from Massachusetts than he made to many of us who approached him upon that subject, he would have told the Senator from Massachusetts, as he told many other Republican Senators, that the time had not arrived when he could consider reservations at all.

Now, just one other word.

The fact is that these reservations were prepared by friends of the treaty, they were adopted by the Senate, and the President of the United States declined to consider them. He sent a note to the Senator from Nebraska, to be read to the Democratic conference, saying that these reservations nullified the treaty. Now, the President of the United States having said that, and especially since the Senator from Alabama says that he is willing to vote for the ratification of the treaty under any conditions that the Senator from Massachusetts and the President may agree upon, it is up to the President of the United States. Most of the Senators upon the other side seem willing to abdicate their function under the Constitution to advise the President with reference to treaties; it is up to the President of the United States, inasmuch as he has said he would not accept these reservations, to indicate to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], who represents him, what he is willing to take; and until he does that it is useless for anybody upon this side of the aisle to make any effort of any kind whatever.

The Senator from Alabama suggests a committee on conciliation, and in the same breath he says the consultation should be with the President of the United States. I want to ask the Senator from Alabama whether he or the Senator from Nebraska is not the one to consult the President of the United States; and, if he has any proposition to offer, let either one or both of them make it to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and they know that any definite proposition they have to make will receive consideration on this side.

The Senator from Nebraska refers to the reservations that he offered on the last day of the session as an offer of compromise, when the Senator knows that the crucial reservation in this entire matter is the reservation upon article 10, and he knows that the reservation that he offered upon that article is nothing but a sham, and that it leaves the obligation under article 10, with his reservation adopted, exactly as it stands without any reservation whatever. Why, Mr. President, if there are to be offers of compromise upon the other side—and I hope there will be; there ought to be, and there ought to be now—they must not be sham offers of compromise. They must be offers in good faith.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, what has the Senator to say concerning the published statement of his leader that the reservations, as drawn by him, represent the irreducible minimum? Does that indicate that there is any possibility of a compromise? Has not the Senator from Massachusetts first boasted that the issue must go into the next campaign, and then did he not, upon the 1st of December, come out with a statement, published in all the newspapers, to the effect that no compromise was possible; that the resolution must be taken exactly as proposed by the majority, and as voted for by 39 Members; that it represented the irreducible minimum, and that no compromise was possible; that the President must take that or lose the treaty? Does the Senator think that after that statement was made there is much opportunity on this side for securing a compromise?

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator from Nebraska believe that is the position of the Senators on this side of the aisle?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not like to doubt that it is the position of the Senator from Massachusetts. This is an authorized statement which I understand the Senator from Massachusetts makes.

Mr. LENROOT. Then I should like to ask the Senator, if he believes that, and the Senator from Alabama believes that, and if they believe that there is no possibility of a compromise on this side of the aisle, why are they taking the time of the Senate in delaying the consideration of the railroad bill?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. For myself, I can say that I am perfectly willing to believe that those are the views of the Senator from Massachusetts, but I certainly have a large hope that they do not represent the views of all the Senators on the other side of the aisle. I have had the impression, and I still cherish the hope, that there are enough Senators on the other side of the aisle to respond to the overwhelming public demand of the United States for a compromise. The Senator from Massachusetts may adhere to this position, but I hope that even his adamant will may give way not only to the public opinion of the country but, as I believe, to the sentiment which has developed on the other side of the aisle.

In view of the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts, however, I do not see that it lies in the mouth of the Senator from Wisconsin to twit us with failure to offer compromise. It was from the other side that the action was taken to make the treaty impossible of reconsideration by the Senate. It was from the other side that the resolution for sine die adjournment came, when we were urging opportunity for a compromise.

It was from the other side that the votes came which laid on the table the resolution of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] proposing a committee on conciliation and agreement. How can we doubt, in view of all these experiences, that the sentiment of the other side, as well as the sentiment of the leader of the other side, is not very favorable to compromise?

Mr. LENROOT. Again, then, I ask the Senator from Nebraska, what is the use of his occupying the time of the Senate? But the Senator from Nebraska knows that is not so. The Senator from Nebraska knows that the Senator from Massachusetts has stated that he and the other Senators on this side of the aisle are ready to consider any proposition of compromise that the other side has to make.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am very glad to hear it. That is the first positive statement on the subject that I have heard; and I hope the Senator not only represents his own opinion but represents the opinions of enough Senators on the other side to make a compromise possible.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me one moment, I said over and over and over again to-day that we would listen to and consider any proposal the other side had to make.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, Mr. President, that is a very mild statement—that you will listen to any proposal for a settlement. There is nothing mild about this statement as published. What the Senator from Massachusetts now says differs materially from what the Senator from Wisconsin stated, and what the Senator from Massachusetts has just stated is quite in accordance with what he stated on the 1st of December, when Congress met.

He said:

Those reservations, the work of months, represent the views of the United States Senate—

Of course he is mistaken about that. They did not represent the views of the United States Senate, as the vote showed. They did not even represent the views of the majority of the United States Senate, as the vote showed—and, in my judgment, of a vast majority of the people of the country. They constitute the irreducible minimum.

That means they can not be changed.

Immaterial verbal changes would be foolish and needless. If the President desires to have prompt ratification of the treaty with Germany, he has only to accept the reservations as they stand. We desire final action, as I have said, but action must be based on the acceptance of the reservations as they are.

That sounds very final to me, and if the Senator from Wisconsin has a basis for the hope which he expresses and the proposition which he makes, I am very glad to know it. Certainly, I could not derive it from the statements of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I am not going to violate any confidences, but if the Senator from Nebraska will formulate and present a proposition for settlement such as a very large number of Democratic Senators have said they will be glad to see incorporated in the resolution of ratification, I want to assure the Senator that there is a very large probability that we will be getting together, and very soon. But if we must rest entirely upon the opinion of the President of the United States, and if the President of the United States will be unwilling to change his opinion in the slightest degree so as to accord with the overwhelming sentiment of the country, then, of course, I concede that it is hopeless to expect any ratification of the treaty. If the President of the United States will, in the slightest degree, attempt to accord his will with the will of the overwhelming sentiment of the country we will get together.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I have only a word to say. I had finished my remarks on this subject, but the Senator awhile ago referred to my position yesterday, when I insisted that the railroad bill should stay before the Senate. I still occupy that position. I think the railroad bill is the most important piece of legislation before the country except the treaty of peace. Nothing is more important than that our country should be at peace.

The Senator says that I have indulged in political debate. Possibly I have. I do not indulge in it often. But I think I am justified in indulging in a political debate on this subject, not as to what is in the treaty, not as to whether the position of the Senator from Massachusetts or the position of the President of the United States is correct, but in a political debate on the subject that the majority party in this Chamber have gone to sleep at the switch; that they hold the responsibility of action in this matter and are not acting. Now, so far as I am concerned, until the treaty is ratified or disposed of in some way, in season and out of season, when the opportunity presents itself, I propose to call the attention of the Senate and the country to the fact that there is no affirmative action coming from the other side.

Oh, the Senator says that it is up to the Senator from Nebraska or the President of the United States to come in all humbleness to the other side of the Chamber and propose concessions; or that the other side of the Chamber is willing to act when they are informed by us what is the position of the President of the United States. It seems to me, Mr. President, that that is the most remarkable position for a party in power to take that I have ever known in the history of legislative government. I served with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] at the other end of the Capitol some years ago, when the positions were reversed, when my party was in power in the House and his party was in power in the White House, and there were differences that arose, as they do now, between the House and the President. I do not recall, and I am sure that the Senator from Wisconsin does not recall, any time when the leadership of the majority party then in the House of Representatives, the party to which I belong, called on the minority leadership to negotiate the passage of bills with the Republican President. The negotiations that took place between us were between the responsible leadership of the House and the responsible President. This side of the Chamber is not responsible for the transaction of business in the Senate. We should, of course, cooperate with the majority side when they are right, and they will be right if they attempt to bring about peace in the world, and we should cooperate with them; but the responsibility for initiating action does not rest on the minority party.

Mr. KNOX and Mr. LENROOT addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). Does the Senator yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama has twice referred to the fact that nothing constructive has been suggested from this side and that the responsibility for there not being a technical determination of the peace of the world therefore rests upon us. I want to ask the Senator from Alabama if he will join in a unanimous-consent agreement to pass without amendment or debate the first paragraph of a resolution that I offered November 6, 1919, to this effect; and I might say that there is abundant precedent for a partial ratification of treaties:

Resolved, That the Senate of the United States unreservedly advises and consents to the ratification of this treaty in so far as it provides for the creation of a status of peace between the United States and Germany.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As far as my own position is concerned, I will advise the Senator what it is, if he wants to know it. Of course, that does not commit anybody but myself. I do not know what the position of the President is, or what is the position of my colleagues, and that is why you can not do anything when the other side of the Chamber says they will not attempt to conciliate. But I will answer the Senator's question, so far as I am concerned, and it goes no further than my own position. I am originally for the unqualified ratification of this treaty of peace, so as to bring immediate peace between this country and Germany. But if there is no other way to get peace between this country and Germany, in order that the world may be at peace, I would go this far, and I think it is substantially in accord with what the Senator has proposed. I would be willing by reservation, if there is no other way, and the President of the United States is willing to accept it, to strike out of the treaty of peace all clauses relating to the league of nations, so far as we are concerned, not compelling the countries of Europe that have accepted the treaty, that have the league of nations in existence and are functioning under it, to agree to it, as the first clause of the Lodge resolution required them to do, but I mean so far as the United States alone is concerned I would be willing to agree to a reservation to strike out every clause that relates to the league of nations, ratify the balance of the treaty of peace entirely, and have the peace of the world, with the league of nations existing as to all other countries, and then leave it to the people of the United States to determine whether they would elect a Congress to ask that they be admitted into the league in the future or a Congress that would declare it to be the policy of the country to stay out. That is my answer as to my position.

Mr. KNOX. I congratulate the Senator from Alabama upon his courageous, his patriotic, and his wise conclusion. Then he would be willing to do just exactly what the second provision of this resolution stipulates, that we should enter the league of nations as a consulting member. My reading of the European press within the last week or 10 days indicates that the only disappointment they are expressing over there is that they will be without the advice and counsel of the United States. Now, let us unanimously declare the war to be at an end; unreservedly declare that the war be at an end. Let us then join, as a consulting member, the league of nations, with the probability that as time goes on it will be amended in such a way that we would be willing to become a full member of the league of nations, and you have the whole proposition solved.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that I do not want it understood that I am not in favor of ratifying the treaty of peace with a league of nations in it; but in order to get peace, I would be willing to vote for a resolution that excluded it for the time being, and left it to the country to determine whether they want to go into it in the future or not.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will yield.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask the Senator if he is willing to go as far as that, why is he not willing to ratify the treaty with the reservations that were adopted by the Senate?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Because they emasculated the whole treaty. The President was exactly right when he said that the Lodge reservations nullified the whole treaty, not only for us but for the world. That is the reason I was opposed to them. I am not in favor, and I did not say so, of destroying the league of nations to keep the peace of the world. The proposal of the Senator from Pennsylvania is a very different proposal from the proposal of the Senator from Massachusetts. One would destroy the league of nations in its entirety. One would emasculate it, so far as the world is concerned. The proposal of the Senator from Pennsylvania would leave the league of nations intact, and leave it to the future determination of the people of the United States as to whether they would become parties to the league or stay out of the league.

I would be willing to purchase peace by reserving the question as to whether we should become parties to the league of nations until the people of the United States could act on it. But the proposal of the Senator from Wisconsin would not only emasculate the league for us but it would destroy the existing organization.

Mr. LENROOT. The reservations do not affect in the slightest degree the relations of the other nations to the league. The reservations only do partially what the Senator from Alabama now says he is willing to do wholly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not at all. They require the other countries of the world, at least three of them, to agree to it.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. KNOX. Or, rather, ask him if he will not definitely answer my previous question. That is, will he, as in executive session, join in a unanimous-consent agreement to pass the first paragraph of the resolution I have suggested?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. So far as I am concerned, I would. I can speak for nobody but myself.

Mr. KNOX. I shall give the others the opportunity later on.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. So far as I am concerned, I want peace. I could not get peace the way I want it. The first proposal of the resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania does not kill the league of nations. It merely leaves us out for the time being. It will leave it to the people of the United States in the future to determine the position of this country in the matter, and I am perfectly willing, so far as I am concerned, to purchase peace at that price. I think that when there are men here who are willing to surrender their own views and their own positions to that extent to bring their country to peace, the position now occupied by the majority party in this Chamber, denying any opportunity to secure peace on any terms, is not justified, and can not be justified by the people of the country.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, it is very distressing to listen to the wailings that come after a funeral, especially after we have had an interim where other matters were concerned; but I suppose a wake has to be held over the corpse and almost daily grief is expressed over the infanticide which was committed by our friends across the aisle under the written orders of their chief.

However, the distress which I feel over such a condition is somewhat relieved by the naïve appeal made by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. The proposal that the Senate having repeatedly voted that it was the sense of the Senate that those 14 reservations were the irreducible minimum which, in the opinion of the Senate, would make it safe for the United States to enter the league, should enter upon the somewhat humiliating task of beseeching somebody to appoint a committee of humiliation or conciliation to compromise what they said was the irreducible minimum, so that the infanticides might in some way escape from the predicament in which they find themselves involved by having obeyed the orders of their leader, is truly touching.

I hate to be drawn into this intricate controversy, and I fear that I can not administer any balm to the lacerated feelings of the gentlemen attending the wake, especially if it is to be held every afternoon while the railroads are side-tracked and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] frets himself away in the delusion that he is going to pass the bill that particular afternoon.

I know it is the end of the week, and we had all hoped to be out of this, but we ought to console ourselves over the delay of the railroad bill by the thought that compared with the sufferings we endured while we were breaking the heart of the world it is a mere bagatelle. It is a great relief to me to breathe the clear atmosphere of the soft-coal smoke of the railroads, even if the strike is on, for a brief period in the interim of treaty talk.

In passing, I want to express my sorrow that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] should have seen fit to rise a few minutes ago and state that the leader of the Democratic Party, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], had berated the Republican Party about their delay in bringing forth this relief, and that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], whom the herald angels were singing was to be the leader, had talked conciliation, and no motion or life had been visible out of all these valuable suggestions that had been heard. I hope the Senator from Arkansas was accurately posted as to who was the head, and that the herald angels had accurately diagnosed the situation which lies as yet in the womb of the future.

But there will be no committee of conciliation on the remains which were interred here before we took the recess. As the Senator from Alabama has wisely and truthfully remarked, there are two parties to the making of a treaty in this country, at least. One is the Senate and the other is the President, and, as the Senator says, each have one vote. The Senate has voted, and the treaty, so far as the position of it here in the Senate is concerned, is dead, subject to withdrawal of the remains by the President. If he wants back at the White House this defunct piece of paper with some printing on it, all he has to do is to send over here for it. We will give it to him with great pleasure. Then, if he is firmly set that the country is so overwhelmingly for it as that it will pass if he sends it back, he can retransmit it here.

But it is said by some of the Senators across the aisle that there is no use trying to do anything about the matter until we know whether the President will accept what we do, and I think very likely that is true.

But the Senator from Alabama, with all his appreciation of delicate humor, will not charge us with the duty of ascertaining what the President will do or what he will think about any proposition connected with the treaty.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senator will allow me——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course, there may be a new parliamentary procedure, and there may be new parliamentary tactics, but when once I occupied the position that the Senator from Massachusetts now occupies or a relative position, and it was necessary for me to ascertain what should be done in the public interest, I called at the White House and reached several conclusions, sometimes conclusions that my distinguished friend from Connecticut could not agree to when the Republican President and the Democratic leader had reached their conclusions. Nevertheless the conclusions were finally written into law in the interests of the country.

Of course, we do not control the majority of this body. The treaty on the table is dead as long as your majority says it is dead, and only that long. It will be alive when your majority says it is alive. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] has made a suggestion so far as getting peace is concerned that he will go that far. I would like to ask the Senator from Connecticut if he would go that far?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I was coming to that, but in order to relieve the apprehensions of the Senator from Alabama I will say yes; I would.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is all right. Then there is the opportunity. Why should you close the door? Why should you have closed the door?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have not closed any door.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. You say the treaty is dead.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; I say that the remains that you slaughtered still lie here.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not surprised at all that the Senator is trying to pass his corpse to us. He can revive his corpse, however.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. "Shake not thy gory locks at me." I am not the father of the bastard. The Senator has made me anticipate myself in what I was about to say. I differ with him in his diagnosis of the parliamentary situation about the treaty. It is a curious fiction or theory or fantasm of the imagination which has been let loose upon us in relation to this particular treaty, that no matter how many times you kill it, it is livelier after its last death than it was before it was killed.

I know of no proceeding requiring a two-thirds vote of the Senate which, when it fails to get the two-thirds vote, is not terminated. The rule requires that if you want to suspend a rule you have to get a two-thirds vote. I in my innocence have always hitherto supposed that when I moved to suspend the rules and they called the roll, and I did not get my two-thirds vote, that I did not get the rule suspended. Not at all! The Senator from Alabama would say that is only one try. You can make it as many times as you have the mind to until you quit. You are not beaten when you are defeated. It is only "Heads I win, tails you lose." A treaty can not be defeated. Whenever you defeat it you simply open the door for another vote on it, and whenever we get a two-thirds vote the treaty is ratified, but when we do not get the two-thirds, far be it from us to admit it is dead. It is only a wicked partisan spite in some way that will claim, if you do not get your two-thirds under the Constitution, that you do not ratify your treaty.

The Constitution provides that if the President returns a bill to Congress without his approval and states his objections, which process is called a veto, that it may be passed over his veto if each House shall so declare by a two-thirds vote, but if you do not get your two-thirds vote you do not pass it over his veto, and that is settled. But when the Constitution says you have to get the votes of two-thirds of all the Senators present in order to ratify a treaty and you do not get that, it does not mean you have not ratified the treaty. The treaty is right there somewhere on the President's desk, and can be called up at any time. I should like to know how it can be called up at any time by either a majority vote or a two-thirds vote, as the Senator from Florida has ingeniously suggested. The treaty is dead, just like a bill on the calendar that has been voted on and voted down. It is not necessary to take the piece of paper upon which the defeated bill is written and order the Sergeant at Arms to put it in the furnace of the Capitol and burn it up in order to kill the bill.

The thing is dead so far as the Senate is concerned. It is immaterial how many informal outside nonpartisan committees of conciliation travel back and forth among the cloakrooms here. Anybody can make the point of order that the treaty has been voted on and lacked a two-thirds vote, and therefore it is dead.

Coming now to the question of the Senator from Alabama as to the proposal of the Senator from Pennsylvania, I have said from the beginning that with the whole country crying for peace when the country was divided and split into hostile camps almost, and conscientiously so, upon the question of the wisdom of projecting this great country, removed 3,000 miles by an ocean from the other members of the league, it was the essence of cruelty and the height of folly to put this country into that league. When that question was presented the country split on it, and it is folly to defer peace and say that the world can not have peace until we agree upon a split question.

Why, Mr. President, I am convinced that Congress has no authority to ratify such a treaty as this; that the Constitution gives us no power to make any contract like this, designed not to make war under a constitutional provision, but to eternally preserve the peace and take all measures that some council sitting abroad shall say are necessary to preserve peace all over the world. I do not think we have that constitutional authority. We know that families are rent, churches and societies and political parties are split all through the country over the advisability of plunging this country into the league. I will not use the term which the Senator from Nebraska used concerning the Senator from Massachusetts that the President's "imperial will" determines that he will not have any peace unless he can have his covenant also. Whether his will is imperial or not is immaterial to me, but I say that for him to take that position with the world calling for peace is not the position of a reasonable man, in my opinion. I do not believe either France or Great Britain care a fig about this thing; I think they are as badly split up over the question of the efficacy and the policy of the league of nations as we are; I think they were overpersuaded into it by the President—I say that to hold up the whole world's peace by insisting upon that without submitting the question to the country is utterly inexcusable.

Whatever the President may have thought when he negotiated the treaty, whatever he may have thought even after the warning given him in writing by more than one-third of the Senate, whatever representations he may have made to those with whom he was negotiating abroad, and however sincerely he may have been convinced that his representations were correct, he must now know—if he does not he is the only man in America who is ignorant of the fact—that he did not represent the views of America when he said he represented the overwhelming wishes of America.

I am no hand to prophesy majorities; it may be that he represented a majority, but I do not believe he did. I believe that this matter should go to the polls on the naked question of whether we should enter the league of nations or not after peace has been decided. I do not believe a single State in this Union would authorize the execution of any such document as this. I do not believe there would be a corporal's guard of voters, when you got through with the debate on the stump, in favor of it in a single State. However that may be, that is a question of opinion also.

I am perfectly aware that it is very easy for each of us to say that whatever he thinks is the overwhelming sentiment of the American people. Both political parties think that every time they enter a campaign but one of them is always wiser when it comes out. So I am not very much intimidated when Senators stand up here and shake their fists at me and tell me I am thwarting the overwhelming sentiment of the American people. That is mere assertion and, I think, false. At any rate, the American people have not had a chance to express their opinion on this matter.

But I would say, as I have said from the beginning, let us have peace in whatever constitutional way it may be had. Leave the nations of Europe their league of nations; they have organized it. Let them ratify their German treaty over there; let them set up their league. Then, as the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] has said, get the peace treaty ratified or establish peace by joint resolution, unless the President should veto it—and I do not know as to that—and then submit to the people the question whether or not they want to join the league. I should think that was a very common-sense thing to do.

From the beginning, ever since the President submitted the treaty to us, I have said that what is holding up peace is not the Senate but is the President's insistence that we shall not have peace unless we have it with his covenant of the league of nations in it. Under the existing situation, however firmly he may be satisfied in his own opinion—and, after all, he is only one man—however satisfied he may be that we ought to enter the league, I do not think that he ought to take the position that he will deny his own country peace unless they will take something which they do not want.

We do want peace. Let other nations set up their league themselves in Europe, and then let the American people instruct their next Congress, at the same time they elect the next President, whether they would like to have this country enter the league or not. Is not that fair? Could ever a question be conceived of upon which it was more proper to consult the people of this great country than a question of whether or not they shall be forced into a foreign alliance?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him a moment——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand he says that he is in favor of the proposal which the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] made and that some other Senators are in favor of it?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. We may differ as to what the final verdict of the American people may be, but I am sure that my friend from Connecticut has courage enough to submit it to the verdict of his people.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would be willing to submit it to mine.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It would not take any courage at all to do that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If that is the case, why should we continue to talk and say the treaty is dead? Why should we not appoint a committee on conciliation, right here in the Senate, and allow the Foreign Relations Committee to take the treaty up and see if we can not bring the treaty before the Senate and get action in the interest of the American people? Why should we continue to throw rocks at each other, when a way is pointed out?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I would not throw even a clamshell at the Senator from Alabama. [Laughter.] All I can say is that the Senator knows perfectly well that, although sometimes I get pretty cross at the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], I never would want to inflict upon him the penalty of sending him down to the White House to talk about this treaty with the President. [Laughter.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Somebody has got to do it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I know.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Let the duty rest on the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I suggest to the Senator from Alabama that he go.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I should be very glad to do so, if it were my duty to go, but it is not.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I know the Senator would.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The responsibility and duty rest on the Senator from Massachusetts. There is no question about that.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course, opinions may differ about that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator from Massachusetts is the majority leader in this body and is supposed to represent it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the Senator from Alabama can induce the Senator from Massachusetts to do that, I want to reserve a seat. [Laughter.] But the Senator from Nebraska has been there and knows as much, I presume, as any of his colleagues about the President's view concerning this matter; and if the Senator from Alabama is willing to take the view of the Senator from Nebraska about it I do not believe he would take the view of the Senator from Massachusetts, even if the Senator from Massachusetts should be competent to present his views when he got back here.

But whatever the facts about that matter may be, the Senator from Alabama has touched a fact, in my opinion, when he says that there is no use for his friends on the other side to tell us what they will agree to unless they know whether or not they can deliver the goods, because if they should appoint members of a committee on conciliation and they should agree to the very plan that the Senator from Pennsylvania and the Senator from Alabama have just been discussing and should take it down to the President and he put his foot on it and said, "Never," I do not believe you would accomplish anything, because when they got back here——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator and I do not differ on that question. It requires a responsible authority to speak to a responsible authority to reach an agreement in the Senate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But the Senator has stated that one responsible authority is in the White House and the other is here.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The other is here.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Represented by the control of the Senate, which at this time is on the other side of the Chamber. There are Senators on this side who are willing to cooperate to get peace, but the responsibility for action rests with you, and the country is going to hold you responsible if you do not act. I am willing to yield a great deal to get peace and will go with your side of the Chamber to get it; but you can not avoid your responsibility by trying to put it on the Senator from Nebraska or on the membership of this House to initiate action. The responsibility rests with you.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, the Senator must not put me in the position of trying to avoid any responsibility. He can not put too much of the responsibility for this thing onto me. I would take the whole of it if I could, and be proud to do so, because I would let this thing stay dead just as it is, and I helped you to kill it, too; but what I say is that there is no use to talk about agreeing to such a proposition as the Senator from Pennsylvania has suggested until you know whether the President will agree to it; and certainly I assume you could easily find that out.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As a practical proposition——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But if you will make that kind of a proposition to this side of the Chamber, I will tell you in advance I will agree to it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator is now side-stepping the question, in my judgment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am not side-stepping it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senator were willing either to take a vote in this Chamber or to appoint a committee to ascertain whether there are 64 votes in the Chamber that will sustain the proposition suggested by the Senator from Pennsylvania—and it is ascertainable by a committee—for one he can count me in favor of it. He counts himself another. Now, if it is ascertained that the Senate will furnish 64 votes to ratify the treaty on that basis, the proposal can then be laid before the President; but it would be idle to go to the President and ask him to suggest it until the Senate had indicated that it was willing to accept it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I have from time to time been engaged in the business of getting 48, 64, and other numbers of Senators to do various things, and I find it is a somewhat tedious work. It would be idle to go through all that labor until you knew that the proposal had been presented to the President and met his approval.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I agree with my friend—and we have known each other for a long time——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. There is no use talking to me about a conciliation committee on reservations, because the Senator understands my personal position, which is not that of the Senator from Massachusetts at all. I simply voted for the reservations because if we have got to go into the league I want to go into it with those reservations; but I would not vote to go into it even with those reservations.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand the position of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not know what the Senator from Massachusetts may have said in some speech from which the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] quoted, claiming the Senator from Massachusetts was opposed to the ratification of the treaty even with reservations; but that is absurd, because the Senator from Massachusetts stood here openly and offered the resolution to ratify the treaty with the reservations.

All I say is that I have voted for those reservations, which are themselves compromises between the different Senators who voted for them, and I would not abate one jot or tittle from them. I am on record as having voted for every single one of them, and I did so because I thought they were vitally necessary for our protection, and there is no room for compromises with me.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As I understand the Senator's position and mine, we are at the two extreme poles of this equation. He is not in favor of the league of nations at all, while I favored the ratification of the treaty unconditionally.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Precisely.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But he and I are able to agree on a way out.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senate has been engaged in the business of "passing the buck" for practically two months. The people are anxious to secure peace and a ratification of the treaty of peace. Is it not time for the Senate to stop "passing the buck," appoint a committee of some kind to ascertain whether there is a point of view on which the treaty can be ratified, and then notify the President? If the President rejects it, that is the end of it; then that is the President's responsibility; but until we do that it is our responsibility, and we can not escape it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Oh, well, I do not consider it so at all, because I think that it is the President's business to resubmit the treaty if he wants further action on it. We have performed our duty and our function with relation to the treaty, in my opinion, and if the President wants to submit it in another form or in the same form or try it again that is his business. So the Senator will see why I differ from him about that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I have not consumed a moment's time during the discussion of this question in the Senate for two months or more, and I do not intend now to indulge in a discussion of the question, but I think the time has come when I may be pardoned for making merely a suggestion.

I have been in Congress for more than 30 years, in the House and Senate, and during that time I have never known an important bill that affected the whole country to pass and become a law without its going to a conference committee. We have been engaged for quite a while, and perhaps will be engaged for quite a while longer, in the discussion of this railroad bill. Is there a Senator here who expects that that bill shall pass the Senate and become a law without going to a conference committee, a committee composed of Members from both Houses, and the differences being worked out and compromised in that conference?

The suggestion of my colleague that a committee be appointed is nothing more than a suggestion that a conference committee be appointed or agreed to here in the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator can not recall any case where a conference committee was ever appointed until after a bill had passed the House and the Senate. This is a measure that has not passed the Senate.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understand that, Mr. President; and I take no stock whatever in all this objection that the treaty is dead, and therefore can not be considered in any form or manner. What I think the Senate ought to do is this: I think that the responsible leader on the other side, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who has charge of this measure, ought to consent informally—it does not require any action of the Senate—to the creation of such a committee as my colleague has suggested. It may be done by agreement. If he will consent to appoint five Senators from the other side, and consent that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], who represents this side, may appoint five Senators, and let them meet, go into conference, discuss this whole question, and honestly and faithfully try to compromise their differences, I believe such a committee could be appointed.

A committee of that kind is really a conference committee. It takes no formal action of the Senate to appoint such a committee. The Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Nebraska by agreement could appoint it, and they doubtless would have the consent of their colleagues. When they have appointed the committee, if they can reach an agreement, then will be the time to go to the other party to this treaty, the President, and say: "Here is what the Senate has agreed to do. Here is what we can pass. We can ratify this treaty if you will agree to the compromise that has been made and agreed upon."

What is the objection to that? Why not do that? I want to say in my place here, and I assume the responsibility for saying it, that the Senator who objects to a course like that is absolutely opposed to the ratification of this treaty on any condition whatever and that he is willing that this condition of war shall continue indefinitely. He is willing to see the business of the country go absolutely to pieces. He is willing to see the manufacturing industries of this country suspend. He is willing to see the Government of the United States lose all of its foreign markets and have no consumers except those at home. That is his position, and there is no use in his denying it, if he is not willing to agree that this conference committee shall be appointed, five to be selected on that side and five on this side, and let them get together and see if they can not work out an agreement. I believe they can; and when they have done that and have gone to the President and said, "Here is what we have accomplished; here is what we can do; are you willing?" I think he will say, "Yes."

Mr. KNOX. I ask unanimous consent, as in open executive session, for the consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let the resolution be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent, as in open executive session, for the consideration of a resolution, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate of the United States unreservedly advises and consents to the ratification of the treaty of Versailles in so far only as it provides for the creation of a status of peace between the United States and Germany.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I object, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, after first expressing my great surprise and disappointment at the objection, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a joint resolution, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 136) declaring that a state of peace exists between the United States and Germany was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That peace exists between the United States and Germany.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

RAILROAD CONTROL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3288) further to regulate commerce among the States and with foreign nations, and to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended.

Mr. CUMMINS. I call for the statement of the pending question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the pending amendment.

The SECRETARY. The pending amendment is the amendment in two parts offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS].

In the first part, on page 44, line 7, after the word "directors," it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "board," on line 18, in the following words:

At least two of whom shall be selected from the classified employees of the corporation from a list of four such classified employees certified as hereinafter provided. The commission shall prescribe the manner in which such employees shall present and certify the names of those persons who may be nominated by the employees to fill said offices. Two of said directors shall be appointed by the board. Upon all committees of the board of directors upon which power to act in any matter relating to the affairs of the corporation is conferred there shall be one director so selected from the classified employees and one director appointed by the board.

In the second part, on the same page, page 44, beginning on line 20, after the word "prescribe," it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "corporation," on line 7, page 45, in the following words:

save that the terms of not more than one of the directors chosen from the employees or appointed by the board shall expire at the same time. The compensation of the directors chosen by the stockholders and classified employees shall be fixed in the by-laws, subject to the approval of the board, having due regard to the time which they respectively give to the service of the corporation, and the compensation of the directors appointed by the board shall be fixed by the board; all such compensation and the expenses incident to attendance upon the board of directors or committees to be chargeable to the operating expense of the corporation.

Mr. KING. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Johnson, S. Dak.	Lodge	Sheppard
Bankhead	Jones, N. Mex.	McKellar	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	Jones, Wash.	McNary	Smoot
Cummins	Kellogg	Moses	Thomas
Dial	Kendrick	Norris	Trammell
Fletcher	Keyes	Overman	Underwood
Gay	King	Page	Walsh, Mass.
Gore	Knox	Phipps	Walsh, Mont.
Harris	La Follette	Pomerene	Warren
Hitchcock	Lenroot	Ransdell	Watson

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The roll call shows 40 Senators present, not a quorum. The Secretary will call the names of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. CAPPER, Mr. DILLINGHAM, Mr. KIRBY, Mr. NEW, Mr. POINDEXTER, and Mr. STERLING answered to their names when called.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] on account of a death in his family.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-six Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. What is the pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. CUMMINS. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

Mr. SPENCER, Mr. CALDER, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, Mr. SUTHERLAND, and Mr. COLT entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT] are detained on committee work.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 8, after line 9, add the following as a new paragraph:

In the case of any carrier under Federal control under said act approved March 21, 1918, where no agreement has been made by said carrier for compensation, the President shall pay to such carrier the total amount of just compensation or standard return as provided for in the first paragraph of section 1 of said act for the period under which the property of such carrier was under Federal control, in all cases where such amount may be needed to pay the interest upon bonds or other indebtedness of such carrier as the same may become due or where it may be overdue; and such payment by the President of said total amount shall not deprive such carrier of the right to present its claim for additional compensation to be determined as provided in said act.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, with regard to the amendment just offered by the Senator from Washington, I think the word "needed" in the amendment should be changed to "necessary." I take it there will be no objection to that.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have no objection to that change.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so modified.

Mr. CUMMINS. With that change, I can see no objection whatever to the amendment. I had supposed that the bill really provided for that now. It does provide for it so far as the railroads which have entered into contracts are concerned. I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. Add as a separate section at the end of the bill the following:

SEC. 50. That if any clause, sentence, paragraph, or part of this act shall for any reason be adjudged by any court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid such judgment shall not affect, impair, or invalidate the remainder of the act but shall be confined in its operation to the clause, sentence, paragraph, or part thereof directly involved in the controversy in which such judgment has been rendered.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado is, I think, a very appropriate one. It is quite common in complicated legislation of this character, and I am thoroughly in favor of it, and hope it will be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCER. I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Secretary will read.

The SECRETARY. On page 60, line 2, insert the following proviso:

Provided, That if there should arise differences between subordinate officials (and by subordinate officials is meant those heretofore classified as such by the United States Railroad Administration and such other classes as may be so designated by the board) and the railroad corporations concerning any complaint, grievances, matters, and disputes, including questions of discipline and controversies arising in ordinary railroad operations where the executive officers of the railroad corporations and the accredited representatives of the subordinate official or group of subordinate officials fail or are unable to reach a satisfactory settlement, the board is hereby authorized and directed to appoint a special board of adjustment composed of eight members, four of whom shall represent subordinate officials and four of whom shall represent railway carriers, and said special board shall have jurisdiction over controversies respecting wages and working conditions of said subordinate officials and shall have due regard for any existing agreement between any carrier and said subordinate officials, and shall certify their decisions to the board, which decisions shall take effect when approved by the board.

Whenever it shall be necessary, under the provisions of this act, to appoint such special board of adjustment, each organization of subordinate officials may nominate candidates for the memberships representing subordinate officials and the board shall appoint four members from among such nominees, and each railway carrier may nominate one candidate for the memberships representing the carriers and the board shall appoint four persons from among such nominees. If no nominations be made in either group, or if less than four nominations in either group be made, the board may, at the expiration of 15 days from said notice, appoint persons to fill the vacancies in the groups for which nominations have not been made: Provided, That the candidates to represent the carriers may be presented by the carriers jointly, and the candidates to represent the subordinate officials may be presented by the organizations of subordinate officials jointly.

If the special board of adjustment is evenly divided upon any question, the matter in dispute, together with all records of proceedings pertaining thereto, shall be referred to the board, whose decisions shall be final. The board shall certify to the commission all decisions of the special board of adjustment when approved by said board and all decisions by said board in cases referred to it promptly upon deciding the same, and said certificate shall be conclusive evidence before the commission of the matters so determined and certified.

The special board of adjustment herein provided for shall be appointed from time to time as herein provided, as occasion may require, and shall cease to exist when its action in connection with the matters for which it was created has been completed.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, when the bill was prepared in the committee the word "employee" or "employees" was used. It was supposed, I think, by every member of the committee that it would include all the employees of the corporation. It is now said, and with reason, that according to the terminology of the Interstate Commerce Commission and of the Railroad Administration the word "employee" will not be construed to mean what are construed as subordinate officials; that is, men who have some supervisory power, although quite a long way down the line, such as yard foremen, track masters, train dispatchers, and the like.

The Senator from Missouri has discussed the matter with me, and I assume the amendment is offered so that all the employees of the railroad corporation will have an opportunity to fight out their disputes with the corporation. I can see, and I think anyone can, that it would not be fair, probably, to what are known as the classified employees, that is, the regular railway unions, to have members of these other unions, who are called subordinate officials, upon the boards which are to pass upon the rights, privileges, wages, and working conditions of the classified employees.

I do not speak for any member of the committee, but for this reason I have become convinced that the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri is a proper one and ought to be adopted, at least for the purpose of putting in conference any controversy of that kind. Therefore I shall make no objection to the amendment.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I hope the matter may go over until Monday for further consideration. The Senator from Iowa has correctly stated the view of the committee as I understood it. I am sure I thought and I think every member of the committee thought that we were providing a plan for the settlement of all disputes between the company and any of its employees, and I believe that the word "employees" is comprehensive enough to include the subordinate officials.

Whether I am correct in that or not, this difficulty suggests itself to my mind: Are we entirely clear as to line of cleavage between what may be called a subordinate official and the employer? I should like to consider that a little further.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. SPENCER. The Railroad Administration as now constituted has definitely and specifically classified those who in this amendment are called subordinate officials. They consist of train dispatchers, traveling auditors, yardmasters, claim adjusters and investigators, roadmasters, storekeepers, and others of that class. Therefore the amendment provides that it shall apply only to those who have been classified by the Railroad Administration as subordinate officials and to such others as the board of transportation hereafter may put into that class.

So there can be, if I answer the Senator's question, no possible misunderstanding or uncertainty where the line of cleavage, as the Senator so well expresses it, exists. It is a definite class of men, in number somewhere between 85,000 and 110,000, who do not belong to the American Federation of Labor, who have no representation there, who are expressly denied by the Railroad Administration representation as employees, and who therefore constitute a class entirely by themselves and for whom, if no provision is made, there will be no process of adjustment of their grievances and difficulties.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator from Missouri has very satisfactorily answered the difficulty that I had in mind, and I therefore withdraw the objection which I was going to interpose to its present consideration.

Mr. WATSON. I understand there are some 425,000 employees of railroads who are not in any labor union?

Mr. SPENCER. That may be.

Mr. WATSON. They are unorganized?

Mr. SPENCER. That may be.

Mr. WATSON. Does this amendment have reference to them?

Mr. SPENCER. I think not.

Mr. WATSON. What about station agents?

Mr. CUMMINS. May I inquire what was the observation of the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. WATSON. I am trying to get at the meat of the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. SPENCER. So far as the amendment goes, it applies to a distinct recognized class of subordinate officials who are denied representation either in the American Federation of Labor or among the employees, but who are definitely described and about whose classification there is no question, but it does not make any provision for the number of employees, which the Senator characterized as 425,000, who do not belong to labor unions. Those are included in the term "employees" and are provided for by the provisions of the bill.

Mr. WATSON. Take station agents, for instance. As I understand the situation, there are 65,000 of them. Are they included in the terminology of the bill itself or within the provisions of the amendment?

Mr. SPENCER. I do not have the information as to whether a station agent is included in the classified list of subordinate officials.

Mr. WATSON. Neither have I. That is the reason why I ask the question.

Mr. SPENCER. The list of them is complete. If they do come within the list prepared by the Railroad Administration headed "Subordinate officials," they are so classified.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri a question.

Mr. SPENCER. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The purpose of the Senator's amendment, I understand, is to provide some machinery by which employees, who are not technically known as employees but subordinate officials, may adjust whatever differences may arise between them and the company.

Mr. SPENCER. Exactly.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is the point the Senator meets?

Mr. SPENCER. That is correct.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I wish to ask the Senator if he knows of any instance in the history of railroading where the so-called subordinate officials have ever had a sufficiently grave situation to cause them to act as a body or to require bodily treatment as to wages?

Mr. SPENCER. My information is that the occasion has arisen not infrequently. If the Senator will allow me, they are in this incongruous position. Under the bill boards of settlement are composed, upon the one hand, of representatives of the railroads and, upon the other hand, of representatives of the employees. The subordinate officials are not designated as employees and have no representation in the deciding board.

If the amendment were not made, when the differences of these eighty-five thousand-odd men come up they are met by a board composed, on the one hand, of representatives of the railroads who are antagonistic to them and, on the other hand, of representatives of employees who are under them and who are antagonistic to them, and they are thus compelled to submit their differences to a board upon which they have no representation whatever.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. This is the point I desire to call to the attention of the Senate: I do not know any body of men whose duties lead them more directly in touch with the company that is operating the road than the so-called subordinate officials. Day by day, almost hour by hour, they come in personal contact with the company and with the representatives of the company. You have your yardmaster, you have your trainmaster, you have your train dispatcher, who are really the officials of the transportation system. If there is a set of employees in the country whose individual work and whose relation to the company is known and recognized by the company, it is this very body of men.

I doubt very much if there is really in the history of railroading in the country a case where a serious difficulty has arisen between the company and its subordinate officials. My experience has been that they are more zealous and perhaps in a way more jealous of the prerogatives which they enjoy under the company than are some of the larger men of the company.

I know that we had a railroad strike down in my part of the country and the so-called subordinate officials seemed to pride themselves on the fact that they took off their coats and became really laborers. They went out and transferred freight, for it was at a great transfer station. They worked morning, noon, and night, and had no regard whatever for hours. Ordinarily they would perhaps have been denominated "scabs."

I doubt very much the wisdom of attempting now to put them in the category of employees and framing machinery here for attempting to adjudicate any difference that might arise between them and their company, unless there is some evidence that they are not a part and parcel of the working company itself. I do not think that we ought gratuitously to go out and attempt to frame legislation to cure a condition that at least is very remote, if, indeed, it will arise at all.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Missouri a question in reference to the amendment. It seems to me such an amendment is a very proper one, but I am wondering if it includes all the employees who are not included under the provisions of the original bill. Can the Senator say definitely whether it includes the other employees?

In other words, I think if we are going to legislate for a portion of the employees, we should see that the terms of the bill provide a proper tribunal where all the employees may go in the event of differences with their employers.

Mr. SPENCER. I am sure the Senator from Tennessee will recognize the difference between the class which is designated as "subordinate officials" and the class which is designated as "employees."

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course.

Mr. SPENCER. The amendment has nothing to do with the latter, but applies entirely to the former. It is intended to provide for the classes of railroad operatives who can fairly be designated as subordinate officials, and in order to make it doubly sure it is provided that it shall apply to those who have been so designated as subordinate officials by the Railroad Administration. Then, if by chance there might be any single class that has been omitted, the amendment provides, in order to make it perfectly comprehensive, that it shall also apply to such others of that designation as may be hereafter specified by the board of transportation.

Mr. McKELLAR. In other words, as the Senator understands the amendment, it provides that the interests of all subordinate officials and all employees shall be under the transportation board?

Mr. SPENCER. So far as the subordinate officials are concerned, the Senator is quite right. It is intended to deal only with that class of subordinate officials.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit an inquiry?

Mr. SPENCER. Certainly.

Mr. KING. The pending measure provides instrumentalities—boards, agencies, appellate tribunals—for the purpose of determining disputes with reference to wages, hours of labor, working conditions, and so forth. Why may not those boards as constituted in the bill meet the conditions to which the Senator refers, or if they are not comprehensive enough why may they not be expanded in some way, their powers increased or the personnel changed in some particulars, in order to meet the exigencies which the Senator has in mind?

Mr. SPENCER. That is the very purpose of the amendment.

Mr. KING. It seems to me the Senator is seeking to create another board or additional machinery, notwithstanding the very elaborate provisions which are found in the bill, to settle labor disputes and controversies between employees and those who are denominated officials working for the Government.

Mr. SPENCER. It was to obviate the very wise suggestion of the Senator from Utah that the amendment was so drawn that there should be no special additional board created.

The board provided for in the amendment is not a permanent board with permanent salaries, so that there is no additional machinery added. It is a temporary board of adjustment that is provided to meet situations as they may arise, and when the occasion for which they have been appointed has ended, the board itself drops out of sight.

Mr. KING. Let me ask the Senator another question, if I may. Will this amendment, if it should be adopted, compel the persons whom he has in mind to join a union or to create an organization of their own, either affiliated with the American Federation of Labor or with some other organization?

Mr. SPENCER. I think most of them are already organized into unions of their own, but not in affiliation with the American Federation of Labor, for when they formed their organizations, having in mind their general welfare and the betterment of their wages and working conditions, the American Federation of Labor said, "You can not come in with us, for you are not employees, and we will not have any organization with us that represents even subordinate officials. We deal with employees only and we want no unions of officials or of subordinate officials." Therefore this class is not in affiliation with the American Federation of Labor, and there is no provision for a strike under their form of organization. I repeat that the most of them, if not all of them, do have organizations of their own to promote their welfare and their general working conditions.

Mr. KING. I desire to ask one other question, with the permission of the Senator. Are not their relations such with reference to their employers that they are brought in contact with them, so that the principle of collective bargaining is not involved and the reasons which justify and, according to some, demand the organization of labor do not exist in this instance?

Mr. SPENCER. I should say emphatically not. I think the Senator will realize, if he will recollect the history of the past with regard, for example, to yardmasters or to yard foremen or to train dispatchers, who constitute a class by themselves and are subordinate officials, that there have been many occasions, as I attempted to say when the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] interrupted me, when they had real grievances that ought to have been considered and passed upon by some fair tribunal that could arbitrate the matter. It is such a tribunal that this amendment seeks to provide.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, my attention has been called, in connection with the amendment just agreed to, to the fact that no provision has been made for a temporary clerical force or for compensation for the board during the time of their operation; and, after consultation with the chairman of the committee, if there be no objection I present an additional clause to be added to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote whereby the amendment just adopted was agreed to will be reconsidered. The Chair hears none. Now, the Senator from Missouri offers an amendment to the amendment which he has heretofore proposed.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I propose to add to the amendment the following clause:

The compensation of such special board of adjustment, together with such clerical, stenographic, or other assistance as may be necessary, shall be provided by the board in such amount and under such regulations as to the board may seem wise.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I understood the Senator to say that it was not intended by his amendment to provide compensation for the board which the amendment created.

Mr. SPENCER. That was, doubtless, because of my inability to make myself clear.

Mr. THOMAS. No.

Mr. SPENCER. What I intended to say, and what I thought I had said, was that there was no permanent board or permanent compensation provided for. Of course, the Senator from Colorado will recognize—no one better than he—that if this board is called into existence there would undoubtedly have to be stenographic, clerical, or other assistance.

Mr. THOMAS. I was struck with my understanding of the Senator's statement, because of its uniqueness. I do not know of any board appointed by the provisions of any Federal law that sooner or later does not receive compensation.

Mr. SPENCER. I fear it would be so unique as to be almost unthinkable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri offers an amendment to his amendment, which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add as a separate paragraph at the end of the amendment:

The compensation of such special board of adjustment, together with such clerical, stenographic, or other assistance as may be necessary, shall be provided by the board in such amount and under such regulations as to the board may seem wise.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. KING. I offer two amendments to the pending bill and ask that they be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered.

Mr. CALDER. I offer an amendment to the bill which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New York will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 76, after line 4, it is proposed to insert a new section, to be temporarily numbered section 34½, to read as follows:

SEC. 34½. That the first paragraph of section 1 of the act to regulate commerce, as amended, be further amended by striking out the words "natural or" after the second occurrence of the word "except" in such paragraph.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, the amendment is to section 1 of the commerce act, which provides, among other things, that there shall be included within the purview of the act transportation of oil or other commodities except water and except natural or artificial gas. I propose to strike out the words "natural or" which, if the amendment is agreed to, will permit the Interstate Commerce Commission to have control, to the limited extent given in the section referred to, of artificial gas.

The reason for this amendment is that there are a number of States in the Union where artificial gas is produced and transported into other States where local public service commissions have no control over it. This proposed legislation has been urged by many interests throughout the country, and I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. POMERENE. Why does the Senator include artificial gas within the provisions of the commerce act and not include natural gas?

Mr. CALDER. I am perfectly willing, if the Senator desires, to amend my amendment, also to strike out the words "artificial gas."

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not understand that the amendment of the Senator from New York does include artificial gas.

Mr. CALDER. It does not.

Mr. CUMMINS. The commerce act as it is now excludes both natural and artificial gas from its operation. The amendment offered by the Senator from New York is to strike out the words "natural or" in the exception, which would leave companies for the distribution of natural gas within the operation of the interstate-commerce act and subject to the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission. That is the effect of the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

Mr. CALDER. That is correct.

Mr. KELLOGG. May I ask the chairman of the committee a question?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. KELLOGG. This subject was considered by the committee, and it was not thought wise for the committee to include in the bill provisions for the control of the gas companies of the country, including natural-gas lines and artificial-gas lines. Is the chairman prepared now to say that the gas companies that are under control of local or State authority, and usually of city authority, shall be turned over to the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not. I told the Senator from New York that the question had been before the committee. The Senator from Minnesota will remember that one of the reasons given for the inclusion of natural gas within the jurisdiction of the commission was that, we will say, from Ohio—I am not sure whether it is Ohio or Pennsylvania—wherever, anyhow, natural gas is produced, it had been piped across the river into the State of New York and was being used in Jamestown, N. Y., for instance, and that the people of the State in which the gas was produced felt that, in view of the rapidly diminishing supply of natural gas, it ought to be kept within the States in which it was produced, and, therefore, are prepared to stop the distribution of the gas into the State of New York from either Ohio or Pennsylvania; I do not remember which State.

Mr. CALDER. Pennsylvania.

Mr. CUMMINS. The committee considered that, and it came to the conclusion not to change the law in that respect; but, of course, the Senator from New York has a perfect right to appeal to the Senate to modify the law in that behalf if he so desires.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, in further support of my amendment I will say that natural gas is produced in large quantities in Pennsylvania. A number of the cities and villages in New York along the Pennsylvania border use that natural gas. The public-service commissions of New York have no control over fixing the price or examining into the quantity or quality of the gas produced and the circumstances concerning its production or its sale. The control of the public-service commission of Pennsylvania ends at the State line, and it seems to me that, at least in the case of natural gas, the Interstate Commerce Commission might be given this limited control over the product.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CALDER. Yes.

Mr. KING. If gas is produced in Pennsylvania and transmitted by pipe lines to New York for use there, obviously the municipalities or the corporations buying it would have a right to fix any terms that they pleased with the vendors.

Mr. CALDER. With the vendors, undoubtedly.

Mr. KING. They could fix the price at 80 cents a thousand feet or 50 cents a thousand feet, whatever the competitive price might be. It seems to me that they could determine the price, the same as when cattle or any other commodities are taken from one State to another. Those who seek to purchase can fix such terms as the competitive market permits them to fix.

Mr. CALDER. Yes; but, if the Senator will permit me, gas is different from cattle or lumber or any other commodity used in everyday life. It is a commodity that everyone must use; we have no way of providing natural gas in the State of New York; and this seemed to me and to the people of the portion of the State of New York using natural gas the best way to handle the situation.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CALDER. I do.

Mr. KELLOGG. Perhaps I do not understand the Senator's amendment. Does the Senator's amendment leave both natural and artificial gas carriers under the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. CALDER. No; it leaves only natural-gas carriers under their control. That is all; it does not touch artificial gas.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is hardly accurate to say it leaves natural-gas carriers under the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission——

Mr. KELLOGG. It places natural-gas carriers under their control.

Mr. CALDER. It places them under the control of the commission.

Mr. CUMMINS. Because neither artificial-gas lines nor natural-gas lines are now within the jurisdiction of the commission.

Mr. KELLOGG. I should have said it places them under the jurisdiction of the commission.

Mr. CALDER. Yes; my amendment places natural-gas carriers under the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. KELLOGG. As I understand, all the natural gas that is piped to New York is sold through the local gas companies.

Mr. CALDER. It is sold by the Pennsylvania gas companies to municipalities and citizens in New York.

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes; but through the gas companies in New York.

Mr. CALDER. Oh, no; through the gas companies in Pennsylvania?

Mr. KELLOGG. What company distributes it in the city of New York?

Mr. CALDER. It is not distributed in the city of New York, but in the cities along the Pennsylvania border, such as Jamestown, Dunkirk, and other cities. It is sold by the Pennsylvania natural-gas companies, where the gas is produced, to citizens and municipalities in New York.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CALDER. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. I thought the Senator had yielded the floor.

Mr. CALDER. I yield the floor.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the Interstate Commerce Commission is the most overworked body in the country. Its duties are far beyond the powers of the number of men composing it if they should work night and day. One of the purposes of this bill—and I think one of its commendable purposes—is to relieve that commission of a very considerable part of its duties. I do not believe that it is wise or proper to place upon the shoulders of this commission the duty of taking jurisdiction over and providing for the control and distribution of gas. It is naturally a matter of local concern, because the supplies are distributed to different communities, and is not a matter of national concern, as is the transportation system of the country. It is true that gas produced in one State and piped into another furnishes a subject for interstate control, but if the needs of the communities dependent upon such a supply of gas for illumination and heat require interstate regulation it will be far better to put it somewhere else.

I am not as familiar with the powers and jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission as is the Senator having charge of the bill or the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]; but I know enough about them to know that the tasks already imposed upon them are superhuman, and I certainly hope the Senate will not put this added burden upon an already overworked commission.

RECESS.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senators who are present, and I hope they will communicate the statement to the Senators who are not present, that on Monday I intend to ask the Senate to hold a night session for the further consideration of this bill. I think it has become necessary in order to dispose of the bill within the time in which it is absolutely imperative that it shall be disposed of one way or the other.

Having made that statement, I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock Monday morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, December 15, 1919, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, December 13, 1919.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D,. offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, our hearts go out to Thee in praise and gratitude that the dark cloud which has been hovering over us as a people is clearing away, that despondency is giving way to hope in the economical, social and business conditions.

The strike fever is abating. The unrest is waning. People are beginning to see that what hurts one hurts all and what helps one helps all, that secrecy in Governmental affairs is giving way to publicity, and truth is dawning upon our people and life is taking a larger hold upon all.

Goodness, truth, justice, equal rights are in the ascendency to the glory and honor of Thy holy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CORRECTION.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to correct the RECORD. Yesterday on the convening of the House the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] had read from the Clerk's desk a telegram in the nature of a memorial to Congress from the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. Upon the reading of that telegram the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] made this inquiry:

Do I understand that the telegram as read is an instruction from the Massachusetts Legislature?

Then later facetiously I made this statement:

I call the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], who had this telegram read, that the language of the telegram does say as follows:

"Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be and is hereby instructed respectfully"—

And so forth.

I notice that, since the telegram was printed in the RECORD, the word "instructed" was left out. As a matter of fact, the telegram did contain that word "instructed," though I am inclined to believe it was merely an error of the transcriber; but as a matter of fact it did contain the word "instructed." I have no objection to its going out; but in going out under the circumstances, without explanation, it apparently leaves the question raised by the gentleman from Ohio and myself without any foundation. I just merely call attention to the fact that the word "instructed" did appear at the time it was read, but was omitted when printed in the RECORD.

Mr. GARD. Supplementing the statement of the gentleman from Texas, I desire to state that after the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] showed me the telegram, which he obtained the right to have read and which was read, it seemed to me that the word "instructed," which was in this telegram, was inadvertently used, and very probably not in the original transcript of the message from the Massachusetts Legislature, but put in probably by the telegrapher or some one not in authority. The word "instructed" in the particular place it was in that telegram did not make good sense and did not follow connectedly the preceding and subsequent phraseology. It was a most immaterial word, and I think if it was taken out the gentleman from Massachusetts did exactly what was right, and if there be any necessity of moving any correction to make the telegram conform to the unquestioned facts I will be glad to make such motion.

Mr. BLANTON. I am raising no objection to its going out.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I think in fairness I may offer one word of explanation.. The statement of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] and the statement of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] are both entirely in accord with my understanding of the matter. I will say, however, that I asked the telegraph office to check up the telegram and verify the phraseology, and it was returned to me later in the day with the word to which both gentlemen refer, "instructed," stricken out, showing it was not in the original message or in the resolution as adopted by the Legislature of Massachusetts. And I would further say that the word was not stricken out in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at my request. It was turned in by me exactly as read, and I did not ask to have it eliminated. But, naturally, as the gentleman from Ohio so well explained, it had no purpose and no connection with the message as sent by the legislature.

AMENDMENT TO THE ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been ordered on the bill H. R. 8819, and the gentleman from Michigan had demanded the reading of the engrossed bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to withdraw that demand.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws his request for the reading of the engrossed bill. The third reading of the bill has been ordered.

The bill was read the third time.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am.

The SPEAKER. Does any member of the committee opposed to the bill desire to make a motion to recommit?

Mr. FIELDS. I desire to make a motion to recommit, but I am not opposed to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not qualify. Does any member of the minority desire to make a motion to recommit——

Mr. GARD. I am of the minority and opposed to the bill, and I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Does the gentleman from Ohio say that he is opposed to the bill?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GARD moves to recommit the bill H. R. 8819 to the Committee on Military Affairs, with instructions to report the same back instanter with the following amendment:

"For purchase of Dayton-Wright plant and real estate at Dayton, Ohio, and for construction necessary to make it suitable for the Air Service engineering experimental station, $2,740,228."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against the proposed amendment that it is not germane to the bill which was submitted to the House under the resolution brought in from the Rules Committee; that that bill does not provide for any Air Service school at Dayton, Ohio, or any such project, and that the project proposed is not germane to the purposes and scope of the bill under the rule.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, if the Chair has any doubt, I would like to be heard on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me the point of order is absolutely without merit. Here is a bill from the Committee on Military Affairs, which is a legislative committee, which provides for the purchase of certain land, Army cantonments, industrial plants, and so forth, for the military service of the country. The amendment proposes to reinsert in the bill an item that was reported out by the Committee on Military Affairs and that was stricken from the bill in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. CRISP. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. I am sure the gentleman from Georgia is mistaken, because instead of its being in the bill it was proposed on the floor of the House in the way of an amendment.

Mr. CRISP. The gentleman is just as far wrong in that as in his point of order. If he will look at the bill, he will see that it was reported out from the Committee on Military Affairs. The gentleman will find on page 10, in line 10, the following words:

For purchase of Dayton-Wright plant and real estate at Dayton, Ohio, $2,740,228.

I do not feel like consuming the time of the Speaker further, for I am sure the Speaker will overrule the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair finds the bill makes a number of appropriations for different fields, and the Chair thinks a provision for the addition of any field is not subject to a point of order, and therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. GARD. On that I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves the previous question on the motion to recommit.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays on the vote.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] to recommit the bill with instructions.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 52, noes 61.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] makes the point of order there is no quorum present. The Chair thinks no quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absent Members; those in favor of the motion will, as their names are called, answer "yea," and those opposed will answer "nay," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 153, nays 161, answered "present" 2, not voting 116, as follows:

YEAS—153.

Anthony	Dyer	Linthicum	Rainey, Ala.
Ashbrook	Evans, Mont.	Lonergan	Rainey, H. T.
Ayres	Evans, Nev.	Longworth	Rainey, J. W.
Babka	Fields	McArthur	Randall, Calif.
Barkley	Fisher	McCulloch	Rayburn
Bee	Flood	McDuffie	Rhodes
Bell	Foster	McKinley	Riordan
Benham	French	McKinley	Romjue
Benson	Fuller, Mass.	McPherson	Rose
Bland, Mo.	Gallivan	MacGregor	Rouse
Bowers	Gandy	Maher	Rubey
Brand	Ganly	Major	Rucker
Brinson	Gard	Mann, S. C.	Sanford
Brumbaugh	Garland	Mansfield	Sherwood
Byrnes, S. C.	Garner	Martin	Sims
Caldwell	Garrett	Mays	Smith, Mich.
Campbell, Kans.	Glynn	Mead	Smith, N. Y.
Campbell, Pa.	Godwin, N. C.	Merritt	Smithwick
Cantrill	Goodwin, Ark.	Michener	Stedman
Caraway	Greene, Vt.	Mondell	Stephens, Ohio
Carew	Griffin	Moon	Stevenson
Carss	Hardy, Tex.	Mooney	Stoll
Carter	Haskell	Moore, Va.	Tague
Casey	Hayden	Moores, Ind.	Temple
Chindblom	Hays	Morgan	Tillman
Clark, Fla.	Heflin	Morin	Tilson
Clark, Mo.	Howard	Murphy	Vinson
Cole	Hull, Iowa	Nelson, Mo.	Watkins
Cooper	Hull, Tenn.	O'Connell	Watson, Pa.
Copley	Jacoway	Oldfield	Weaver
Crago	Johnson, Miss.	Olney	Welling
Crisp	Jones, Pa.	Overstreet	Welty
Crowther	Kincheloe	Park	Whaley
Cullen	Kitchin	Parker	Wilson, La.
Curry, Calif.	Lanham	Parrish	Wilson, Pa.
Dent	Lankford	Phelan	Wright
Dickinson, Mo.	Larsen	Platt
Doremus	Lee, Ga.	Porter
Drane	Lesher	Pou

NAYS—161.

Ackerman	Browne	Davis, Minn.	Goodall
Almon	Buchanan	Davis, Tenn.	Goodykoontz
Anderson	Burdick	Dickinson, Iowa	Graham, Ill.
Andrews, Nebr.	Burroughs	Dominick	Green, Iowa
Bacharach	Butler	Dowell	Greene, Mass.
Baer	Byrns, Tenn.	Dunbar	Griest
Bankhead	Candler	Dunn	Hadley
Begg	Cannon	Echols	Hardy, Colo.
Black	Christopherson	Edmonds	Harreld
Bland, Ind.	Classon	Elliott	Harrison
Bland, Va.	Collier	Esch	Haugen
Blanton	Cramton	Evans, Nebr.	Hawley
Boies	Currie, Mich.	Fordney	Hernandez
Box	Dale	Frear	Hersey
Briggs	Dallinger	Fuller, Ill.	Hickey
Brooks, Ill.	Darrow	Good	Hicks
Hill	McClintic	Reed, W. Va.	Thomas
Hoch	McLaughlin, Mich.	Ricketts	Timberlake
Houghton	McLaughlin, Nebr.	Robsion, Ky.	Tincher
Huddleston	Madden	Rodenberg	Tinkham
Ireland	Magee	Rogers	Towner
Jefferis	Mann, Ill.	Sanders, N. Y.	Treadway
Johnson, S. Dak.	Mapes	Saunders, Va.	Vaile
Johnson, Wash.	Monahan, Wis.	Scott	Vestal
Keller	Moore, Pa.	Sells	Voigt
Kelley, Mich.	Mott	Shreve	Volstead
Kelly, Pa.	Mudd	Sinclair	Walsh
Kendall	Nelson, Wis.	Sinnott	Wason
Kennedy, Iowa	Newton, Mo.	Sisson	White, Kans.
Kennedy, R. I.	Ogden	Slemp	White, Me.
Kiess	Oliver	Smith, Ill.	Williams
Kinkaid	Padgett	Snell	Wilson, Ill.
Kleczka	Paige	Snyder	Wingo
Knutson	Peters	Steagall	Wood, Ind.
Kraus	Purnell	Steenerson	Woods, Va.
LaGuardia	Quin	Stephens, Miss.	Woodyard
Lampert	Raker	Stiness	Young, N. Dak.
Little	Ramseyer	Strong, Kans.	Zihlman
Luce	Randall, Wis.	Summers, Wash.
Lufkin	Reavis	Sweet
Luhring	Reed, N. Y.	Taylor, Colo.

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—2.

Emerson MacCrate

NOT VOTING—116.

Alexander	Focht	Lazaro	Sabath
Andrews, Md.	Freeman	Lea, Calif.	Sanders, Ind.
Aswell	Gallagher	Lehlbach	Sanders, La.
Barbour	Goldfogle	McAndrews	Schall
Blackmon	Gould	McFadden	Scully
Boober	Graham, Pa.	McGlennon	Sears
Britten	Hamill	McKenzie	Siegel
Brooks, Pa.	Hamilton	McKeown	Small
Browning	Hastings	McLane	Smith, Idaho
Burke	Hersman	Mason	Steele
Cleary	Holland	Miller	Strong, Pa.
Coady	Hudspeth	Minahan, N. J.	Sullivan
Connally	Hulings	Montague	Sumners, Tex.
Costello	Humphreys	Moore, Ohio	Swope
Davey	Husted	Neely	Taylor, Ark.
Dempsey	Hutchinson	Newton, Minn.	Taylor, Tenn.
Denison	Igoe	Nicholls, S. C.	Thompson
Dewalt	James	Nichols, Mich.	Upshaw
Donovan	Johnson, Ky.	Nolan	Vare
Dooling	Johnston, N. Y.	O'Connor	Venable
Doughton	Jones, Tex.	Osborne	Walters
Dupré	Juul	Pell	Ward
Eagan	Kahn	Radcliffe	Watson, Va.
Eagle	Kearns	Ramsey	Webster
Ellsworth	Kettner	Reber	Wheeler
Elston	King	Riddick	Winslow
Fairfield	Kreider	Robinson, N. C.	Wise
Ferris	Langley	Rowan	Yates
Fess	Layton	Rowe	Young, Tex.

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. NICHOLS of Michigan with Mr. HASTINGS.

Mr. KREIDER with Mr. LEA of California.

Mr. LANGLEY with Mr. LAZARO.

Mr. STRONG of Pennsylvania with Mr. HOLLAND.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee with Mr. DONOVAN.

Mr. BARBOUR with Mr. WRIGHT.

Mr. BRITTEN with Mr. WISE.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania with Mr. WATSON of Virginia.

Mr. BROWNING with Mr. VENABLE.

Mr. LAYTON with Mr. KETTNER.

Mr. LEHLBACH with Mr. JONES of Texas.

Mr. MCFADDEN with Mr. JOHNSTON of New York.

Mr. FREEMAN with Mr. SABATH.

Mr. GOULD with Mr. ROWAN.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana with Mr. MCKEOWN.

Mr. KAHN with Mr. MCLANE.

Mr. KEARNS with Mr. MCGLENNON.

Mr. KING with Mr. MCANDREWS.

Mr. BURKE with Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas.

Mr. ROWE with Mr. ASWELL.

Mr. NOLAN with Mr. IGOE.

Mr. MILLER with Mr. FERRIS.

Mr. THOMPSON with Mr. DEWALT.

Mr. COSTELLO with Mr. SUMNERS of Texas.

Mr. DEMPSEY with Mr. SULLIVAN.

Mr. MCKENZIE with Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky.

Mr. DENISON with Mr. UPSHAW.

Mr. OSBORNE with Mr. HAMILL.

Mr. ELLSWORTH with Mr. STEELE.

Mr. ELSTON with Mr. SMALL.

Mr. VARE with Mr. DAVEY.

Mr. EMERSON with Mr. DUPRÉ.

Mr. MASON with Mr. HUMPHREYS.

Mr. WARD with Mr. COADY.

Mr. RADCLIFFE with Mr. GOLDFOGLE.

Mr. MOORE of Ohio with Mr. HUDSPETH.

Mr. ANDREWS of Maryland with Mr. YOUNG of Texas.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania with Mr. ROBINSON of North Carolina.
Mr. WHEELER with Mr. CLEARY.
Mr. WINSLOW with Mr. BOOHER.
Mr. FAIRFIELD with Mr. SEARS.
Mr. RAMSEY with Mr. GALLAGHER.
Mr. YATES with Mr. BLACKMON.
Mr. HAMILTON with Mr. PELL.
Mr. HULINGS with Mr. O'CONNOR.
Mr. REBER with Mr. EAGLE.
Mr. HUSTED with Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina.
Mr. RIDDICK with Mr. EAGAN.
Mr. SIEGEL with Mr. DOUGHTON.
Mr. SMITH of Idaho with Mr. DOOLING.
Mr. WALTERS with Mr. CONNALLY.
Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota with Mr. HERSMAN.
Mr. HUTCHINSON with Mr. NEELY.
Mr. JAMES with Mr. MONTAGUE.
Mr. JUUL with Mr. MINAHAN of New Jersey.
Mr. FESS with Mr. SCULLY.
Mr. FOCHT with Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana.
Mr. WEBSTER with Mr. ALEXANDER.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, I voted "no." I am paired with the gentleman from Louisiana, Mr. DUPRÉ, and I want to withdraw my vote of "no" and vote "present."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. EMERSON, and he answered "Present."

Mr. MacCRATE. Mr. Speaker, how am I recorded?

The SPEAKER. In the negative.

Mr. MacCRATE. I want to withdraw that vote and answer "present."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. MACCRATE, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of an amendment at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent for the consideration of an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman will probably be in favor of this if he will have the courtesy to withhold his objection for a moment.

The SPEAKER. Everybody will have the right to object after it is read. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ANTHONY: On page 10, line 9, after the last period, strike out the period, substitute a colon, and insert the words:

"Provided, That such payments shall be in full for all claims and accounts against the Government of the United States."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to know just exactly what that means. What paragraph is it attached to?

Mr. ANTHONY. I was called up by the Air Service this morning, Mr. Speaker, and was informed that it would be advisable to insert that language in order to protect the Government against the possibility of having to pay any further claims for settlement.

Mr. MADDEN. That is in connection with the Curtiss-Elwood plant?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes; that is in connection with the Curtiss-Elwood plant.

Mr. CALDWELL. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman does not claim that this provision applies to any contract other than the purchase of this property?

Mr. ANTHONY. No. It is confined to the Curtiss-Elwood plant, where about $600,000 of claims are still pending, which would be wiped out by this amendment.

Mr. CALDWELL. Those being the claims that both the representatives of the Air Service and the Curtiss people in testifying before the committee said would be settled by this payment?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes. This makes sure of it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It applies to all the claims of the Curtiss Co. against the Government for the factory.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. So that the Curtiss people, if we put in this proviso, will not be able to come in and ask for anything further?

Mr. ANTHONY. That was the reason for putting it in.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Put it in, then, by all means! [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the amendment?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is the bill ordered to be engrossed and read a third time?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I would like to ask unanimous consent for another slight amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to submit another amendment.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. In the amendment offered yesterday in the committee by my colleague [Mr. MCKENZIE] the words "contained in this bill" were used, which is artificial language and should be "contained in this act." I ask unanimous consent that the word "bill" be changed to the word "act."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to substitute the word "act" for the word "bill." Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered as engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Should not the Chair state that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY], the chairman of the committee, was adopted?

The SPEAKER. The Chair so stated. The Chair asked if there was objection, and none was heard. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered as engrossed and read a third time. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Did not the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] withdraw his request for the reading of the engrossed bill?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. You can not amend the bill properly after it is engrossed and read a third time, and this is to save time and consideration when it goes to the engrossing clerk

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks for a division.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays are ordered on the passage of the bill. As many as favor the passage of the bill will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 183, nays 128, answered "present" 5, not voting 116, as follows:

YEAS—183.

Almon	Crowther	Hayden	Mansfield
Anthony	Cullen	Heflin	Martin
Babka	Curry, Calif.	Hernandez	Mays
Bankhead	Dale	Hill	Mead
Barkley	Darrow	Hull, Iowa	Merritt
Bee	Dempsey	Hull, Tenn.	Mondell
Bell	Dent	Jacoway	Moon
Benham	Doremus	Jones, Pa.	Mooney
Benson	Drane	Kelley, Mich.	Moore, Va.
Black	Dunbar	Kendall	Moores, Ind.
Bland, Mo.	Edmonds	Kennedy, Iowa	Morgan
Box	Esch	Kincheloe	Morin
Brand	Evans, Mont.	Kitchin	Mudd
Briggs	Evans, Nev.	Knutson	Nelson, Mo.
Brinson	Fields	Langley	O'Connell
Browne	Fisher	Lanham	Ogden
Brumbaugh	Flood	Lankford	Oldfield
Buchanan	Fordney	Larsen	Oliver
Byrns, Tenn.	French	Lee, Ga.	Olney
Caldwell	Fuller, Mass.	Linthicum	Overstreet
Campbell, Kans.	Gallivan	Lonergan	Padgett
Campbell, Pa.	Ganly	Longworth	Park
Candler	Garland	Luce	Parker
Cantrill	Garner	Lufkin	Parrish
Caraway	Garrett	McAndrews	Peters
Carew	Glynn	McArthur	Phelan
Carss	Godwin, N. C.	McCulloch	Platt
Casey	Goodwin, Ark.	McDuffie	Porter
Chindblom	Green, Iowa	McKiniry	Pou
Clark, Fla.	Greene, Mass.	McKinley	Rainey, Ala.
Clark, Mo.	Greene, Vt.	McPherson	Rainey, H. T.
Cole	Griffin	MacCrate	Rainey, J. W.
Collier	Hadley	MacGregor	Raker
Copley	Hardy, Tex.	Magee	Randall, Calif.
Crago	Harrison	Maher	Rayburn
Crisp	Haskell	Major	Reed, N. Y.

Riordan	Smith, Idaho	Taylor, Colo.	Weaver
Robsion, Ky.	Smith, Mich.	Temple	Welling
Rodenberg	Smith, N. Y.	Thomas	Welty
Romjue	Smithwick	Tillman	Whaley
Rose	Steagall	Tilson	Wilson, La.
Rouse	Stedman	Timberlake	Wilson, Pa.
Sanders, N. Y.	Steenerson	Vaile	Woods, Va.
Sanford	Stephens, Ohio	Vinson	Wright
Saunders, Va.	Stiness	Watkins	Zihlman
Slemp	Tague	Watson, Pa.

NAYS—128.

Anderson	Echols	Kiess	Sells
Andrews, Nebr.	Elliott	Kinkaid	Sherwood
Ashbrook	Evans, Nebr.	Kleczka	Shreve
Ayres	Foster	Kraus	Sims
Bacharach	Frear	Lampert	Sinclair
Baer	Fuller, Ill.	Lesher	Sinnott
Begg	Gandy	Little	Sisson
Bland, Ind.	Gard	Luhring	Smith, Ill.
Bland, Va.	Good	McClintic	Snell
Blanton	Goodall	McLaughlin, Mich.	Snyder
Boles	Goodykoontz	McLaughlin, Nebr.	Stephens, Miss.
Bowers	Graham, Ill.	Madden	Stoll
Brooks, Ill.	Griest	Mann, Ill.	Strong, Kans.
Burdick	Hardy, Colo.	Mann, S. C.	Summers, Wash.
Burroughs	Harreld	Mapes	Sweet
Butler	Hawley	Monahan, Wis.	Tincher
Byrnes, S. C.	Hays	Moore, Pa.	Tinkham
Cannon	Hersey	Mott	Towner
Christopherson	Hickey	Murphy	Treadway
Classon	Hicks	Nelson, Wis.	Vestal
Cooper	Hoch	Newton, Mo.	Voigt
Cramton	Houghton	Paige	Volstead
Currie, Mich.	Howard	Purnell	Walsh
Dallinger	Huddleston	Quin	Ward
Davis, Minn.	Ireland	Ramseyer	Wason
Davis, Tenn.	Jefferis	Randall, Wis.	White, Kans.
Dickinson, Mo.	Johnson, Miss.	Ricketts	White, Me.
Dickinson, Iowa	Johnson, S. Dak.	Riddick	Williams
Dominick	Johnson, Wash.	Rogers	Wilson, Ill.
Dowell	Keller	Rubey	Wingo
Dunn	Kelly, Pa.	Rucker	Woodyard
Dyer	Kennedy, R. I.	Scott	Young, N. Dak.

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—5.

Ackerman	Reavis	Reed, W. Va.	Stevenson
Emerson

NOT VOTING—116.

Alexander	Focht	Layton	Rowe
Andrews, Md.	Freeman	Lazaro	Sabath
Aswell	Gallagher	Lea, Calif.	Sanders, Ind.
Barbour	Goldfogle	Lehlbach	Sanders, La.
Blackmon	Gould	McFadden	Schall
Booher	Graham, Pa.	McGlennon	Scully
Britten	Hamill	McKenzie	Sears
Brooks, Pa.	Hamilton	McKeown	Siegel
Browning	Hastings	McLane	Small
Burke	Haugen	Mason	Steele
Carter	Hersman	Michener	Strong, Pa.
Cleary	Holland	Miller	Sullivan
Coady	Hudspeth	Minahan, N. J.	Sumners, Tex.
Connally	Hulings	Montague	Swope
Costello	Humphreys	Moore, Ohio	Taylor, Ark.
Davey	Husted	Neely	Taylor, Tenn.
Denison	Hutchinson	Newton, Minn.	Thompson
Dewalt	Igoe	Nicholls, S. C.	Upshaw
Donovan	James	Nichols, Mich.	Vare
Dooling	Johnson, Ky.	Nolan	Venable
Doughton	Johnston, N. Y.	O'Connor	Walters
Dupré	Jones, Tex.	Osborne	Watson, Va.
Eagan	Juul	Pell	Webster
Eagle	Kahn	Radcliffe	Wheeler
Ellsworth	Kearns	Ramsey	Winslow
Elston	Kettner	Reber	Wise
Fairfield	King	Rhodes	Wood, Ind.
Ferris	Kreider	Robinson, N. C.	Yates
Fess	LaGuardia	Rowan	Young, Tex.

So the bill was passed.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. SCULLY (for) with Mr. HULINGS (against).

Mr. ROBINSON of North Carolina (for) with Mr. REAVIS (against).

Mr. LEHLBACH (for) with Mr. ACKERMAN (against).

Mr. STEVENSON (for) with Mr. LAYTON (against).

Mr. DUPRÉ (for) with Mr. EMERSON (against).

Mr. LAZARO (for) with Mr. HUTCHINSON (against).

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota (for) with Mr. RADCLIFFE (against).

Mr. LAGUARDIA (for) with Mr. MICHENER (against).

Mr. LEA of California (for) with Mr. RHODES (against).

Until further notice:

Mr. BOWERS with Mr. NEELY.

Mr. BARBOUR with Mr. JONES of Texas.

Mr. FESS with Mr. CARTER.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania with Mr. COADY.

Mr. HAUGEN with Mr. DOOLING.

Mr. KING with Mr. SULLIVAN.

Mr. SCHALL with Mr. EAGAN.

Mr. SWOPE with Mr. GALLAGHER.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana with Mr. GOLDFOGLE.

Mr. REED of West Virginia with Mr. HERSMAN.

Mr. WEBSTER with Mr. KETTNER.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. MICHENER, and therefore have not voted. Had I not been paired I would have voted "yea," in support of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I voted, but I notice that I am paired.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is paired with the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. LEHLBACH.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Then I withdraw my vote and answer "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. ANTHONY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXPENDITURES IN THE WAR DEPARTMENT.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following report from the Committee on Rules, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 416.

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall take up for debate House Report No. 487 from the Select Committee on Expenditures in the War Department; that the said report, together with any minority views accompanying the same, shall then be read, and that immediately thereafter there shall be four hours of debate on the said report, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] and one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], which debate shall be confined to the subject matter of said report.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make an arrangement for time on the rule, if I can secure an agreement with the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CANTRILL]. How much time does the gentleman desire on the rule?

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman that this is such an unprecedented rule that we would like to have as much time as the gentleman can possibly give us. Of course, the time is absolutely under his control, but I hope the gentleman from Kansas will be very liberal.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Would it be agreeable to the gentleman from Kentucky if I take one hour and yield him one-half of that time?

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Speaker, in order to expedite the business of the House, if the gentleman will yield us 30 minutes of that time that will be agreeable.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I shall yield to the gentleman from Kentucky one-half of the hour to which I am entitled under the rule. I would like also to have it understood that there shall be no division or vote on the previous question upon the adoption of the rule, and I make that request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that after one hour's debate the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the rule. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, this resolution brings before the House a partial report from the committee heretofore appointed to investigate expenditures in the War Department. War is expensive, whenever or wherever waged.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I would rather not yield just now. This war has been unusually expensive. Waste follows war—waste of material, waste of money, waste of everything God and man created. This is to be expected; but war is not a license for peculation or an excuse for incompetency in the conduct of war. It does not justify anyone connected with it to show favors through which men may accumulate millions out of the war. The people of our country expected the war would be expensive. They appropriated for its conduct, all told, nearly $34,000,000,000. Between twenty-three and twenty-four billions of dollars have been expended in the conduct of the war; ten billions were loaned to our allies. These are sums so colossal that no one comprehends the figures, and generations yet unborn will be paying interest upon our national debt. Therefore, it is entirely proper that Congress, representing the American people, who have furnished the men and the money with which to conduct this war, should know something about the details of what has been done with the money furnished by them. They have a right to know something of the details of the conduct of the war, something that would indicate whether or not the men conducting it were competent for the work that they had undertaken, and it was for the purpose of enlightening the American people on these questions that this investigation was ordered. It is for the purpose now of partially advising the American people that this resolution is brought before the House in order that there may be discussion upon the evidence that has been produced before the committee of investigations showing what has been done.

I reserve the remainder of my time and yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CANTRILL].

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question before he takes his seat?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I shall have to decline to yield.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman does not want to be interrogated?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Not at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HICKS). The gentleman declines to yield. The gentleman from Kansas has consumed four minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Kenfucky [Mr. CANTRILL], to be disposed of as he may desire.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, this is such an important matter that I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Evidently no quorum is present.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas that a call of the House be ordered.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 90, noes 1.

So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Alexander	Fairfield	Kinchcloe	Sabath
Andrews, Md.	Ferris	King	Sanders, Ind.
Aswell	Fess	Kreider	Sanders, La.
Barbour	Fisher	Layton	Saunders, Va.
Barkley	Flood	Lazaro	Schall
Blackmon	Focht	Lea, Calif.	Scully
Bland, Ind.	Frear	Lee, Ga.	Sears
Booher	Freeman	Lehlbach	Sherwood
Bowers	Gallagher	McFadden	Siegel
Britten	Garland	McGlennon	Small
Brooks, Pa.	Godwin, N. C.	McKeown	Snell
Browning	Goldfogle	McLane	Steele
Brumbaugh	Goodall	McLaughlin, Nebr.	Steenerson
Clark, Fla.	Gould	Mason	Strong, Pa.
Cleary	Graham, Pa.	Michener	Sullivan
Coady	Griffin	Miller	Sumners, Tex.
Connally	Hamill	Minahan, N. J.	Swope
Copley	Hamilton	Montague	Taylor, Ark.
Costello	Hastings	Moore, Ohio	Taylor, Colo.
Crago	Hersman	Moore, Pa.	Thompson
Crisp	Holland	Neely	Treadway
Davey	Howard	Nicholls, S. C.	Vare
Davis, Tenn.	Hudspeth	Nichols, Mich.	Venable
Denison	Hulings	Nolan	Walsh
Dent	Humphreys	O'Connor	Walters
Dewalt	Husted	Osborne	Ward
Donovan	Hutchinson.	Parker	Watson, Va.
Dooling	Igoe	Pell	Webster
Doughton	James	Radcliffe	Wheeler
Drane	Johnson, Ky.	Ramsey	Wilson, Ill.
Dunn	Johnson, S. Dak.	Randall, Calif.	Winslow
Dupré	Johnston, N. Y.	Reavis	Wise
Dyer	Jones, Tex.	Reber	Yates
Eagan	Juul	Reed, N. Y.	Young, Tex.
Eagle	Kahn	Robinson, N. C.
Ellsworth	Kearns	Rowan, N. Y.
Elston	Kennedy, R. I.	Rowe, N. Y.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this roll call 285 gentleman have responded to their names, a quorum.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman from Texas will kindly withhold his point of order, the Doorkeeper will open the doors, and the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kansas to move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas will state his point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that in order for a resolution from the Committee on Rules to be in order in the House it must seek to make in order some proposed legislation or some report or resolution from some committee that calls for action by the House of Representatives. I make the point of order that the resolution brought in here by the Committee on Rules does not seek in any way to make in order the present consideration of any legislation; that it does not seek to make in order any report or any resolution from any committee which calls for action by the House of Representatives; and, that being the case, it is clearly out of order.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, if there was anything in the contention of the gentleman from Texas, the point of order should have been made when the resolution was presented rather than after a discussion of the resolution.

Mr. BLANTON. I am sure that the gentleman from Kansas does not claim that what he has said thus far would constitute any debate on any matter. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I was addressing the Chair. I did not expect any statement I make in respect to the importance of a discussion of the expenditures of the War Department being made known to the public would have any impression whatever upon the gentleman from Texas. It did impress, I think, other Members of the House. It constituted a beginning of the discussion of this resolution.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the further point of order that we ought to have a quorum here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas is out of order. The gentleman from Kansas has the floor.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. And the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas comes entirely too late, even if there were anything in it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. One point of order is before the House now.

Mr. BLANTON. We want a quorum here to hear this discussion.

Mr. WINGO. Oh, Mr. Speaker, a point of order of no quorum——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Arkansas that——

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman certainly has the right to make the point of order of no quorum.

Mr. BLANTON. We want a quorum here, to be impressed by what the gentleman from Kansas says.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this point of order is dilatory.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, we have not over 90 Members on the floor of this House right now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore The gentleman will be in order.

Mr. TILSON. The roll call just had revealed the presence of a quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will rule on the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas that it is dilatory, for the call just made discloses that a quorum is present, and the Chair will rule on the other point of order that even though it may have had merit if made in time that it comes too late, and therefore overrules that point of order.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Chair did not intend to rule that the point of no quorum was dilatory. You can make that when it is evident there is no quorum present. I think a gentleman has the right to make that at any time, and the Chair can count, and if there is a quorum present he can announce it. Now, if the Chair should make that precedent, it would be very dangerous, in that we might find ourselves without a quorum, and the Chair might simply say that the point of no quorum is dilatory.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, the roll call just now showed a quorum present, and there is no question but what the point made by the gentleman is dilatory.

Mr. KITCHIN. Of course, if business has taken place after it is announced that a quorum is present, you can make the point of no quorum.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Speaker should rule that the point of no quorum is dilatory. It has been frequently held by various Speakers that the question of a quorum being a constitutional right that the point of no quorum could not be held as dilatory. Whether the vote disclosing a quorum is present binds the Chair at that time, I do not undertake to say, though if I were in the Chair I would count. Certainly the point of no quorum can not be held to be dilatory.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has no desire, of course, to be arbitrary in his ruling, but the way it seems to the Chair is this: The point of order of no quorum was made; the roll call developed a quorum was present. Immediately the point of order was made by the gentleman from Texas that there was no quorum present——

Mr. BLANTON. I am sure the Chair would not do an injustice. I made the point of order that the rule was out of order, because it did not seek to make in order legislation or a report that asked affirmative action by the House. That was a matter which the Chair considered, and that intervened between the former determination of a quorum answering to their names. It was evident, as shown by the always just position of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], that there is no quorum present, and that it is a constitutional question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Texas allow the Chair to ask him a question, so as to straighten out this matter?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Did the gentleman from Texas make the point of order that no quorum was present immediately after the roll call or try to make the point that the motion of the gentleman from Kansas was not in order?

Mr. BLANTON. I first made the point of order that the motion of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] was out of order, for the reasons then stated by me, and then while we were discussing that the gentleman from Kansas, in an unkindly spirit—which he usually does not exhibit—said that his action in trying to let the people know about the expenditures in the War Department did not impress me, whereas it did impress me. But after he said that, I demanded a quorum here to hear him make his statement, and I made the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair was not under the impression that the position was as now stated by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]. Evidently the Chair was therefore in error, because business had intervened, and therefore the point of no quorum was in order. The Chair was under the impression that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] immediately made his point of order of no quorum after the declaration that a quorum was present. In view of the corrected impression of the Chair, the Chair will hold that the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas that no quorum is present is well taken, and the Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty-five Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Alexander	Ferris	Lea, Calif.	Rowan
Andrews, Md.	Fess	Lee, Ga.	Rowe
Aswell	Flood	Lehlbach	Sabath
Barbour	Focht	Little	Sanders, Ind.
Blackmon	Freeman	Longworth	Sanders, La.
Bland, Ind.	Gallagher	Luhring	Saunders, Va.
Booher	Gallivan	McCulloch	Schall
Bowers	Goldfogle	McFadden	Scully
Britten	Good	McGlennon	Sears
Brooks, Pa.	Goodall	McKenzie	Siegel
Browne	Goodwin, Ark.	McKeown	Sinnott
Browning	Goodykoontz	McLane	Slemp
Brumbaugh	Gould	McLaughlin, Mich.	Small
Burroughs	Graham, Pa.	McPherson	Smith, Idaho
Cannon	Green, Iowa	Madden	Smith, Ill.
Casey	Greene, Vt.	Mansfield	Snyder
Clark, Fla.	Griffin	Martin	Stedman
Clark, Mo.	Hamill	Mason	Steele
Classon	Hamilton	Merritt	Stevenson
Cleary	Hastings	Michener	Strong, Pa.
Coady	Haugen	Miller	Sullivan
Connally	Hersman	Minahan, N. J.	Sumners, Tex.
Cooper	Holland	Montague	Swope
Copley	Houghton	Moore, Ohio	Taylor, Ark.
Costello	Howard	Moores, Ind.	Temple
Crago	Hudspeth	Morin	Thompson
Davey	Hulings	Mudd	Tillman
Davis, Tenn.	Humphreys	Neely	Tilson
Denison	Husted	Nicholls, S. C.	Treadway
Dent	Hutchinson	Nichols, Mich.	Vare
Dewalt	Igoe	Nolan	Venable
Dickinson, Iowa	James	O'Connor	Walters
Donovan	Johnson, Ky.	Olney	Watson, Va.
Dooling	Johnson, S. Dak.	Osborne	Webster
Doughton	Johnston, N. Y.	Park	Wheeler
Dunn	Jones, Tex.	Pell	White, Kans.
Dupré	Juul	Porter	Winslow
Dyer	Kahn	Radcliffe	Wise
Eagan	Kearns	Ramsey	Woodyard
Eagle	Kennedy, R. I.	Randall, Calif.	Yates
Edmonds	King	Reavis	Young, Tex.
Ellsworth	Kreider	Reber
Elston	Layton	Rhodes
Fairfield	Lazaro	Robinson, N. C.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WALSH). On this roll call 259 Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas moves that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 100, noes 6.

So the motion to dispense with further proceedings under the call was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CANTRILL] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU].

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, this resolution is without precedent, so far as I know, in the history of the procedure of the House of Representatives. Shortly after Congress was convened a resolution was agreed to by which a committee of 15 was created for the purpose, as it was stated at that time, of auditing the immense cost of the war. That committee of 15 was divided into 5 subcommittees. One of these subcommittees, headed by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM], has been at work for seven months, and the result of that labor is embodied in this so-called report. Now, Mr. Speaker, what is this report?

It first sets forth that they learn from the War Department that 4,668 claims had been adjusted, 2,185 claims are pending, and 2,700 other claims are under consideration. Out of that immense number of claims the committee selects eight. And what does it say about those eight? It suggests that in the settlement with these eight corporations or firms the committee is of the opinion that the salvage values allowed were too large. And the nearest clause in this report that approaches the specific is to be found in these words:

> In some of the cases cited they seem to have been obviously tainted with fraud.

And that is what we are here to discuss for four mortal hours this afternoon. Why, Mr. Speaker, this great body is not engaged in child's play. This great body is not a moot court. What was this committee appointed for? To make a definite, specific report. The nearest they come to making a report is to say that some transactions seem to be tainted with fraud.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that is casting an aspersion in an indirect way that ought not to be made. If this committee found fraud they ought to have said so; they ought to have fixed the responsibility; they ought to have said who was guilty of the fraud, and in what respect, and furnished a bill of particulars. [Applause on the Democratic side.] But they have not done anything of the kind.

What on earth are we going to vote on at the end of these four hours, anyhow? What are we here for? What concrete proposition is to be before the House when this four-hour debate is ended? I know that gentlemen on the Republican side of the Chamber are ashamed of this whole procedure even though they may not say so. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The proper thing to do with this resolution is to vote it down. Such an asinine performance as this has never before been enacted in this House since I have been a Member.

It is suggested that somebody should have the right to review these settlements. That is the business of this committee. That was what they were appointed to do. What have they been doing for seven months?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POU. I would rather not, but if the gentleman insists I will.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to suggest to the gentleman that the committee does not even make a recommendation to this House.

Mr. POU. That is very true, of course. There is absolutely nothing but a mere suggestion that there may be fraud somewhere, when it was their business to point it out if anybody was guilty of fraud.

Nobody in this House wants any rascal protected. What was this committee created for? It was not created for the purpose of bringing in a suggestion here and then have this House debate a mere suggestion. That is a ridiculous proposal.

So I conclude, Mr. Speaker, by saying that it is due this House, it is due the dignity of the procedure of this House, to vote down this resolution; and I am constrained to repeat here and now what I said when the resolution was presented creating this committee of 15: When all is said and done, when you have finished your investigations, when you have finished your debate, when all this great affair shall have passed into history, the verdict of the world will be what the verdict of all intelligent, fair-minded men is now, that never in the history of mankind was so great an undertaking carried through with such great administrative efficiency and with so little suggestion of fraud on the part of those charged with the management of the Great War. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman yields back two minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CANTRILL.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present to hear this important discussion of this rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and four Members are present. There is no quorum present.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas moves a call of the House. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas demands a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 86, noes 1.

So a call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Alexander	Freeman	Little	Rowan
Andrews, Md.	Gallagher	Longworth	Rowe
Anthony	Gallivan	McArthur	Rucker
Aswell	Gandy	McClintic	Sabath
Babka	Godwin, N. C.	McCulloch	Sanders, Ind.
Barbour	Goldfogle	McFadden	Sanders, La.
Barkley	Good	McGlennon	Sanders, N. Y.
Bell	Goodall	McKenzie	Saunders, Va.
Black	Goodwin, Ark.	McKeown	Schall
Blackmon	Gould	McKinley	Scully
Bland, Ind.	Graham, Pa.	McLane	Sears
Booher	Green, Iowa	McLaughlin, Mich.	Sherwood
Bowers	Greene, Vt.	McPherson	Siegel
Britten	Hamill	Madden	Sims
Brooks, Pa.	Hamilton	Major	Sinnott
Browne	Hardy, Tex.	Mann, S. C.	Sisson
Browning	Harrison	Mansfield	Slemp
Burke	Hastings	Martin	Small
Cannon	Haugen	Mason	Smith, Ill.
Carss	Hayden	Mays	Snyder
Carter	Hernandez	Merritt	Steele
Casey	Hersman	Michener	Stephens, Ohio
Clark, Fla.	Hickey	Miller	Stevenson
Cleary	Holland	Minahan, N. J.	Strong, Pa.
Coady	Houghton	Montague	Sullivan
Connally	Howard	Moore, Ohio	Sumners, Tex.
Copley	Huddleston	Moore, Pa.	Sweet
Costello	Hudspeth	Moores, Ind.	Swope
Crago	Hulings	Mudd	Taylor, Ark.
Davey	Hull, Tenn.	Neely	Taylor, Colo.
Davis, Minn.	Humphreys	Nicholls, S. C.	Temple
Davis, Tenn.	Husted	Nichols, Mich.	Thompson
Denison	Hutchinson	Nolan	Treadway
Dent	Igoe	O'Connor	Vare
Dewalt	James	Oldfield	Venable
Donovan	Johnson, Ky.	Oliver	Voigt
Dooling	Johnson, S. Dak.	Olney	Walters
Doughton	Johnston, N. Y.	Osborne	Watson, Va.
Dupré	Jones, Tex.	Padgett	Webster
Dyer	Juul	Parker	Whaley
Eagan	Kahn	Pell	Wheeler
Eagle	Kearns	Porter	Winslow
Edmonds	Kennedy, Iowa	Radcliffe	Wise
Ellsworth	Kennedy, R. I.	Rainey, Ala.	Wood, Ind.
Elston	King	Ramsey	Woodyard
Evans, Mont.	Kreider	Randall, Calif.	Wright
Fairfield	Layton	Reavis	Yates
Ferris	Lazaro	Reber	Young, Tex.
Fess	Lea, Calif.	Riordan
Flood	Lee, Ga.	Robinson, N. C.
Focht	Lehlbach	Rodenberg

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HICKS). On this roll call 232 Members have responded to their names. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas moves that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A division is demanded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 103, noes 0.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will unlock the doors. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] or the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CANTRILL] is recognized.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I suggest that the gentleman from Kentucky take his time. There will be only one more speech on this side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky has 23 minutes remaining.

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Speaker, the rule reported to the House by the votes of the majority members of the Rules Committee is without parallel in the history of the House. No action is proposed in the rule relative to House Report No. 487. The rule simply provides for "talk," and if there is any one thing of which the country is justly tired, it is "talk" by the American Congress. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Since last May, when the Republican Party took charge of the legislative branch of the Government, there has been nothing but talk, and to-day the majority party puts itself on record by a special rule to fritter away a whole valuable legislative day to make in order a lot of useless talk. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Why does not the majority party bring in some rule to take some action on some useful legislation for which the country is waiting? [Applause on the Democratic side.] Under this rule a whole day is to be wasted in criticizing the actions of the gallant officers and men who were largely responsible for winning the Great War. Instead of passing some helpful legislation for the benefit of the soldiers and sailors who won the war, you are wasting time in idle criticism of a great victory. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Everyone in the country knows that if the Republican Party had been in power in the country when the war was won that the majority party now would never had created a committee to investigate the expenditures in the War Department. You established this committee and are making these reports for purely political reasons on the eve of a presidential election [applause on the Democratic side], and after months of expensive and laborious effort on the part of the investigating committee all you can do is to come before the House with a special rule asking for a full day of "talk." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

When this committee was first proposed I stated to the House that it was to investigate the acts of officers and men who had won a victory, and a glorious victory, and had won the victory in such a way as to uphold the best traditions of the American Army and Navy. In all of the reports I have read from the Committee to Investigate the Expenditures of the War, not a single word of praise or commendation has been said by the majority of that committee in behalf of the thousands of splendid officers and men who won the greatest victory in all history. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

This committee states that out of 9,543 claims which have been filed with them that 8 of them do not appear entirely satisfactory to the committee, and having come to that conclusion without any definite charge of fraud in any one of the 8 cases the majority party rushes in here with a special rule to talk all day about what they think of these 8 cases, so that the RECORD can be filled with a lot of loose charges against the administration and franked all over the country for political effect in the next campaign. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

It is certainly a sorry proceeding and one that will be resented, in my opinion, by all patriotic citizens regardless of politics. If the majority party is determined to follow such foolish procedure, I sincerely hope that every member of the minority will vote against the adoption of this rule and make an effort to save the time of the House for more valuable work. If this rule is adopted, every Member here knows that not 20 Members will stay on the floor during the day to hear the magnificent orations which have been carefully prepared for political effect, and if the majority is determined to pass the rule it ought to go further and bring in another rule to force at least their own Members to stay here and be punished by the flood of oratory which is in store for them. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

We all know that even the majority Members do not intend to waste a day by punishing themselves by attendance on the floor to listen to speeches forced on them by a special rule. If there was ever a time in the history of the Nation when idle talk should be thrown into the discard, that time is now, and I again call the attention of the country to this sorry spectacle presented here to-day by the majority party.

I have been much interested in comments from some Republican papers in the country relative to this committee of investigation. Of course, I would not say anything discourteous concerning any member of this committee, but I noticed in a leading Republican paper the other day a comment on the action of that part of the committee which went to France to examine Gen. Pershing. The committee landed in France just about the day Gen. Pershing was sailing for the United States, and the general politely told the committee to go to a place hotter than the Great Desert. The Republican paper mentioned above in an editorial was unkind enough to say that the heads of the committee would make useful material for hatracks. This is but a sample of the comments being made by Republican papers in the country about this investigating committee, and now the great Committee on Rules in this House becomes a party to such foolish procedure by bringing in a special rule to give this investigating committee the right to consume a full day belonging to the American people in idle and useless talk.

If the investigating committee has found out anything that is wasteful or criminal on the part of any officer of the Government, let them make specific charges and come before the House asking for proper action. After months of labor the committee has been unable to uncover a single case of actual fraud or crime in the greatest undertaking in all history, where thousands of men handled billions of dollars. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The committee has worked diligently hoping to uncover some scandal so that it could be used for political effect against the administration. The minority has had practically no representation on these committees to investigate the conduct of the war. The whole proceeding has been bitterly partisan and the investigation entirely controlled by the majority party, and yet with all of this no scandal or fraud or crime has been uncovered in the conduct of the war. The weakness of the report from the investigating committee is a wonderful tribute to American officers and men, who won a glorious victory for American arms. [Applause on the Democratic side.] This investigating committee will not accord to those men the tribute to which they are entitled, but the American people will give them their just due.

Until the investigating committee comes before the House with some report worthy of action and consideration, I sincerely hope that this body will vote down this proposed rule. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The G. O. P.—the "Good Old Promiser"—is long on promises to the people before election, but woefully short on performances when it is given power. The G. O. P.—the "Glorious Old Pharisee"—brings to a climax its record of inefficiency when it asks the House to adopt such a rule as is now proposed. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Let the American people take notice that the majority party in Congress has gotten to such a stage that all it can do is to talk, and that a special rule is needed to afford them even that. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. The last count of the House showed that we had only 104 Members present. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I am obliged to the gentleman from Texas, because I want a quorum here when I make some remarks on the resolution.

Mr. BLANTON. I am sure they will be glad to hear them. It is awfully hard to keep them here.

The SPEAKER. It is clear that there is no quorum present.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas moves a call of the House. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. A division is demanded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 72, noes 14.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering a call of the House.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 104, nays 137, answered "present" 3, not voting 188, as follows:

YEAS—104.

Almon	Buchanan	Dickinson, Mo.	Hayden
Anderson	Byrnes, S. C.	Dominick	Hersman
Ashbrook	Byrns, Tenn.	Doremus	Hull, Tenn.
Ayres	Caldwell	Drane	Jacoway
Babka	Campbell, Pa.	Emerson	Johnson, Miss.
Bee	Candler	Evans, Mont.	Johnson, Wash.
Benson	Cantrill	Fields	Kincheloe
Black	Caraway	Fisher	Kitchin
Bland, Mo.	Carew	Gandy	Lanham
Bland, Va.	Carss	Ganly	Lankford
Blanton	Clark, Mo.	Gard	Larsen
Box	Collier	Garner	Lesher
Brand	Crisp	Garrett	Linthicum
Briggs	Cullen	Godwin, N. C.	Lonergan
Brinson	Davis, Tenn.	Hardy, Tex.	McAndrews
Brumbaugh	Dent	Harrison	McKinley
Maher	Park	Rubey	Upshaw
Moon	Parrish	Sims	Vinson
Mooney	Phelan	Sisson	Weaver
Moore, Va.	Pou	Smithwick	Welling
Nelson, Mo.	Quin	Steagall	Welty
O'Connell	Rainey, J. W.	Stephens, Miss.	Whaley
O'Connor	Raker	Stevenson	Wilson, La.
Oliver	Rayburn	Stoll	Wingo
Olney	Romjue	Tague	Woods, Va.
Padgett	Rouse	Thomas	Wright

NAYS—137.

Andrews, Nebr.	Foster	Lampert	Sells
Bacharach	Frear	Luce	Shreve
Baer	French	Lufkin	Sinclair
Bankhead	Fuller, Ill.	Luhring	Smith, Idaho
Begg	Fuller, Mass.	McArthur	Smith, Mich.
Benham	Garland	McDuffie	Snell
Boies	Good	McLaughlin, Nebr.	Steenerson
Brooks, Ill.	Graham, Ill.	MacCrate	Stephens, Ohio
Burdick	Green, Iowa	MacGregor	Stiness
Burroughs	Griest	Magee	Strong, Kans.
Butler	Hadley	Mann, Ill.	Summers, Wash.
Campbell, Kans.	Hardy, Colo.	Mapes	Taylor, Tenn.
Cannon	Harreld	Monahan, Wis.	Tilson
Chindblom	Haskell	Morgan	Timberlake
Christopherson	Hawley	Morin	Tincher
Classon	Hays	Mott	Tinkham
Cole	Hernandez	Murphy	Towner
Crago	Hersey	Nelson, Wis.	Vaile
Cramton	Hickey	Ogden	Vestal
Crowther	Hicks	Paige	Voigt
Currie, Mich.	Hill	Peters	Volstead
Curry, Calif.	Hoch	Purnell	Ward
Dale	Hull, Iowa	Ramseyer	Watson, Pa.
Dallinger	Ireland	Randall, Wis.	White, Kans.
Darrow	Jefferis	Reavis	White, Me.
Davis, Minn.	Jones, Pa.	Reed, N. Y.	Williams
Dempsey	Keller	Reed, W. Va.	Wilson, Ill.
Dowell	Kelly, Pa.	Rhodes	Winslow
Dunbar	Kendall	Ricketts	Wood, Ind.
Dunn	Kennedy, Iowa	Robsion, Ky.	Woodyard
Echols	Kiess	Rodenberg	Young, N. Dak.
Elliott	Kleczka	Rogers	Zihlman
Evans, Nebr.	Knutson	Rose
Evans, Nev.	Kraus	Sanford
Fordney	LaGuardia	Scott

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—3.

Heflin	Mead	Sweet

NOT VOTING—188.

Ackerman	Gallagher	Longworth	Riddick
Alexander	Gallivan	McClintic	Riordan
Andrews, Md.	Glynn	McCulloch	Robinson, N. C.
Anthony	Goldfogle	McFadden	Rowan
Aswell	Goodall	McGlennon	Rowe
Barbour	Goodwin, Ark.	McKenzie	Rucker
Barkley	Goodykoontz	McKeown	Sabath
Bell	Gould	McKinley	Sanders, Ind.
Blackmon	Graham, Pa.	McLane	Sanders, La.
Bland, Ind.	Greene, Mass.	McLaughlin, Mich.	Sanders, N. Y.
Booher	Greene, Vt.	McPherson	Saunders, Va.
Bowers	Griffin	Madden	Schall
Britten	Hamill	Major	Scully
Brooks, Pa.	Hamilton	Mann, S. C.	Sears
Browne	Hastings	Mansfield	Sherwood
Browning	Haugen	Martin	Siegel
Burke	Holland	Mason	Sinnott
Carter	Houghton	Mays	Slemp
Casey	Howard	Merritt	Small
Clark, Fla.	Huddleston	Michener	Smith, Ill.
Cleary	Hudspeth	Miller	Smith, N. Y.
Coady	Hulings	Minahan, N. J.	Snyder
Connally	Humphreys	Mondell	Stedman
Cooper	Husted	Montague	Steele
Copley	Hutchinson	Moore, Ohio	Strong, Pa.
Costello	Igoe	Moore, Pa.	Sullivan
Davey	James	Moores, Ind.	Sumners, Tex.
Denison	Johnson, Ky.	Mudd	Swope
Dewalt	Johnson, S. Dak.	Neely	Taylor, Ark.
Dickinson, Iowa	Johnston, N. Y.	Newton, Minn.	Taylor, Colo.
Donovan	Jones, Tex.	Newton, Mo.	Temple
Dooling	Juul	Nicholls, S. C.	Thompson
Doughton	Kahn	Nichols, Mich.	Tillman
Dupré	Kearns	Nolan	Treadway
Dyer	Kelley, Mich.	Oldfield	Vare
Eagan	Kennedy, R. I.	Osborne	Venable
Eagle	Kettner	Overstreet	Walsh
Edmonds	King	Parker	Walters
Ellsworth	Kinkaid	Pell	Wason
Elston	Kreider	Platt	Watkins
Esch	Langley	Porter	Watson, Va.
Fairfield	Layton	Radcliffe	Webster
Ferris	Lazaro	Rainey, Ala.	Wheeler
Fess	Lea, Calif.	Rainey, H. T.	Wilson, Pa.
Flood	Lee, Ga.	Ramsey	Wise
Focht	Lehlbach	Randall, Calif.	Yates
Freeman	Little	Reber	Young, Tex.

So a call of the House was refused.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Mr. MERRITT with Mr. RUCKER.

Mr. PLATT with Mr. STEDMAN.

Mr. PORTER with Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado.

Mr. SINNOTT with Mr. TILLMAN.

Mr. SLEMP with Mr. WATKINS.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois with Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania.

Mr. ANTHONY with Mr. BARKLEY.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana with Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia.

Mr. ESCH with Mr. HEFLIN.

Mr. GLYNN with Mr. HOWARD.
Mr. GOODALL with Mr. HUDDLESTON.
Mr. GOODYKOONTZ with Mr. MCCLINTIC.
Mr. MUDD with Mr. SHERWOOD.
Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts with Mr. MAJOR.
Mr. GREENE of Vermont with Mr. MANN of South Carolina.
Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota with Mr. MANSFIELD.
Mr. KELLEY of Michigan with Mr. MARTIN.
Mr. PARKER with Mr. SMITH of New York.
Mr. LONGWORTH with Mr. MAYS.
Mr. MCCULLOCH with Mr. OLDFIELD.
Mr. MCKINLEY with Mr. OVERSTREET.
Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan with Mr. RAINEY of Alabama.
Mr. MCPHERSON with Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY.
Mr. MADDEN with Mr. RANDALL of California.
Mr. MONDELL with Mr. RIORDAN.
Mr. HAUGEN with Mr. LEE of Georgia.
Mr. SNYDER with Mr. ALEXANDER.
Mr. TEMPLE with Mr. BLACKMON.
Mr. TREADWAY with Mr. BOOHER.
Mr. WALSH with Mr. CLEARY.
Mr. WASON with Mr. COADY.
Mr. NEWTON of Missouri with Mr. HUDSPETH.
Mr. BLAND of Indiana with Mr. BELL.
Mr. BROWNE with Mr. CASEY.
Mr. COOPER with Mr. FLOOD.
Mr. COPLEY with Mr. GALLIVAN.
Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa with Mr. CLARK of Florida.
Mr. DYER with Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas.
Mr. EDMONDS with Mr. GRIFFIN.

The SPEAKER. On this vote the yeas are 104, the nays are 147. The nays have it. A quorum is present. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] is recognized for 26 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it not necessary to dispense with the call of the House?

The SPEAKER. A call of the House was refused.

Mr. BLANTON. Did the Chair announce it?

The SPEAKER. The Chair said, "The nays have it."

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, it is not surprising that gentlemen of the minority should put in the day filibustering against a resolution that enables the House to discuss the manner of the expenditure of the billions of money that the American people paid in loans and in taxation into the Treasury of the United States for the conduct of the war. The grossly incompetent manner in which the administration conducted the business of the Government in connection with the war is so notorious that the country has already taken notice of it, and this House can not, through its minority, prevent a further discussion of the incompetent manner in which the administration conducted its part of the war. [Applause.] The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CANTRILL] endeavored adroitly to make this rule in order in such form that the House might discuss the manner in which our soldiers and officers conducted themselves. No encomiums are too great upon the conduct of the officers and men of the Army of the United States. [Applause.] They did their part. [Applause.] We are here to-day to discuss the manner in which the President and the Secretary of War and those responsible for the business of the Government did their part. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield for a question.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Did the gentleman say the officers of the Regular Army?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No; the officers and men of the Army.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Did not the gentleman first say the officers and men of the Regular Army?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I thought the gentleman did.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. There has been no question at any time with respect to the manner in which the men in the field have done their part in connection with this Great War The only question that has been raised by the American people, or any part of them, or any of their representatives, has been as to the manner in which their money has been expended and the manner in which the business of the Government has been conducted by the administration.

Mr. BENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. For a question.

Mr. BENSON. Does the gentleman think we would have done better under Secretary of War Alger than we have done under Secretary of War Baker?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, yes; a thousand to one. [Applause.]

Mr. WELTY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Not now. During the discussion this morning between roll calls some one said that if there had been a Republican administration, of course, this resolution would not now be before the House. Why, that is true. [Applause.] There would have been no occasion for it. [Applause.] Incompetency would not have marked every act of the administration. [Applause.]

Mr. WELTY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No. [Cries of "Do not yield."]

Mr. WELTY. Why not? Why do not you gentlemen want him to yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I very respectfully decline to yield.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CANTRILL] both stated that there was nothing to bring before the House, nothing to discuss, nothing in which the American people were interested. I beg leave respectfully to differ with both of these gentlemen. There is somthing in which the American people are interested. There is something that they are entitled to hear and have discussed. Some 30 or 40 volumes of testimony have been taken by the committee making this investigation. In these volumes of testimoney matters have been disclosed that the American people should have discussed in their hearing, or so that it may reach them. These are matters in which the taxpayers and the bond purchasers have a vital interest. They paid the bills and they have a right to know what has been done with their money. They have a right to know the manner in which the War Department expended the money.

Mr. WELTY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes; if the gentleman insists.

Mr. WELTY. Yes; I would like to have the gentleman yield.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. For a question, and I will ask the gentleman to make it brief.

Mr. WELTY. It is charged here in this report that there was a combination to defraud the Government. Why do not you set that matter out so that there could be prosecution, and so that we might know who has been guilty of defrauding the Government, what particular person or persons?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, we will prosecute under the next administration all right. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WELTY. Did you prosecute the Beef Trust?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Never mind; I do not yield further.

Mr. WELTY. During the Spanish-American War?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I do not yield further. Will the gentleman be kind enough to take his seat?

Mr. WELTY. I wish the gentleman would answer the question.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It is quite impossible to secure prosecution of the violators of the law in this administration. [Applause and cheers on the Republican side.]

Mr. WELTY. Why do not you point it out, then?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I will answer the gentleman.

Mr. WELTY. Why do not you point it out? If any crime has been committed, why do not you point it out and be men?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I do not yield.

Mr. BLANTON. But we want to hear the gentleman from Kansas, and it is improper for the Republicans to prevent us by their cheers from hearing him.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The gentleman desires that something specific be stated. I will state something specific. Mr. H. R. Long, a shoe manufacturer of Massachusetts——

Mr. BLANTON. R. H. Long. The gentleman ought to get it right.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, yes; Democrats should know him. He was the last Democratic candidate for governor of Massachusetts [applause and cheers on the Republican side], and I think the Democratic candidate for governor in a former campaign.

Mr. WELTY. Proceed and show where he is a criminal.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I would even be willing to leave that to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WELTY. The gentleman has the floor.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. This gentleman is a shoe manufacturer. He had contracts with the Government that amounted to over $22,000,000. He purchased rejected floor sweepings from textile manufacturers, to be used in the manufacture of knapsacks and belts for the use of our soldiers overseas, and the War Department purchased these knapsacks and belts manufactured out of this trash from Mr. Long. The materials had been rejected by every other manufacturer.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. For a question.

Mr. GARRETT. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that the Long contracts were investigated by the committee, to the committee's satisfaction, I presume, and that they did not dare even mention the Long proposition in this report? [Applause on Democratic side.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I have the testimony. I do not yield further. I want to satisfy the gentleman from Ohio and others.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. That the committee has not yet finished its investigation of Mr. Long. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. ASHBROOK. They have been a long time at it.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Long had contracts not completed at the end of the war running into millions of dollars. Nothing was done by Mr. Long toward supplying the Government with the articles called for in these contracts. The contracts were entered into during the period of from five months to two days before the end of the war. He brought claims against the Government for $10,000,000, for what service he had rendered God alone knows, because the testimony does not disclose; but it does say that he had done nothing toward completing his part of these contracts. But the War Department—not the soldiers in the field nor the taxpayers in the country—the War Department settled with Mr. Long for $1,367,859.35 for contracts upon which he had furnished the Government nothing.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. For a question.

Mr. RAKER. Could the gentleman give the House the benefit of the name of the board and the names of the members composing the board that adjusted this claim?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I do not know.

Mr. RAKER. I wonder if the committee has the names?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. We will furnish that in our discussion on the floor.

Mr. RAKER. That will be presented to the House?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No; I want to give an illustration——

Mr. BLANTON. I think we ought to have a quorum here to hear it.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I do not yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that we have not a quorum here to listen to the gentleman from Kansas.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Well, it is getting more interesting than it was, anyway. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BLANTON. To a small audience.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, there is a good audience here.

Mr. GARRETT. And less accurate. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, I take what I state from the testimony.

The SPEAKER. One hundred and fifty-one Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas moves a call of the House.

The question was taken.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

The House proceeded to divide.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering a call of the House. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 109, nays 139, answered "present" 10, not voting 174, as follows:

YEAS—109.

Almon	Bee	Box	Brumbaugh
Ashbrook	Bland, Mo.	Brand	Buchanan
Babka	Bland, Va.	Briggs	Byrnes, S. C.
Bankhead	Blanton	Brinson	Byrns, Tenn.
Caldwell	Garrett	Moon	Sisson
Campbell, Pa.	Godwin, N. C.	Mooney	Smith, N. Y.
Candler	Hardy, Tex.	Moore, Va.	Smithwick
Cantrill	Harrison	Nelson, Mo.	Steagall
Caraway	Hersman	O'Connell	Stedman
Carss	Huddleston	O'Connor	Stephens, Miss.
Clark, Mo.	Hull, Tenn.	Oldfield	Stevenson
Collier	Jacoway	Oliver	Stoll
Crisp	Johnson, Miss.	Overstreet	Tague
Cullen	Kincheloe	Park	Thomas
Davis, Tenn.	Kitchin	Parrish	Tillman
Dent	Lanham	Phelan	Upshaw
Dickinson, Mo.	Lankford	Quin	Vinson
Dominick	Larsen	Rainey, Ala.	Watkins
Doremus	Lesher	Rainey, J. W.	Weaver
Drane	Linthicum	Raker	Welling
Evans, Mont.	Lonergan	Rayburn	Welty
Fields	McAndrews	Riordan	Wilson, La.
Fisher	McClintic	Romjue	Wingo
Gallivan	McKinley	Rouse	Woods, Va.
Gandy	Maher	Rubey	Wright
Ganly	Mann, S. C.	Saunders, Va.
Gard	Martin	Sherwood
Garner	Mead	Sims

NAYS—139.

Anderson	Esch	Kleczka	Rose
Andrews, Nebr.	Evans, Nebr.	Kraus	Sanders, N. Y.
Ayres	Evans, Nev.	Lampert	Scott
Bacharach	Fordney	Langley	Sells
Baer	Foster	Little	Shreve
Begg	Frear	Luce	Sinclair
Benham	French	Lufkin	Smith, Idaho
Benson	Fuller, Ill.	Luhring	Smith, Mich.
Boies	Fuller, Mass.	McArthur	Snell
Brooks, Ill.	Garland	McKinley	Stephens, Ohio
Burdick	Good	McLaughlin, Nebr.	Strong, Kans.
Butler	Graham, Ill.	MacCrate	Summers, Wash.
Campbell, Kans.	Green, Iowa	Madden	Sweet
Cannon	Greene, Mass.	Magee	Taylor, Tenn.
Carew	Griest	Mann, Ill.	Temple
Chindblom	Hadley	Mapes	Tilson
Christopherson	Hardy, Colo.	Monahan, Wis.	Timberlake
Classon	Harreld	Mondell	Tincher
Cole	Haskell	Morgan	Towner
Cooper	Hawley	Murphy	Vaile
Crago	Hays	Nelson, Wis.	Vestal
Cramton	Hickey	Newton, Minn.	Voigt
Crowther	Hicks	Newton, Mo.	Volstead
Currie, Mich.	Hill	Ogden	Walsh
Curry, Calif.	Hoch	Paige	Ward
Dale	Hull, Iowa	Peters	Wason
Dallinger	Ireland	Purnell	Watson, Pa.
Darrow	Jefferis	Randall, Wis.	White, Kans.
Dempsey	Johnson, Wash.	Reavis	White, Me.
Dowell	Jones, Pa.	Reed, N. Y.	Williams
Dunbar	Kelley, Mich.	Reed, W. Va.	Wilson, Ill.
Dunn	Kelly, Pa.	Rhodes	Winslow
Echols	Kendall	Ricketts	Wood, Ind.
Elliott	Kennedy, Iowa	Robsion, Ky.	Young, N. Dak.
Emerson	Kinkaid	Rogers

ANSWERED "PRESENT," 10.

Black	Kiess	Ramseyer	Woodyard
Greene, Vt.	Knutson	Sanford
Hersey	MacGregor	Tinkham

NOT VOTING—174.

Ackerman	Flood	Lea, Calif.	Reber
Alexander	Focht	Lee, Ga.	Riddick
Andrews, Md.	Freeman	Lehlbach	Robinson, N. C.
Anthony	Gallagher	Longworth	Rodenberg
Aswell	Glynn	McCulloch	Rowan
Barbour	Goldfogle	McDuffie	Rowe
Barkley	Goodall	McFadden	Rucker
Bell	Goodwin, Ark.	McGlennon	Sabath
Blackmon	Goodykoontz	McKenzie	Sanders, Ind.
Bland, Ind.	Gould	McKeown	Sanders, La.
Booher	Graham, Pa.	McLane	Schall
Bowers	Griffin	McLaughlin, Mich.	Scully
Britten	Hamill	McPherson	Sears
Brooks, Pa.	Hamilton	Major	Siegel
Browne	Hastings	Mansfield	Sinnott
Browning	Haugen	Mason	Slemp
Burke	Hayden	Mays	Small
Burroughs	Heflin	Merritt	Smith, Ill.
Carter	Hernandez	Michener	Snyder
Casey	Holland	Miller	Steele
Clark, Fla.	Houghton	Minahan, N. J.	Steenerson
Cleary	Howard	Montague	Stiness
Coady	Hudspeth	Moore, Ohio	Strong, Pa.
Connally	Hulings	Moore, Pa.	Sullivan
Copley	Humphreys	Moores, Ind.	Summers, Tex.
Costello	Husted	Morin	Swope
Davey	Hutchinson	Mott	Taylor, Ark.
Davis, Minn.	Igoe	Mudd	Taylor, Colo.
Denison	James	Neely	Thompson
Dewalt	Johnson, Ky.	Nicholls, S. C.	Treadway
Dickinson, Iowa	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nichols, Mich.	Vare
Donovan	Johnston, N. Y.	Nolan	Venable
Dooling	Jones, Tex.	Olney	Walters
Doughton	Juul	Osborne	Watson, Va.
Dupré	Kahn	Padgett	Webster
Dyer	Kearns	Parker	Whaley
Eagan	Keller	Pell	Wheeler
Eagle	Kennedy, R. I.	Platt	Wilson, Pa.
Edmonds	Kettner	Porter	Wise
Ellsworth	King	Pou	Yates
Elston	Kreider	Radcliffe	Young, Tex.
Fairfield	LaGuardia	Rainey, H. T.	Zihlman
Ferris	Layton	Ramsey
Fess	Lazaro	Randall, Calif.

So the call of the House was refused.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:
Until further notice:
Mr. KNUTSON with Mr. BELL.
Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota with Mr. HAYDEN.
Mr. LAGUARDIA with Mr. OLNEY.
Mr. HERNANDEZ with Mr. MCDUFFIE.
Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island with Mr. POU.
Mr. RODENBERG with Mr. PADGETT.
Mr. STEENERSON with Mr. WHALEY.
Mr. STINESS with Mr. VENABLE.
Mr. ZIHLMAN with Mr. SABATH.
Mr. WOODYARD. Mr. Speaker——
The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name was called?
Mr. WOODYARD. No; I was in the cloakroom.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman can be recorded as present.
Mr. MANN of Illinois. The Speaker has declared that no quorum was present.
The SPEAKER. The Chair says that the gentleman could be recorded as present.
Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, under that ruling, I would be recorded as present.
The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.
Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves that the House do now adjourn.
Mr. BLANTON. And upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.
The yeas and nays were ordered.
The SPEAKER. As many as are in favor of the motion to adjourn will, as their names are called, answer "yea" and those opposed answer "nay," and the Clerk will call the roll.
The question was taken; and there were—yeas 104, nays 151, answered "present" 1, not voting 176, as follows:

YEAS—104.

Almon	Crisp	Larsen	Quin
Ashbrook	Cullen	Lee, Ga.	Rainey, Ala.
Babka	Davis, Tenn.	Lesher	Rainey, J. W.
Bankhead	Dent	Linthicum	Romjue
Bee	Dickinson, Mo.	Lonergan	Rouse
Benson	Dominick	McAndrews	Rubey
Black	Drane	McClintic	Sherwood
Bland, Mo.	Evans, Mont.	McDuffie	Smithwick
Bland, Va.	Evans, Nev.	McKinley	Steagall
Blanton	Fields	Maher	Stedman
Box	Fisher	Mann, S. C.	Stephens, Miss.
Brand	Gallivan	Martin	Stevenson
Briggs	Gandy	Mead	Stoll
Brinson	Ganly	Moon	Taylor, Colo.
Brumbaugh	Garner	Mooney	Thomas
Buchanan	Garrett	Moore, Va.	Tillman
Byrnes, S. C.	Godwin, N. C.	Nelson, Mo.	Upshaw
Byrns, Tenn.	Harrison	O'Connell	Vinson
Caldwell	Hersman	O'Connor	Watkins
Campbell, Pa.	Huddleston	Oldfield	Weaver
Candler	Hull, Tenn.	Oliver	Welty
Cantrill	Jacoway	Overstreet	Wilson, Pa.
Caraway	Johnson, Miss.	Park	Wingo
Carew	Kincheloe	Parrish	Wise
Carss	Kitchin	Phelan	Woods, Va.
Collier	Lanham	Pou	Wright

NAYS—151.

Anderson	Foster	Knutson	Ramseyer
Andrews, Nebr.	French	Kraus	Randall, Wis.
Anthony	Fuller, Ill.	Lampert	Reavis
Ayres	Fuller, Mass.	Langley	Reed, N. Y.
Bacharach	Glynn	Lankford	Reed, W. Va.
Begg	Graham, Ill.	Little	Rhodes
Benham	Green, Iowa	Luce	Ricketts
Boies	Greene, Mass.	Lufkin	Robsion, Ky.
Burdick	Greene, Vt.	Luhring	Rodenberg
Burroughs	Griest	McArthur	Rogers
Butler	Hadley	McCulloch	Rose
Campbell, Kans.	Hardy, Colo.	McKinley	Sanders, N. Y.
Cannon	Harreld	McLaughlin, Nebr.	Saunders, Va.
Chindblom	Haskell	MacCrate	Scott
Christopherson	Haugen	MacGregor	Sinclair
Classon	Hawley	Madden	Smith, Idaho
Cole	Hays	Magee	Smith, Mich.
Crago	Hernandez	Mann, Ill.	Snell
Cramton	Hersey	Mapes	Steenerson
Crowther	Hickey	Menahan, Wis.	Stephens, Ohio
Currie, Mich.	Hicks	Mondell	Strong, Kans.
Curry, Calif.	Hill	Moores, Ind.	Summers, Wash.
Dale	Hoch	Morgan	Sweet
Dallinger	Hull, Iowa	Mott	Taylor, Tenn.
Darrow	Ireland	Murphy	Temple
Dempsey	Jefferis	Nelson, Wis.	Tilson
Dowell	Johnson, Wash.	Newton, Minn.	Timberlake
Dunbar	Jones, Pa.	Newton, Mo.	Tincher
Dunn	Kelley, Mich.	Ogden	Tinkham
Echols	Kelly, Pa.	Paige	Towner
Elliott	Kendall	Parker	Vaile
Emerson	Kennedy, Iowa	Peters	Vestal
Esch	Kiess	Platt	Voigt
Evans, Nebr.	Kinkaid	Purnell	Volstead
Fordney	Kleczka	Raker	Walsh
Ward	White, Kans.	Wilson, Ill.	Young, N. Dak.
Watson, Pa.	White, Me.	Winslow	Zihlman
Welling	Williams	Woodyard

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—1.

Bell

NOT VOTING—176.

Ackerman	Ferris	Kreider	Robinson, N. C.
Alexander	Fess	LaGuardia	Rowan
Andrews, Md.	Flood	Layton	Rowe
Aswell	Focht	Lazaro	Rucker
Baer	Frear	Lea, Calif.	Sabath
Barbour	Freeman	Lehlbach	Sanders, Ind.
Barkley	Gallagher	Longworth	Sanders, La.
Blackmon	Gard	McFadden	Sanford
Bland, Ind.	Garland	McGlennon	Schall
Booher	Goldfogle	McKenzie	Scully
Bowers	Good	McKeown	Sears
Britten	Goodall	McLane	Sells
Brooks, Ill.	Goodwin, Ark.	McLaughlin, Mich.	Shreve
Brooks, Pa.	Goodykoontz	McPherson	Siegel
Browne	Gould	Major	Sims
Browning	Graham, Pa.	Mansfield	Sinnott
Burke	Griffin	Mason	Sisson
Carter	Hamill	Mays	Slemp
Casey	Hamilton	Merritt	Small
Clark, Fla.	Hardy, Tex.	Michener	Smith, Ill.
Clark, Mo.	Hastings	Miller	Smith, N. Y.
Cleary	Hayden	Minahan, N. J.	Snyder
Coady	Heflin	Montague	Steele
Connally	Holland	Moore, Ohio	Stiness
Cooper	Houghton	Moore, Pa.	Strong, Pa.
Copley	Howard	Morin	Sullivan
Costello	Hudspeth	Mudd	Sumners, Tex.
Davey	Hulings	Neely	Swope
Davis, Minn.	Humphreys	Nicholls, S. C.	Tague
Denison	Husted	Nichols, Mich.	Taylor, Ark.
Dewalt	Hutchinson	Nolan	Thompson
Dickinson, Iowa	Igoe	Olney	Treadway
Donovan	James	Osborne	Vare
Dooling	Johnson, Ky.	Padgett	Venable
Doremus	Johnson, S. Dak.	Pell	Walters
Doughton	Johnston, N. Y.	Porter	Wason
Dupré	Jones, Tex.	Radcliffe	Watson, Va.
Dyer	Juul	Rainey, H. T.	Webster
Eagan	Kahn	Ramsey	Whaley
Eagle	Kearns	Randall, Calif.	Wheeler
Edmonds	Keller	Rayburn	Wilson, La.
Ellsworth	Kennedy, R. I.	Reber	Wood, Ind.
Elston	Kettner	Riddick	Yates
Fairfield	King	Riordan	Young, Tex.

So the motion was rejected.
The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:
Until further notice:
Mr. BAER with Mr. CLARK of Missouri.
Mr. BROOKS of Illinois with Mr. GARD.
Mr. SANFORD with Mr. HARDY of Texas.
Mr. FREAR with Mr. RAYBURN.
Mr. GARLAND with Mr. SIMS.
Mr. GOOD with Mr. SISSON.
Mr. KELLER with Mr. TAGUE.
Mr. MORIN with Mr. DEWALT.
Mr. SELLS with Mr. DAVEY.
Mr. SHREVE with Mr. HOWARD.
The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.
Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, when interrupted by the gentleman from Texas by his motion to adjourn, I was just about to give an illustration of the contracts held by Mr. Long, of Masachusetts, with the War Department.
The witness is Mr. Bennett. I am reading from page 2149 of the hearing. He says:

Mr. BENNETT. I can give you a list of them if you want them. The first is mail bags. It was for only $314, but it was given on August 28, 1918, and it was to be completed in July, I think. The next one is for ration bags given on April 15, 1918, marked in the contract "Urgent need," was to be completed 25 per cent in September; same in October, November, and December. There was nothing done on the contract at all. The whole thing was canceled and Mr. Long got $10,091.67 for canceling.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, right there, will the gentleman yield in fairness?
Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas (continuing the reading):

The Government got $325 of odds and ends which Mr. Long did not use in his future work. Mr. Long got $16,700 worth of raw material, and he allowed the Government for it $133.33.

Does not the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WELTY] think he ought to be prosecuted, and that the man who made that settlement with him ought to be prosecuted?
Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:
H. J. Res. 260. House joint resolution authorizing the payment of salaries of officers and employees of Congress for December, 1919.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas moves that the House do now adjourn. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, December 15, 1919, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Acting Secretary of Commerce, transmitting a copy of a report of the Chief of the Division of Publications for the fiscal year 1919, was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. SWEET, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10183) to authorize the aids to navigation and for other works in the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes, reported the same with an amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 498), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SANFORD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10331) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919," approved July 9, 1918, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 499), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Claims was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9636) for the relief of Samuel Friedman as trustee for the heirs and devisees of B. Friedman and Henry Mills, and as trustee for the heirs and devisees of Emanuel Loveman, deceased, and the same was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. WOODYARD: A bill (H. R. 11172) providing for the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a public building at Hurricane, W. Va.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. DYER: A bill (H. R. 11173) to promote the efficiency of the permanent Military Establishment, and for the retirement of certain enlisted men who served as temporary officers during the war between the United States and Germany; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LANGLEY: A bill (H. R. 11174) for the erection of a Federal building at Pikeville, Ky., and increasing the limit of cost for the site; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. GOODALL: A bill (H. R. 11175) for the public sale of customhouse building and site at Kennebunk Port, Me.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: A bill (H. R. 11193) providing for the exclusion, deportation, and expulsion from the United States of certain aliens, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. HAYDEN: A bill (H. R. 11194) to amend section 2319 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to mining claims; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. DYER: Resolution (H. Res. 419) instructing the delegates from the United States of America to the peace conference to protest against former prejudices, hatred, and persecution against the Jews in certain portions of Europe forming part of newly created free Governments; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. NEWTON of Missouri: Concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 39) protesting against the merciless persecution of the Jewish people of Ukraine and other States in eastern and southeastern Europe; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BLAND of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 11176) granting an increase of pension to Ephraim Whitson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BRAND: A bill (H. R. 11177) for the relief of the estate of Joseph Hanserd; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 11178) authorizing the appointment of Maj. W. H. Allen as major in the Regular Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. McANDREWS: A bill (H. R. 11179) granting a pension to Victor A. Benson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MacGREGOR: A bill (H. R. 11180) for the relief of John C. Bush; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MORIN: A bill (H. R. 11181) to reimburse Earl V. Larkin for injuries sustained by the accidental discharge of a pistol in the hands of a soldier in the United States Army; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MURPHY: A bill (H. R. 11182) for the relief of Benjamin R. Buffington: to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11183) requiring the Secretary of War to issue an honorable discharge to Benjamin R. Buffington; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SELLS: A bill (H. R. 11184) granting an increase of pension to Samuel G. Dinsmore; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11185) granting an increase of pension to John C. Wilson; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H R. 11186) granting an increase of pension to Daniel K. Rowe; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11187) granting a pension to Leon J. Collins; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11188) granting a pension to Russell M. Huff; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11189) granting a pension to Thomas G. Pardue; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TAGUE: A bill (H. R. 11190) for the relief of the employees of the Mead-Morrison Manufacturing Co., of East Boston, Mass.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 11191) granting a pension to Mattie Dunn; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. THOMAS: A bill (H. R. 11192) granting a pension to Willie E. Vaughan; to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

346. By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of the First Christian Church of Vinita, Okla., for extension of full American citizenship to Indians; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

347. Also (by request), petition of sundry veterans of the World War, for recognition of Irish republic; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

348. Also (by request), petition of sundry citizens of Illinois, concerning methods taken by the Government in securing injunction in the recent strike; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

349. Also (by request), petition of the International Brotherhood of Bookbinders, New York, opposing Cummins bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

350. By Mr. BABKA: Petition of the Four-Ones Manufacturers' Association, of Chicago, Ill., indorsing the research activities of the Forest Products Laboratory of the United States Department of Agriculture, Madison, Wis.; to the Committee on Agriculture.

351. By Mr. CRAMTON: Petition of Rathsburg & Muir and other merchants of Imlay City, Mich., against passage of the Siegel cost-price marking bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

352. Also, memorial of John E. Swan, Peter La Forge, and John W. Newell, for increase of pay for persons in the custodian service of the United States; to the Committee on Appropriations.

353. Also, memorial of O'Brien J. Atkinson Branch of Friends of Irish Freedom of Port Huron, Mich., for passage of the Mason bill, H. R. 3404; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

354. By Mr. CULLEN: Petition of Poughkeepsie Lodge, No. 275, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, for deportation of undesirable aliens; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

355. Also, petition of the St. Paul Association of Public and Business Affairs, regarding railroad problem; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

356. By Mr. DYER: Petition of the Missouri Aeronautical Reserve Corps, pertaining to the future welfare of the Air Service; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

357. Also, petition of Anthony Kessler's Sons, of St. Louis, Mo.; St. Joseph Paper Box Co., of St. Joseph, Mo.; Columbia Transfer Co., of St. Louis, Mo., all favoring 1-cent postage on drop letters; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

358. Also, petition of Commodore Barry Branch, Friends of Irish Freedom, commending Congress on rejection of the league of nations; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

359. By Mr. FULLER of Illinois: Petition of Father Eugene O'Growney Branch, Friends of Irish Freedom, for House bill 3404; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

360. Also, petition of Haddorf Piano Co., of Rockford, Ill., for 1-cent postage on drop letters; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

361. By Mr. GALLIVAN: Memorial of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, on the deficiency in the sugar supply; to the Committee on Agriculture.

362. By Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas: Petition of Washington-Lee Camp, No. 80, American Legion, of Lewisville, Ark., for legislation to curb anarchy and for punishment of murderers of the soldiers at Centralia, Wash.; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

363. By Mr. LINTHICUM: Petition of sundry ex-service men, favoring passage of Johnson bill, providing for bonus for soldiers, sailors, and marines; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

364. Also, petition of Joseph S. West, of Baltimore, Md., favoring passage of the Cummins bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

365. Also, petition of the Central Fire Insurance Co. of Baltimore, Md., regarding railroad legislation; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

366. Also, petition of Grace Bell Micheau Post, No. 44, American Legion, for deportation of undesirable aliens; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

367. Also, petition of M. P. Hubbard & Co. and Home Fertilizers & Chemical Co., both of Baltimore, Md., regarding railroad legislation; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

368. Also, petition of Stuart, Keith & Co., of Baltimore, Md., favoring 1-cent postage on drop letters; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

369. Also, petition of Berndt & Co., of Baltimore, Md., offering amendments to the Esch bill, to take care of refrigerator cars; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

370. By Mr. MAHER: Petition of Poughkeepsie Lodge, No. 275, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, for deportation of undesirable aliens; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

371. Also, petition of the Private Soldiers and Sailors' Legion, of Washington, D. C., favoring House bill 10373; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

372. By Mr. O'CONNELL: Petition of Poughkeepsie Lodge, No. 275, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, for deportation of undesirable aliens; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

373. Also, petition of St. Paul Association of Public and Business Affairs, regarding railroad problem; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

374. Also, petition of southern Illinois editors, indorsing the zone postal law; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

375. By Mr. STINESS: Petition of the City Council of Providence, R. I., indorsing legislation for a daylight-saving plan for New England; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

376. By Mr. TILSON: Petition of Wadhams Post, No. 49, Grand Army of the Republic, favoring House bill 9369; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

377. By Mr. TINKHAM: Petition of Brookline Lodge, No. 886, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, condemning activities of I. W. W. and Bolshevists; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

378. Also, petition of sundry citizens of Brockton, for release of political prisoners arrested during the war; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE.

MONDAY, December 15, 1919.

(Legislative day of Friday, December 12, 1919.)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

CHARLES B. HENDERSON, a Senator from the State of Nevada, appeared in his seat to-day.

CHICAGO (BROADVIEW) HOSPITAL (H. DOC. NO. 518).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, pursuant to law, information relative to the Speedway or Broadview Hospital in Cook County, Ill., which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

ANNUAL REPORT OF UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD (H. DOC. NO. 435).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the third annual report of the United States Shipping Board, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

FINDINGS OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Assistant Clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting, pursuant to the order of the Court, a certified copy of the findings of fact and conclusion filed by the court in the case of Fore River Shipbuilding Co. v. The United States, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 8819) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 3, 1920, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1919, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 1199) to prohibit the purchase, sale, or possession for the purpose of sale of certain wild birds in the District of Columbia, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. McLEAN presented a petition of Local Lodge No. 19, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of Hartford, Conn., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the deportation of undesirable aliens, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented resolutions adopted at a conference of New England governors held in Boston, Mass., favoring a rank for Maj. Gen. Clarence R. Edwards commensurate with the services rendered by the Twenty-sixth Division, and also that the United States Shipping Board be requested to allocate some of its large ships to the New England owners, operators, and managers of steamers, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the Yankee Division Veterans' Association, of Willimantic, Conn., praying for the enactment of legislation granting to soldiers a bonus based on the time spent in the service, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a resolution adopted at a conference of New England governors held in Boston, Mass., favoring the return of the railroads to their owners only under certain conditions, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of the Fairfield County Farm Bureau, of Danbury, Conn., remonstrating against the reports by the daily press that the farmers are in sympathy with those who desire to reduce the hours of labor and curtail production, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a memorial of sundry Jewish citizens of Waterbury, Conn., and a memorial of the combined Jewish organizations of Bridgeport, Conn., remonstrating against the treatment of the Jews in the Ukraine and favoring action on the part of the Government to prevent a repetition of these outrages, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of Thomas Ashe Branch, Friends of Irish Freedom, of New Britain, Conn., and a petition of Local Division, No. 7, Ancient Order of Hibernians, of New Haven, Conn., praying for the freedom of Ireland, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CAPPER presented a resolution adopted by the Council of Clubs and sundry organizations and citizens of Kansas City, Kans., favoring the passage of the so-called Smith-Towner bill creating a Department of Education, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of the board of directors of the Chautauqua Association, of Beloit, Kans., praying for the exemption of Chautauquas from the operations of the so-called luxury tax, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Willard, Kans., remonstrating against the adoption of compulsory military training, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented memorials of Prairie View Division, No. 276, Order of Railway Conductors, of Goodland; of Local Lodge No. 1095, Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, of Salina; and of the Central Labor Union, of Dodge City, all in the State of Kansas, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Cummins railroad bill and praying for a two-years' extension of Government control of railroads, which were ordered to lie on the table.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. McLEAN:

A bill (S. 3550) granting a pension to James B. Webster; (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 3551) granting a pension to Harriet A. Erb; and

A bill (S. 3552) granting a pension to Joseph B. Doan; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 3553) making provision for the irrigation of Indian lands within the limits of the Curlew irrigation district in the State of Washington; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. NORRIS:

A bill (S. 3554) to regulate interstate commerce, to incorporate the Federal railroad company, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. POINDEXTER:

A bill (S. 3555) authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to make a survey of pulp woods on the public domain and to prepare a plan for the reforestation of pulp-wood lands, and appropriating the sum of $1,000,000 for these purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. SMITH of Georgia:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 138) authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish material, forces, and help for the construction of a pontoon bridge for temporary use across the Chattahoochee River at West Point, Ga.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CHATTAHOOCHEE RIVER PONTOON BRIDGE.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, a serious condition in my State exists on account of a flood which has occurred. The Army engineers are giving assistance to relieve the distress there and it is desired to construct a pontoon bridge across the Chattahoochee River to take the place of the only bridge. I introduce the joint resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 137) authorizing the Secretary of War to construct a pontoon bridge across the Chattahoochee River at West Point, Ga., and for other purposes, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That in order to provide immediate temporary relief for the city of West Point, Ga., necessitated by the recent flood of the Chattahoochee River, which washed the bridge away at that point, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to detail the necessary engineers to construct and maintain a pontoon bridge across the Chattahoochee River at West Point, Ga., it being understood that the city of West Point will provide the necessary materials not owned by the Government and loan material and to permit the use of such bridge as a highway, under the supervision and regulation of the mayor or other proper authorities of such city, for such time as the Secretary of War shall determine to be necessary.

Mr. HARRIS. If there is no objection to the joint resolution, and if it may be passed without debate, I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. The necessity for the legislation, as I have stated, arises because of a flood which has occurred in my State. All the main streets of the city are under water, all the business houses and many residences are surrounded by water. The Army engineers are on the ground and desire to construct a pontoon bridge over the Chattahoochee River. West Point is one of the most important manufacturing cities of our State, and is situated in Troup County, which purchased more Liberty bonds than any county of similar population in the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, as I understand, this is a joint resolution?

Mr. HARRIS. It is a joint resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it go to the committee.

Mr. HARRIS. Very well, but I should like to have it acted upon immediately.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. LENROOT subsequently said: From the Committee on Military Affairs, I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 137) authorizing the Secretary of War to construct a pontoon bridge across the Chattahoochee River at West Point, Ga., and for other purposes. This is a joint resolution which was introduced to-day by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of this resolution on account of the great distress of the people residing in and near West Point, Ga. The only bridge for pedestrians, wagons, and automobiles across the Chattahoochee River at this place was washed away by the floods. As I stated this morning, the town has been under water several days, the water being several feet high in the main streets and in a large number of residences, and there is great distress, and for that reason I sincerely hope that no Senator will object to the passage of the resolution.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENTS TO RAILROAD-CONTROL BILL.

Mr. STERLING submitted seven amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3288) further to regulate commerce among the States and with foreign nations and to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, which were ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

THE AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to ask whether a letter written by the chairman of the Shipping Board has been brought to the attention of the Senate. It is a letter written by Judge Payne, addressed to the Southern Commercial Congress, and presented a week ago to that congress in Savannah, Ga. If it has not been brought to the attention of the Senate, I ask permission that it be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The letter will be printed, if that action has not heretofore been taken.

There being no objection, the letter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD,
Washington, D. C.

Statement made by John Barton Payne, chairman of the United States Shipping Board, to the Southern Commercial Congress, Savannah, Ga., Monday, December 8.

Subject: American merchant marine and what must be done to permanently establish it.

The purpose of the Shipping Board is to establish a permanent American merchant marine, ultimately resting on private enterprise and private capital, supported by the grain and cattle growing farmers of the Mississippi Valley and the West and the Northwest, by the cotton growers of the South, by the miners of the East and West, and by the producing labor and capital of our great manufacturing institutions.

If the American people are to maintain their present high standards of living and retain even approximately their present position in finance and trade, our annual surplus must be sold in foreign markets, and we can not do this without ships—ships owned and controlled by Americans flying the American flag into every port of the world.

The war has given us ships. We now have 1,300 Shipping Board ships, operating 41 trade routes, carrying our products under our own flag into the important world ports. By the end of 1920 this number will be increased to some 2,250. Sales of ships to Americans are being made, but the sales do not keep pace with the new launchings.

The problem of establishing a permanent merchant marine presses for solution. No question of Government ownership is involved. The question is not between public and private ownership, but between American and foreign ownership. We want an established American merchant marine; how it shall be owned is less important. We desire that every ship now Government owned shall be sold to and be privately owned and operated by Americans for Americans, but that will come later. Now, the chief thing in hand is to create a merchant marine. Ships alone will not do this. Indeed, unless we have men, money, and brains in the shipping business ships may become a liability rather than an asset.

How, then, may a merchant marine be established? It can not be done in a day. It can not be done by legislation alone. It requires time, habit, growth, and individual capacity, initiative and enterprise. Many seem to think the Shipping Board can do this by reducing the price of ships and instantly shipping men will spring up and all our ships will be bought by private owners, and, presto, a merchant marine is a fact. This is a serious error. A substantial reduction in price would undoubtedly sell some 300 of our best ships, but this would not touch the problem. Ships can not be sold in large numbers until the country is prepared to buy them. It is not now prepared.

We have only a few successful shipping companies; they, however, insist that we reduce our prices, and we would thereby be able to sell the ships. That this is a fallacy is of easy demonstration, as is also their claim that there is a world market price for ships.

There is no such market price. No other country has ships ready for immediate delivery, hence there can be no world market price. The demand for ships for present use can not be met by building ships for future delivery; the need for tonnage is instant and pressing, and is now greater than ever before, and cargo rates are higher. We alone have ships for sale, ready for spot delivery. Our prices are based on a fair estimate of cost, and a regular schedule of prices and terms is maintained, the same to all persons. When can we build ships cheaper? Certainly there is no indication here or abroad that labor and materials are getting cheaper. How, then, can ships be cheaper? England's costs are rising and she has no ships for sale; indeed, she is in the market to buy ships. You ask, then, "Why do not we sell our ships?" Because we want to sell to our own people for use under our own flag, and our country has not yet begun to think in terms of ships. We have not acquired the ship habit. Who loans money on ships? Whom of your acquaintances would buy a ship mortgage? Are your neighbors sending their boys to sea? These things must come to pass before we are a maritime Nation, prepared to buy over 2,000 ships.

The few American shipping companies now in the market can not and will not buy all our ships. To illustrate: We had a conference recently with one of our largest shipowners. He had urged Congress to require us to reduce our price of $200 to $225 per ton to $125 to $140 per ton. We asked him how many ships his companies would buy at his prices. He replied, "About 100." We then asked how many the entire shipping interests of the country would purchase. He replied, "About 200 more." We then asked, "How does that leave the Government? We sell you 300 of our best hand-picked ships at 40 per cent less than cost. We are left with more than 1,800 ships of all sorts on our hands, which the Government must operate in competition with the better ships of the private owners. That will not solve the problem. Your few companies with 400 or 500 ships do not make a merchant marine adequate to the needs of the country. Must the Government, after selling you its best ships at much less than cost, less than you can possibly build them for, keep the poorer ships, and operate them at this great disadvantage?" He admitted that his plan would not solve the problem and that he was probably looking at it from his own rather than the Government's point of view.

What, then, is the solution?

Congress should let it be understood that it will not compel the board to sell ships. Agitation to this end keeps conditions unsettled and prevents sales. The hope that Congress will compel us to sell the ships in a short time heads buyers off, hoping for low prices.

The Shipping Board must be left to deal with the problem. We are making a number of sales, and the demand at present prices is increasing, but much time must pass before the ships can be sold. No new enterprise, involving billions of capital, was ever established in a day.

My conclusion is, it is not possible to have a successful American merchant marine until the country grows into the ship habit.

(a) The American newspapers and magazines must arouse the thinking men among manufacturers, investment bankers, farmers, and labor to the necessity for a merchant marine; teach the people to think and act in the language of shipping. They must first understand, then they will act. Already great strides are being made. Even now we have 300 firms or companies operating Shipping Board ships. They employ on land and sea nearly 60,000 men in this service. We maintain a recruiting service and schools to teach officers, engineers, and sailors how to do the work and fit them for the sea.

(b) The Congress is giving the matter close attention, and besides the Greene bill should pass a mortgage bill substantially like the one now before the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, to guarantee investors a lien for the purchase price of the ships which will, in financial circles, have as much value as a railroad mortgage, and investment bankers and the public may freely invest in ship securities.

(c) American insurance is essential. Companies must be encouraged and new ones established that we be not dependent on foreign companies for our ship insurance, as we are now. This is of great importance.

(d) The American Bureau of Shipping must be developed and strengthened, to the end that in all technical matters affecting shipping we may be independent of any foreign institution.

Meantime, with the aid of individual operators, we operate the ships with as much profit as unsettled conditions of the time permit, but nevertheless with a profit, and the work of creating an American merchant marine goes on.

These are the high lights.

To accomplish this great task all Americans of all classes must pull together. The tales of the sea must become the gossip of the nursery and of the fireside.

It is not possible for America to hide her head in the sand. Will she attempt a splendid but decaying isolation or will she go down to the sea in ships, and, using her own Panama Canal, unite the Americas, the Orient, and the Occident in friendly trade, and lend her aid toward an enduring peace?

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 8819. An act to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1919, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

RAILROAD CONTROL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3288) further to regulate commerce among the States and with foreign nations, and to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gronna	McKellar	Smith, Ga.
Ball	Hale	McLean	Smith, Md.
Bankhead	Harding	McNary	Smoot
Borah	Harris	Moses	Spencer
Brandegee	Harrison	Nelson	Stanley
Calder	Henderson	New	Sterling
Capper	Johnson, S. Dak.	Newberry	Sutherland
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Nugent	Thomas
Cummins	Kellogg	Overman	Townsend
Curtis	Kendrick	Page	Trammell
Dial	Kenyon	Phipps	Walsh, Mass.
Dillingham	King	Poindexter	Walsh, Mont.
Edge	Kirby	Pomerene	Watson
Fernald	Knox	Ransdell	Williams
Frelinghuysen	La Follette	Sheppard
Gay	Lenroot	Sherman

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I wish to announce that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] is absent from the city on important business.

I desire also to announce that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] is absent on account of death in his family.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM], the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are detained on official business.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is detained by illness in his family.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is detained on official business.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] are absent on public business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The pending amendment is the amendment of the Senator from New York

[Mr. CALDER]. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it.

Mr. CALDER. I ask for a division.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. May the amendment be stated?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 76, after line 4, insert the following as a new section:

SEC. 34½. That the first paragraph of section 1 of the act to regulate commerce, as amended, be further amended by striking out the words "natural or" after the second occurence of the word "except" in such paragraph.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, there seems to be a lack of information on the part of some Senators as to the purpose of the proposed amendment.

The amendment is offered so as to put natural gas, where it is taken from one State to another, under control of the Interstate Commerce Commission. I have here a letter from a member of the public service commission of New York State, who says:

I believe that a very small amendment to the interstate-commerce law so as to include instead of exclude natural gas would largely solve the problem. The Interstate Commerce Commission would deal with both aspects of the question, first, the conservation of the supply in so far as interstate use is involved for the benefit of the communities which have adapted themselves to the use of this fuel, and, secondly, the just and fair distribution of the remaining supply as among those communities. The States can not do it, but if we had this interstate control provided the individual States might well be left and ought to be left with full and exclusive powers to regulate prices and service of the gas after transportation.

We are in this difficult situation in the counties in New York State bordering on the Pennsylvania line. The gas comes from Pennsylvania transmitted by pipe lines. We have no control over the price or the amount of gas that comes into our State, and the consumers and municipalities of our State are at the complete mercy of the Pennsylvania Gas Trust. The same thing, it seems to me, might occur in other States. I know that in Ohio gas is obtained from West Virginia.

I can not for the life of me understand why the amendment should not be agreed to. There is no Federal control over natural gas at the present time. The Government has supervision over oil that is piped from one State to another, from the producer into the State where it is consumed, and it seems to me that this same supervision should extend to natural gas.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CALDER. Certainly.

Mr. KING. It seems to me that under the law of the State of New York, under the ordinances of the municipalities into which the gas is taken, there is sufficient power now to regulate the price and the standard. I do not understand that because gas may be brought from some other State into a given State the latter does not have power to regulate the price to the consumer. If it is brought into a municipality a franchise must be obtained and the city may impose such reasonable limitations as it may deem necessary. It may fix the price at which the vendor shall supply the gas to the inhabitants of a city.

I do not quite understand the broad statement of the Senator that the State of New York and the municipalities within the State have no control over the gas that is brought into that State from the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. CALDER. Of course the municipalities in New York State can deal with the Pennsylvania companies, and they can refuse to purchase the gas if they so desire. But the difficulty is that these companies have their pipe lines across the border and laid in the streets of our cities; they have a complete monopoly; they can cut the supply off if they wish, and in fact they have threatened to do so; they can raise the price unduly and we are without relief. We are powerless without this legislation. Our public service commission insist that they have control over these commodities which are purely intrastate, but they have no control where the gas originates in an adjoining State.

Mr. KING. If the Senator from New York will pardon me, conferring upon the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to regulate rates for artificial or natural gas would not compel, as I conceive the law, the producer of the gas in one State to convey it into another State. It is entirely at his option whether he will cross the line and vend his product in some other State. It seems to me the municipalities in which the gas is used may fix the price and may prescribe the terms under which it may be sold within the municipal limits.

I have no doubt that county regulations may be prescribed by the county commissioners with respect to conveying gas along the public highways within the counties in order to reach the municipalities, and I have no doubt that the county officials have authority under the laws of the State of New York to prescribe regulations with respect to the sale of gas within the limits of the counties.

Mr. CALDER. In reply to what the Senator suggests, I desire to call his attention to a brief filed recently in the court of appeals in New York in relation to this very subject:

Recently the Pennsylvania company attempted to raise its rates. A citizen of Jamestown filed a complaint with the New York Public Service Commission, alleging that the new rates were exorbitant. The gas company was directed to answer the complaint. It filed with the commission a demurrer to the jurisdiction of the commission, which the commission overruled. The gas company then sued out a writ of prohibition. Its petition alleges that the attempted regulation of its rates is an unconstitutional interference with interstate commerce.

The writ was granted at special term and vacated at the appellate division.

The matter is now pending in our court of appeals in New York. Then the brief goes on to state the details regarding the matter.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that the transportation of natural gas is a subject which ought to come under the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission. There is no other governmental department that can supervise it. This commodity is now entering into interstate commerce in such large volume that it ought to be regulated in the manner provided by the amendment.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, this question was only incidentally before the Interstate Commerce Committee during its hearings. I think I personally spoke about it at the time. I have had some information bearing upon the subject growing out of some litigation in which I represented the city of Canton some years ago, before I came to the Senate.

In eastern Ohio the larger part of the natural-gas supply comes from West Virginia. Nearly all of the cities in eastern Ohio are supplied, to a greater or less extent, by the East Ohio Gas Co., which gets its supply largely from another company in West Virginia. Both of these companies are subsidiary companies of the Standard Oil Co. The gas is delivered by the West Virginia company—I am not giving its corporate name—to the medial line of the Ohio River. Thence it is received by the East Ohio Gas Co. In the several cities in Ohio gas rates are fixed by the municipalities.

The franchises of the gas companies are granted for a limited period of years. They are now having very serious trouble in securing a sufficient quantity of gas in Salem, Alliance, Canton, Cleveland, and other cities. A large part of the gas produced in Ohio is piped into the State of Michigan and consumed there.

I had hoped that we might have fuller information upon the subject than we now have, but as this amendment has been presented, I expect to vote for it. It seems to me that when gas is delivered from one State into another it is a proper subject for the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Legally speaking, I see no difference between the Federal Government taking control of pipe lines which are used for the interstate conveyance of oil and of interstate lines which are used for the conveyance of gas. It may be that in the practical administration of the subject there are difficulties which I do not now have in mind.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to me?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. KING. If it is the function of the Federal Government to take control of gas which is produced in one State and carry it into another, why may not the Federal Government take charge of the coal which is produced in Ohio, in Wyoming, and in Pennsylvania, and regulate its price and distribution throughout the United States? Why may it not take charge of wool which is produced in the States of the West and regulate that; and of salt which is produced in my State and regulate its price and distribution throughout the United States?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, it is a sufficient answer to that question to say that Congress has jurisdiction of the regulation of interstate commerce. Of course, when it comes to the practical application of the rule, we might meet with difficulties as to the several commodities.

I may say that at the first session of this Congress I asked the Appropriations Committee for a small appropriation for the Geological Bureau in order to enable them to make a survey of the gas territory. A similar survey was made in Oklahoma, and, I think, in Kansas, and to the benefit of the people generally in those sections. I felt there should be a similar survey made in the eastern gas fields. The distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee considered that it was unwise to take up that subject at that time; and I had it in mind to ask the Appropriations Committee for a similar appropriation when the regular appropriation bills of the session are brought before the Senate.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, before the Senator from Ohio finishes I desire to suggest to him, especially in view of the question just put by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], a phase of the matter which has troubled me. I make the suggestion to the Senator from Ohio, for I want him to consider the subject from that standpoint.

I have no objection whatever to making pipe lines for the conveyance of natural gas operated between States subject to the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and that is all that is accomplished by the amendment of the Senator from New York; but the relief which he hopes to secure through the subjection of pipe lines to the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission will, in my judgment, be entirely impossible.

We can make pipe lines as common carriers subject in their operation to the Interstate Commerce Commission; that is, we can regulate the commerce in that way; but we can no more prevent the State of Ohio from passing a law which will limit the distribution of natural gas in that State to the State itself than we can prevent the State of Pennsylvania from saying that certain of its coal shall not be transported beyond the State. Much less could we give to the Interstate Commerce Commission the authority to fix the price of the commodity when it is delivered in Jamestown or at any other point in New York. In other words, the whole effect of the amendment, if it were adopted, would simply be to regulate the operation of the common carrier, prescribe, if you please, the terms upon which the gas should be carried through the pipes by the common carrier; but we can no more give to New York the relief which it seeks in this amendment than we could give to the public of my State relief in connection with the price of coal that might be shipped in from Ohio or from Pennsylvania. We can prescribe the terms on which the common carrier shall deliver the commodity, but we can not further interfere with it. I have not believed therefore that the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York would be of any avail whatsoever, so far as the relief which the people of New York seek to secure is concerned. That is my only objection to the amendment.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I think I am in accord with the views expressed by the Senator. The only thing we can do is to regulate the transportation of the commodity; we can not, I am sure, fix the price of the gas.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I have a brief prepared on this very subject, and, if I am correct in my understanding of it, the decision of the Supreme Court is entirely at variance with the views just uttered by the Senator from Iowa. I quote from that brief as follows:

> In West v. Kansas Natural Gas Co. (221 U. S., 229–255), the question was whether a State had a right to prohibit the sale or shipment of its products to other States. Oklahoma undertook to prevent the piping of natural gas out of the State. She claimed that this statute was enacted to conserve her natural resources.
>
> The United States Supreme Court pointed out that the object of the statute was to prevent waste, and politely indicated the selfish nature of the measure. Justice McKenna used this language:
>
> Gas, when reduced to possession, is a commodity; it belongs to the owner of the land, and, when reduced to possession, is his individual property, subject to sale by him, and may be a subject of intrastate commerce and interstate commerce. The statute of Oklahoma recognizes it to be a subject of intrastate commerce, but seeks to prohibit it from being the subject of interstate commerce, and this is the purpose of its conservation. In other words, the purpose of its conservation is in a sense commercial—the business welfare of the State, as coal might be, or timber. Both of those products may be limited in amount, and the same consideration of the public welfare which would confine gas to the use of the inhabitants of a State. If the States have such a power a singular situation might result. Pennsylvania might keep its coal, the Northwest its timber, the mining States their minerals. And why may not the products of the field be brought within the principle? * * * To what consequences does such power tend? If one State has it, all States have it—
>
> And so forth.
>
> The court held that no legislature had the right to provide that such a commodity could not be shipped.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am not asserting that we could pass a law that would prohibit a man who has a commodity to sell from selling it outside of the State. If I was understood as saying that, I was misunderstood. What I was saying is that when we adopt the amendment which the Senator from New York has offered we simply make a pipe line which crosses the boundaries of two States a common carrier and subject that common carrier to the provisions of the act to regulate commerce. It is supposed that every person in Pennsylvania or Ohio who has gas to distribute can put the gas into this pipe line. The common carrier is not the vendor of gas. The common carrier is the carrier of gas, and it has nothing to do with the ownership or the distribution of the commodity except to transport it through its pipe line from one State to another.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Like an oil pipe line.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely as on oil pipe line. Every person who has gas to sell, if he is proximate to a pipe line, has the right to connect with the pipe line and put his gas into it. There are great difficulties, of course, in the practical administration of a law of that kind, just as it has been found to be practically worthless in transporting oil from Oklahoma to Texas, and possibly in other communities; but I have no objection on the ground of the difficulty in its operation. I am only saying that when a pipe-line company is made a common carrier and subjected to the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission it will not give the relief to the people of New York that the Senator has in mind. That is my judgment.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I know that this will not give complete relief, but I am anxious, as the people of the southern section of New York are, that there should be some tribunal to which we might appeal for investigation, or information, or perhaps relief in some way or other. There is no other place to go to to-day. This whole subject is entirely out of the purview and control of the public-service commissions of the respective States, and it ought to be lodged somewhere.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I think the last remark of the Senator from New York indicates the motive—and I use the term in the most proper sense—that has inspired this amendment. The Senator says, in effect, that he hopes to bring relief in some way or other to a condition which perhaps is not satisfactory. That position graphically illustrates the tendency to come to Congress to secure relief for every imaginary human ill. If a man is dissatisfied with his gas bill, or with his sugar bill, or with his physician's bill, he at once wants either an investigation or a congressional law, or both, if he can get them. We have been making progress in that direction very rapidly since the outbreak of hostilities, although the tendency was manifest for a good many years before that time.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], who is one of the best-informed men upon everything regarding interstate commerce, has, to my mind, very clearly drawn the distinction between the regulation of a carrier and the regulation or control of the product which is the subject of carriage. I do not see how the creation of an added jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission over the subject of transporting gas from Pennsylvania to New York is going to relieve the unsatisfactory conditions which seem to pervade the communities of southern New York where the commodity is consumed. It will not get relief of some sort, or of any sort, but it will add very materially to the burdens of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

That brings me to the real objection which I have to the amendment.

The Interstate Commerce Commission already has more duties to perform under the law than it is possible for it to accomplish. One reason why the staff of assistants, examiners, experts, inspectors, and so forth, is so numerous is the enormous amount of business which Congress has seen fit to impose upon its shoulders. Now, we propose by this amendment, instead of relieving an overburdened commission, to add to it another duty, which the Senator from Iowa says will be practically perfunctory, in so far as any material benefit is concerned, but which will inevitably result in the establishment of another subbureau on natural gas, with a superintendent and deputy superintendent, a secretary and a deputy secretary, scores of stenographers and their deputies, and perhaps another million dollars of appropriation for the purpose of enabling the Interstate Commerce Commission to oversee merely the carriage of a commodity, but not to provide for its distribution, fix a price upon it, or otherwise exert any authority over the matter of bargain and sale of the commodity.

Mr. President, it seems to me that if this sort of legislation is desirable, we ought not to confine it to natural gas. Artificial gas may equally be produced in Pennsylvania and piped into New York, or vice versa. The sale of cotton and wheat and coal may also form, as it does form, a very large proportion of interstate commerce.

Why not authorize the Interstate Commerce Commission to take charge of and control these very desirable and necessary commodities? Where will we draw the line between the regulation of the carriage of material and the price or distribution of the material itself? The distinction may be very clear in our minds; it is not clear at all to the man who is suffering from prices and who thinks it is a matter of carriage; and if he fails to get the relief which he thinks ought to come through the enactment of a measure of this kind, then his discontent increases, and he either damns Congress for its incompetency and stupidity or else he attributes some improper motive to those having charge of the administration of the law.

I think, Mr. President, that if we are going to create some Federal jurisdiction or authority over this particular subject we ought to put it somewhere else. There are a number of bureaus in the city of Washington whose duties overlap each other. Some time ago, in a magazine article, I read quite an interesting account of this evil of overlapping of jurisdictions; and the extent to which it goes is remarkable, even under lax conditions such as prevail here in Washington in the administration of public affairs. We have a Trade Commission; we have a number of others that have been created, or if the pinch comes we might shut our eyes and establish one more. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] suggests the Bureau of Mines. Then there is the Bureau of Standards; in fact, there are lots of bureaus here. A man can not go on the street and throw a stone without endangering the life or the limb of half a dozen people representing as many bureaus in the city.

The Interstate Commerce Commission is, as I have stated, worked to death. There is no question but that it has the public confidence. It tries and tries very nobly and constantly to carry the obligations that we have placed upon it. It has failed in certain instances. It may break down altogether if we keep increasing the load, and thus adding to its difficulties of functioning.

I hope the amendment will be rejected.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, I simply want to add that there is a very great interest in some helpful regulation of natural-gas service; but I can not understand how it is possible to bring about this regulation under any authority of the Interstate Commerce Commission or in any harmony with its service as a transportation division.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] has just touched upon a rather interesting phase of the matter. The present complaint in Ohio, notably, is due to the waning supply of natural gas and the attending advancement in the rate charged for service. I have never understood that the interstate-commerce function, the regulation of interstate commerce, regulated rates on service to the consumer. The Senator from Colorado brings up the point that we are ultimately to have interstate transportation of artificial gas. That is one of the big enterprises of the very near future. Unquestionably we are to have gas manufactured at the coal mine and translated in pipe lines to the various sections of the country. Moreover, we are soon to have the tremendous enterprise of producing power at the coal mine and transmitting power over State lines to various sections of the country. It opens up a very large question, and I do not think we are going to meet it by shunting off a momentary proposition on to the Interstate Commerce Commission. If the various States are unable to meet this situation with their public-utilities commissions, it ought to be taken up as a separate matter, quite apart from the ordinary transportation of commerce.

I think, therefore, that the Senator from New York will best serve his purpose if he omits shunting this into the railroad bill and insists upon taking it up in a much broader way.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, just a word.

Within the past month I have received three letters which are somewhat paralleled by the position taken by the Senator from New York. One letter was written by a constituent of mine, stating that the price of the lumber which we obtain in Utah from Oregon is too high; that the venders are charging too much; and that inasmuch as it is interstate commerce—that is to say, that it comes to us by a common carrier engaged in interstate-commerce business—the Congress of the United States has power to take up the price of lumber in the State of Utah, or in any of the States to which it is sent, and regulate the prices and regulate the distribution. I received another communication recently because of the acute coal situation. It was written from California, and the contention was made that the mines in Utah and the mines in Wyoming producing coal, which is transported to the Pacific coast, were either charging too much, or that the railroads were charging too much, and that Congress should pass a law regulating the sale and distribution in California, or in those States to which the coal is sent, of coal mined in Utah or Wyoming.

So the spirit seems to be, Mr. President, that Congress has the power not to regulate the instrumentalities of transportation under the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution but to regulate the sale and the vending of the articles and the commodities that enter into interstate commerce. In other words, Congress is to assume police power and jurisdiction over commerce, over the States, regulate the price of products manufactured and vended within the States or brought within the States and there sold. Of course, such a position is manifestly absurd, and reveals a failure to appreciate the limitations upon the Federal Government and the powers and the duties of the State government.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] very properly indicated the limitations upon the Federal Government. There is no complaint here, as I understand the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], that the gas company discriminates against some other gas company that is engaged in the transportation of gas from one State to another, or that the instrumentality employed in transmitting the gas is improper; that it is wasteful; that the pipe line is inadequate; or that it is insufficient; or that there should be some regulation of the instrumentality. The theory seems to be that Congress should regulate the price and the distribution within the municipalities of the State of New York.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I think the Senator, with all due respect, is wrong when he says there is no complaint in the communities where the gas is furnished. The fact is there is a very great deal of complaint. I am not clear that the difficulty can be met in the way indicated by this amendment, but it is charged in Ohio, for instance, that when the municipal franchises are about to expire they threaten to cut off the supply in one town because they can get a larger price in another town, and the consumers are in this way subject to the mercy of the company. I do not say that is true, but I simply say that is the complaint which is being made.

Mr. KNOX. May I inquire of the Senator from Ohio if that is not a matter subject to regulation by your State public utilities commission?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I think they have tried to deal with it somewhat. I am not entirely clear as to the statutory authority which has been conferred upon the State commission. But the franchises are usually given by the several municipalities themselves, and they set out the terms and the conditions, and the price at which the company shall furnish the gas.

Mr. KNOX. If the Senator from Utah will permit me, it is pretty generally the case that all public utilities of that character are bound to furnish their service without discrimination, either as between individuals or as between communities.

Mr. POMERENE. That power should exist. It did not exist some years ago in Ohio; but whether or not the law has been changed, I do not know.

Mr. KNOX. If I may be permitted to advert to something that the Senator from Ohio said a moment ago, I am not a particle apprehensive about the imminence of our having to pipe the country for the transportation of artificial gas. Most extraordinary things are occurring in the gas fields which the public know very little about. Within the last 60 days, within 15 miles of the courthouse of the city of Pittsburgh, there have been discovered, on what were supposed to be old, worked-out fields, from which no gas had been obtained for years, the most tremendous gushers that have ever been discovered anywhere. When I was there a week or 10 days ago I visited one well that is producing 50,000,000 cubic feet of gas a day, and that comes from finding a new sand. They have gone down deeper, some 3,200 or 3,300 feet, and it is the consensus of opinion among what are known as the gas "scouts" out in that part of the country that all that sand, which extends up the Allegheny River toward New York, will be as fertile, or practically as fertile, as that portion of it which was tapped so near the city of Pittsburgh. Rather an amusing incident connected with it is that we were depending largely on West Virginia, just as Ohio has been depending on West Virginia for her gas, and has been for the last 10 or 15 years. When they turned this 50,000,000 cubic feet well into the pipe lines they blew the West Virginia gas back on them.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. HARDING. There would be an equalization of rates by the State utilities commission; but what is clearly a shortage of gas as compared with the demand leads to discrimination. If the gas supply were abundant it would be very natural for a gas company to wish to distribute to all the consumers it might enlist; but very recently in my home city there has been promulgated a new schedule, and a rather considerate one, I think. Aiming to serve the greatest number of people in domestic consumption, the minimum price is given to the domestic consumer based on a limited supply. For instance, the minimum price of gas is on 5,000 feet. To the consumer who uses a second 5,000 feet the price is raised, and for each additional 5,000 the rate goes up, until the consumer who used to buy gas in 100,000 lots at 15 cents per thousand now pays about 70 cents a thousand, or something like twice what the domestic consumer pays.

That reflects the waning supply of natural gas, and on the waning supply are based the discriminating prices in various communities of the State. My colleague has pointed out one wrong with which he is very familiar, because it comes from his home county. A local council refused to grant the gas company a franchise at a rate which it thought comparable to other rates existing in Ohio. Instantly the gas company makes the complaint that it has not the gas to furnish them the supply they desire, and the proposal is to shut them off. No community wishes to be shut off from so desirable a commodity, and then this conflict arises. But I am at a loss to understand, though I am willing to vote for any measure that will bring the thing under a broad consideration, how the Interstate Commerce Commission can become the successful arbiter in this very important question.

Mr. CALDER. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARDING. Certainly. If the Senator will permit me, the Senator from Utah has the floor.

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CALDER. This amendment does not go as far as I would like to have it go.

The trouble to-day is we have no place to go to get accurate information of all these things, and it seemed to me this is the way, without unnecessarily burdening the commission. New York, Buffalo, Dunkirk, and Jamestown, in New York, get gas from over the border in Pennsylvania. We can be shut off from the supply, if they seek to raise the price and we are not willing to give it, and our public-service commission has no control over that situation. I am trying to get somewhere with it, and while I know it does not quite meet what the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] would like to do, or I would like to do myself, it seemed to me this was a way whereby we could get information about the subject and have some control over at least part of it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, as I understood the Senator from New York—and his later remarks corroborate his former statement—there is no complaint with respect to the instrumentalities employed in transmitting gas. There is no contention that the corporation that owns the gas pipe lines for transmitting the product from Pennsylvania to New York is discriminating against producers, or proposes to ship or sell the gas in some other State. I can readily perceive the necessity of some legislation, if there is one gas line which is a common carrier for the product of a number of producers from one State to another, and it discriminates and favors A by giving him a rate of transportation in preference to the rate which is given B or C. But that is not the condition here, and the contention of the Senator from New York seems to me to be that the Federal Government, through the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission, whether it has it now or whether we shall confer it upon it, shall fix the prices at which gas shall be sold and the regulations under which it shall be sold in the various States, obviously matters which belong to the States themselves, or to the municipalities into which the gas may be carried by the manufacturer of the product.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, under my amendment the Interstate Commerce Commission can not fix the price of gas. I know that. It can fix the price, perhaps, of the transportation of gas, but under this amendment the Interstate Commerce Commission can find out how much gas there is, where the supply is, if it is available for transportation, and all such information. There is no other place to go to-day to get that information that I know of.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not think we ought to devolve upon the Interstate Commerce Commission the fishing excursions which the Senator suggests. This information is readily available. The States may obtain it and doubtless the States are obtaining it as fast as the exigencies require. It seems to me that we ought not now to increase the burdens of the Interstate Commerce Commission. As the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] said a moment ago, when the power bill is passed, doubtless there will be created some board that will have to do with the question of power, treating it from the interstate-commerce standpoint; and if it becomes necessary then to increase the power of the board which may be created and it becomes apparent that pipe lines that are used in the transmission of gas should be placed under the supervision of some organization or board created by the Federal Government the matter can then be considered in a comprehensive manner.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I suggest that in addition to the governmental agencies which already exist, and which might properly take control of this subject, there is the Geological Survey; and if the Senator from New York will apply, or his State will apply, to the Geological Survey, he can obtain the data in regard to the whereabouts of gas, the quantity that flows through the pipes, and other information.

It has been mentioned that the gas companies are already resorting to the production of artificial gas. In some sections of my State, and no doubt in Pennsylvania, they are already engaged in the manufacture of natural gas through great producer gas plants. The Government itself has built near Fairmont, in West Virginia, for the primary purpose of securing essential ingredients for the manufacture of explosives, a great producer gas plant, which will inevitably come into the possession of some of the pipe-line companies sending gas from our State to other States. These pipe-line companies, realizing that the supply of gas is constantly waning, are themselves engaged in the enterprise and looking over the field carefully for the purpose of establishing great producer gas plants.

It seems to me that the Interstate Commerce Commission is not the body which would naturally take hold of this subject. It would rather come under the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Mines or the Geological Survey, which already has an immense amount of data relating to the subject. Inasmuch as has already been pointed out by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] under the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution the Federal Government can not fix the price of this commodity—and that is the primary complaint which is made—it would be unwise to saddle upon the Interstate Commerce Commission this additional duty when it has no organization at hand ready to take it up.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, in the discussion a moment ago the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] inquired whether or not I had any information as to the waste of gas. The remarks of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND] prompt me to call attention to a report of Samuel S. Myer, of Columbus, Ohio, published by the Smithsonian Institution. The statement he made is as follows:

> In tests on over 1,000 oils wells in West Virginia it was shown that the waste of natural gas of each well was at the rate of 12 M. cubic feet a day, or 4,380 M. cubic feet of natural gas a well per annum. There are at least 16,000 oil wells in West Virginia, and at this rate the annual waste from this source would be at least 70,000,000 M. cubic feet of natural gas, equivalent to about one-third of all the natural gas used for domestic consumption in the United States.
>
> In a recent publication there is a picture of a gas well in West Virginia showing two 4-inch lines on a hillside blowing at least 5,000,000 cubic feet of natural gas into the air in order to get oil.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the legislation is meritorious. It would lead ultimately to legislation that would enable the people of the country to know just where the gas was, just how it could be obtained for the country at large, and at a reasonable figure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER]. He has asked for a division.

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LENROOT. I do not think that the railway problem has ever been better stated than in the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission of last year, where they said:

> The fundamental aim or purpose should be to secure transportation that will be adequate for the Nation's needs, even in time of national stress or peril, and to furnish to the public safe, adequate, and efficient transportation at the lowest cost consistent with that service.

Mr. President, in the attempted solution of the problem there are three elements that must be considered—the interest of the investor, the interest of the employee, and the interest of the public. While the Committee on Interstate Commerce has devoted many months to a consideration of the problem, as one reads the hearings one is convinced that the interest of the investor and the interest of the employee constituted by far the major portion of the presentation to the committee. I, of course, most freely acknowledge that the committee, in its consideration of the problem, had primarily in mind the public interest; but, while there are those three items that must be considered—the interest of the investor, the interest of the employee, and the interest of the public—the interest of the public is the first and greatest consideration. In order to secure such a solution as is suggested by the Interstate Commerce Commission, from the public standpoint, two things must be sought—a reasonable rate and efficient service. Those things can not be secured unless there be protection to the legitimate investor and justice to the employees upon the railroads.

There are several plans that have been proposed, and I shall discuss the pending plan in some detail a little later, but I want to spend a little time upon the general outline of some of the different plans that have been proposed. So far as the pending plan is concerned, I can not support the bill, because I believe that if it should be enacted into law it would only further complicate a very badly complicated situation. I do not believe that it would result in efficient railway transportation with reasonable rates or efficient service.

One of the plans that has been presented and concerning which a great propaganda is now going on over the country I wish to analyze at some length. I refer to the Plumb plan of railroad control. I am glad to say that it is apparent that no Senator upon either side of the aisle has been found who is willing to introduce in the form of a bill that plan. It seems to me clear that the plan is destructive of every principle of legislation in the public interest, and yet we are told that there is a fund of $4,000,000 which has been raised to further the plan.

I do not believe that up to this time there has been placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD any analysis or outline of what the plan is.

In the first place the Plumb plan, according to the bill that was introduced in the House by request—and I am glad to say that I understand that the Representative who introduced it has since stated that he himself is not in favor of it—proposes to immediately vest in the Government upon a date to be named in the bill all of the railroads in the country, and a scheme of valuation is laid down in the bill, under which the author of the plan, Mr. Plumb, states that the railroads of the country, while carrying a book investment of about $19,000,000,000, will be acquired at an expenditure of about $12,000,000,000. It is provided in the bill—

That all values not included in the grants made in the charters of the corporate owners or the laws under which they operate or in the grants made to individual owners shall be regarded as values retained by the public in the public highways of the United States and not subject to compensation.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I do not want to interrupt the thread of the observations which the Senator is making, but I understood the Senator a moment ago to say that an analysis of the Plumb plan had not been called to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. LENROOT. If I am mistaken in that, I wish the Senator would correct me.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] wrote a very full and complete analysis of the Plumb plan and transmitted it as a letter to some of his correspondents in the State of Ohio. I deemed it so important a contribution to the subject that I asked that it be inserted in the RECORD, and it was placed in the RECORD sometime ago.

Mr. LENROOT. I am very sorry that it escaped my attention, and I am very glad that it has been done by the very able Senator from Ohio. The author of the Plumb plan seems to be of the opinion that elements of value can be fixed by legislative declaration.

Of course, Congress can not fix the basis of value nor determine the elements of value. That is not a legislative question. That is a judicial question solely. The committee in the pending bill has recognized that by not attempting in any way to determine or fix elements of value. There can be only one object to be secured in any legislative declaration of value, and I think that something can be accomplished by such legislative declaration sometimes, and that is in the way of negotiation in securing an agreement between the owners of the railroads and the Government if the Government is to purchase, or as to what elements are to be considered in those negotiations.

But, of course, if the railroads are not satisfied with those elements as the basis of valuation, the courts are, and must be, open to them, and a legislative declaration has no bearing upon the subject. So that when Mr. Plumb says that under their plan the railroads of the country can be secured for the sum of $12,000,000,000 it is not true under his plan more than under any other plan. The amount to be paid for the railroads would be the same under the present pending Senate bill as it would be under the Plumb plan, because eventually that question must be determined by the courts and not by Congress.

Mr. POMERENE. May I offer the suggestion that Mr. Plumb has also suggested that the roads could be bought and paid for by Government bonds at 4 per cent?

Mr. LENROOT. I am just coming to that. That is my next point.

It is next provided that to pay for the roads—

That any capital sum payable under an agreement or award made by said appraisement board to said owner, or under any final judicial review of such award, or for new extensions and capital improvements directed to be made by such appraisement board, shall be discharged in whole or in part by cash payments, or, if the Secretary of the Treasury so direct and said owners shall so agree, by the issuance to such owners of bonds as hereinafter provided of a par value not exceeding in amount the total amount of such agreement awarded by the appraisement board or by judicial determination.

That for the purposes of paying such amount of compensation so determined, the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President of the United States, is hereby authorized, from time to time as required, to issue bonds in such form and subject to such terms of issue, conversion, redemption, maturities, payments, and rate and time of payment of interest as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

As the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] has suggested, it is contended by the advocates of the plan that the bonds can be issued at a 4 per cent rate. When one remembers that the last issue of Liberty bonds, appealing to the patriotism of the people of the country, were required to be issued at the rate of 4¼ per cent, and when one contemplates an issue of bonds here of anywhere from $12,000,000,000 to $16,000,000,000 or $18,000,000,000, of course it is idle to say that any such rate could be secured. No one can say, of course, how high a rate would be necessary in order to float such an issue of bonds, but I wish to call attention to the fact that the bill places in the Secretary of the Treasury unlimited power to fix the rate of interest. If my recollection serves me correctly, even during the stress of war Congress always prescribed the maximum rate upon bonds which might be issued by the Secretary of the Treasury, but in the pending bill there is delegated to the Secretary of the Treasury the right to issue bonds with an unlimited rate of interest, and he might issue them at 6 or 8 or even 10 per cent, if he sees fit, something that Congress has never heretofore authorized, and something which I hope Congress never will authorize, to place any such authority or power in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. I should like to call the Senator's attention to the fact, in connection with his reference to the question of the rate of interest, that Government bonds which make a return to the investor of 4.70 or 4.75 per cent are exempt from all taxation except surtaxes; and it is, therefore, very doubtful if the Government could sell even a 5 per cent Government bond at par subject to State and Federal taxation, as railroad securities are now.

Mr. LENROOT. Of course, under present conditions it is very clear that the rate of interest would have to be at least 5 per cent in order to sell the bonds.

The next provision of the bill is the one relating to the creation of a sinking fund to pay off bonds:

There is hereby appropriated out of the operating revenues of the national railways operation corporation, to be paid to the Treasurer of the United States, the sums provided for in paragraph (c), section 2, article 3, of this act, or out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, an amount equal to 1 per cent per annum upon the aggregate amount of bonds outstanding on July 1 of each year.

Mr. President, my attention has just been called to the fact that some Senators think I am discussing the pending bill. I am very sure that there are not many Senators who will so understand, for there is nothing of the kind that I am now discussing in the pending bill. I am discussing, let me again say, the so-called Plumb plan of railway control as embodied in a bill not introduced in the Senate but in the House of Representatives.

The appropriation is here made directly out of the Treasury—an annual appropriation—of 1 per cent of the amount that may be issued; and even under the lowest possible minimum amount it is herein provided that there may be an annual appropriation of $120,000,000 out of the Treasury for a sinking fund.

An appraisement board is created by the bill, consisting of the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission and three members of the directors of the railway operating corporation.

I next wish to call attention to the fact that this appraisement board is made superior to the Congress of the United States, and under the bill the United States Government is controlled and bound by the action and the decision of the appraisement board as to appropriations that Congress must make. Section 10 of the proposed act provides—

That the appraisement board may approve and the Federal Government shall build new extensions and capital improvements, including the construction of railroads along such route or routes as the national railways operating corporation shall designate and locate, with the necessary branch lines, feeders, sidings, switchings, and spurs.

Mr. President, to restate this proposition, we have the board of directors of a corporation having no responsibility, having no capital except that which Congress itself appropriates, given the right to determine when and where railroads shall be built, and whenever the appraisement board approves such determination, Congress, without inquiring into the merits of the proposition, is obligated to furnish the millions and, perhaps, billions of dollars that may be necessary to construct the roads.

The next provision we find is this:

And the appraisement board shall provide for the construction and extension of light railways, or less than standard-gauge railways, bridges, ferries, harbors, docks or piers, canals, or inland navigation facilities, which it deems necessary, and shall classify railroads in such manner as the board of directors shall deem fit.

In other words, there is delegated to the appraisement board the right to order the Congress of the United States to appropriate money for the improvement of harbors wherever this board may designate and to such an amount as the board may designate, and to construct bridges, terminal facilities, and purchase canals; in fact, there is reposed in the board all of the power which Congress now has over these subjects, Congress being left only the obligation to appropriate the money which the board may ask for. This subordinate body, its officials appointed in part by other parties, is made superior to the Congress of the United States and to the Government itself.

Another authority which is given to the appraisement board is that, with the approval of the President of the United States, it may "withdraw, locate, and dispose of, under such rules and regulations as it may prescribe, such area or areas of the public domain along the line or lines of proposed new railways for town-site purposes as it may from time to time designate."

Then the very next section is one that I am very sure will be of interest to every Western State, for it is provided that as to all public lands hereafter entered there shall be reserved to the United States a right of way over such lands for the construction of railroads, telegraph, and telephone lines. In other words, a homesteader to-morrow, if this bill should become a law to-day, might acquire a homestead, and years hence his farm be practically destroyed by a railroad going through it from one corner to the other, yet not a dollar could he receive in damages.

I am now coming to the really vital part of the bill. Ordinarily the matters of which I have spoken would be considered vital, but they are of very minor importance compared with the provisions of the bill to which I shall now address myself. After the railroads have been purchased with the money of the people, or the obligations of all of the people, it is provided that a corporation shall be created. It is then provided that the railroads of the country shall be turned over to this corporation controlled by the employees of the roads for operation, without any responsibility to the Government, without any obligation to the Government. This is provided through the means of a corporation to be known as the national railways operating corporation, which is to be managed by a directorate consisting of 15 members. Five of the members are to be appointed by the President, representing the public, and 10 of the members are to be selected by the employees of the roads divided into two classes, designated in the bill as official employees and classified employees, but nevertheless all of them employees of the roads. Where the line would be drawn as to who constitute "official employees" and who constitute "classified employees" I do not know, nor do I believe that there is any standard created at this time by which such a line could be drawn. I have understood, however, that it is contemplated that there would be about 20,000 so-called "official employees" who would come within one class and the remainder of the railway employees would come within the other class. So that we have here the railroads of the country bought by the people, paid for by the people, but their management turned over to a corporation in which the public, the owners of the properties, shall only have a representation of one-third, while the employees of the corporation shall have a representation of two-thirds. I believe that employees should have a voice in management, but they should not have a controlling majority.

Mr. President, in this country the endeavor to secure a transportation system not primarily in the interest of the owners of the roads but primarily in the interest of the public has involved a long struggle. It has been a long struggle, lasting nearly half a century now, to secure legislation denying the right to the owners of the roads, the stockholders, to exact any rate they thought fit to charge and with no limit upon the dividends they might receive. That struggle resulted in the final enactment of the interstate commerce act as we find it to-day, the purpose of which was to secure reasonable rates and prevent excessive returns to the owners of the railroads. It was a special privilege that was fought during that extended battle, and here, after that battle has been won, we find exactly the same kind of a special privilege insisted upon, not by the stockholders but by the employees of the railroads of this country.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if it will not interrupt the Senator, I should like to make a suggestion.

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. I should like also to observe that the provisions of this scheme are not limited to the railroads themselves, but the bill as presented authorizes the purchase of trucks and drays and all manner of vehicles that may be necessary to convey commodities from the manufacturer or producer to the railroad and from the railroad to the consignee.

Mr. LENROOT. That is true; it proposes to extend the system of transportation so that the product to be transported shall be called for at the factory or the home of the shipper and delivered to the ultimate consignee, which, of course, again would involve many millions of dollars, indeed running into the billions, aside from the value of the railroad property itself. But while two-thirds of the directorate is composed of employees of the roads, when it comes to actual operation the author of the bill has been careful to see to it that even the one-third of the directorate representing the public shall be squeezed out, for it is provided—

> That the board of directors shall, for the purpose of operating and carrying on the business of said corporation, divide into operating districts the territory of the United States and its possessions and shall in each such district constitute a district railway council of ——— members, which shall be elected in the following manner: One-third of the members of the council shall be elected by the classified employees within their district below the grade of official employee, one-third of the council shall be elected by the official employees within said district, and one-third, of whom one shall be designated as chairman, shall be appointed by the board of directors.

Now, then, let us see where the public comes in. Two-thirds of the management, it is provided here, shall be appointed directly by the employees, and then it is provided that the other third shall be appointed by the directorate; but the employees having a two-thirds majority of the directorate, of course one can easily see that the entire management of the operating regional systems will be in the hands of the employees, because the two-thirds majority in the directorate will have the power, and undoubtedly would exercise it, to see to it that the one-third appointed by the board of directors shall represent the employees and not the public.

As to the powers of this corporation, under section 4 it is provided—

> That the corporation is hereby empowered, authorized, and directed, for the period of its existence as herein set forth, to lease, operate, and maintain as a single system all of the railway lines and transportation properties of the United States and its possessions, and to do and perform every act, thing, or function which the Government of the United States could do or perform were it exercising the function of operating said railways, subject, however, to the limitations imposed by this act.

In other words, all of the powers of the Government are attempted to be delegated to this corporation, controlled by the employees of the roads, with no other restrictions than are found in the bill itself.

As to this board of directors, while it is provided that there shall be created wage boards, as in the pending Senate bill, one-half of whom shall be selected by the employees and one-half of whom shall be selected by the directors of the corporation, it would naturally follow that those wage boards would be constituted wholly of representatives of employees. The public would have nothing to say about the constitution of the wage boards, because when the employees constitute two-thirds of the directors of the corporation and they are empowered to appoint one half of the membership of the board and the employees directly the other half, it follows just as surely as night follows day that all of the members of these wage boards would be men representing the employees upon the roads, and there is no limitation upon the wages that can be fixed by these boards. The board of directors has the final determination of the matter of wages, and, of course, the employees having a two-thirds majority upon the board, the very natural and inevitable result would be that the wages would be fixed at the very highest point possible; and it would become the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission, as it is its duty to-day wherever wages are fixed by a tribunal created by law with authority to fix wages, to permit such rates to be charged to the public as will pay all operating expenses, including whatever the wages may be.

But it is said that this is guarded against by the provision for a division of net earnings; that inasmuch as the official employees receive twice the rate of dividend which it is provided in the bill that the classified employees shall receive, therefore the directors representing the official employees would never permit an unreasonable wage, because it would reduce the net earnings of the corporation if they did that, and their desire to secure large dividends would compel them to act, not upon the side of the classified employees, but upon the side of the public.

Let us see, Mr. President, how that would work out.

In the first place, I feel sure that there would be no dividends; there would be no net earnings to divide; and why? What incentive would there be, under this plan, for the official employees to keep wages down to a reasonable level in order that they might secure dividends?

Let us assume that there were some year net earnings to the extent of $500,000,000. Under the terms of the bill that $500,000,000 would be divided equally between the Government of the United States and the employees of the roads, so that there would be $250,000,000 to divide, and then it is provided that the official employees shall receive twice the rate of dividend that the classified employees will receive. Mark you, Mr. President, it is not an equal division of that $250,000,000 between the official employees and the classified employees. If it were that, there might be some argument that the official employees would be interested in securing as large net earnings as possible; but the provision is only that the official employees, according to the pay roll, shall receive twice the rate of dividends that the classified employees receive.

Now, let us assume that there will be 20,000 official employees, and that all the balance of them are classified employees. Assuming that there are 2,000,000 classified employees and 20,000 official employees, let us see whether the official employees would be more interested in increasing wages than they would in securing net earnings for the payment of dividends.

Assume that the average wage of the official employee is $4,000 per year and that the average wage of the classified employees is $2,000 per year. If there was this $250,000,000 to divide, the classified employee would receive at the end of the year $122.50, while the official employee would receive as his dividend $245. But at the end of the year the directors representing the classified employees would naturally say to their associates representing the official employees upon the directorate, "Why should we give this $250,000,000 to the Government? Let us absorb all of this in wages, and if you will vote with us to increase the wages of the classified employees by twice the amount of the dividend they receive this year we will agree that we will vote with you to increase your salaries by four times the amount of the dividend." Human nature, Mr. President, is the same with railway employees that it is with anyone else; and does anyone think that temptation would not be so strong that it would not be accepted? And what would be the result?

The next year the salaries of the official employees could be increased $980 a year, four times the amount of the dividend they received, the salaries of the classified employees could be increased $250 a year, twice the amount of the dividend they received the year before, and absorb the $500,000,000, and there would not be a penny for the Government to receive.

Would they do it? Will a duck swim? Of course it would be done, and it is no reflection upon the railway men when I say that they would do it.

So it is fair to say that there would be no net earnings under this plan. But it is provided in the bill that this interest upon the twelve or fifteen billion dollars, or whatever the amount may be, that is paid for the railroads, is not an obligation of this railway corporation unless they have net earnings after paying such wages as they see fit to fix for themselves and such operating expenses as may naturally occur. If there is any money left, then it is paid to the Treasury to pay the interest upon the bonds; but if there is no such money, the people of the United States, in addition to paying for the railroads or issuing bonds for the railways, must themselves pay the interest on the bonds out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. Can the Senator from Wisconsin give an estimate as to the amount of money which probably would go into the United States Treasury?

Mr. LENROOT. No; nor can the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I would not even undertake to do so.

Mr. LENROOT. This, Mr. President, is a very rough outline of what is known as the Plumb plan of railway control. To my mind there is only one difference between this plan and the Bolshevist soviet plan in Russia with reference to taking over railroads and other industries. The difference can be stated in a word. Over in Russia they boldly take the property and manage it themselves without paying anything for it. Under this plan they take the property and manage it themselves, but have the people pay for it. Otherwise, I can see no distinction between the two systems.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. KING. The Senator might add that in Russia they have one advantage which they claim under the present system—namely, they send the commissaire around from time to time, and he can compel the men to do their duty.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator which of the two plans, as described, he prefers?

Mr. LENROOT. Well, I will say that this plan does present a constitutional method of acquiring railway property, and does present a constitutional plan for the operation of railway property. If the representatives of the people in the Congress of the United States shall utterly forget and disregard the interests of the people of this great country, shall forget and disregard the interests of the farmer and every other class, and remember only the desires of one class, and extend this special privilege to them, of course they can do it; but when it is done, the beginning of the end of our institutions in this country is in sight.

Mr. WATSON. In other words, which while nominally constitutional, if pursued would overthrow the Constitution.

Mr. LENROOT. It would. And it is stated by the advocates of this plan, Mr. President, that they expect when once applied to the railroads it will be generally applied to every phase of activity in the country.

Let me just take a moment to apply it to the most important industry that we have in this country. Let us apply it to the farms of the United States. Under this plan ownership of all the farms of the United States would be vested in the Government, and then it would be provided that bonds should be issued, the obligations of all of the people of the country, to pay for these farms; and the Government of the United States having secured title to all the farms of the country would then do what? Turn them over to the farmers, the original owners, to operate? No. Turn them over to anybody with any obligation or responsibility to operate? No. Under the Plumb plan the farms of the United States would be turned over to the hired men upon the farms to operate, with the right expressly given to them, if they chose to do it, to take the entire product of the farm as compensation for their own services, and the people of the United States could pay the interest out of the Public Treasury upon the bonds that were issued to pay for them.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, if the Senator intends to mention the point I am about to suggest, I hope he will not allow me to refer to it; but if he does not, I ask what provision is made in the Plumb plan for the additions and betterments and extensions which will necessarily occur in developing our railroad system? I think everybody agrees that we must spend for many years to come from five hundred million to a thousand million dollars each year in order to keep our railroads in a position to render adequate transportation service. I would be glad if the Senator from Wisconsin would mention that point if he has it not already in mind to refer to it later.

Mr. LENROOT. I will be very glad to state what the plan contemplates. It contemplates that this irresponsible railway corporation, without capital except such as Congress appropriates, shall have, in the first instance, the right to determine when and where extensions shall be made and improvements and betterments constructed, and that whenever the board of appraisement approves it, it becomes the duty of the Congress of the United States to appropriate whatever sum is found by these bodies to be necessary out of the Public Treasury.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I make another suggestion.

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. At the present time, with probably about eighteen billions of United States bonds outstanding, most of which are nontaxable, all of which are nontaxable except under the supertax, these bonds are now selling at a discount, down perhaps as low as 94 cents on the dollar.

Mr. SMOOT. Lower than that.

Mr. POMERENE. Lower than that, I am advised. I have not seen the last quotations.

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. GRONNA. Ninety-two and a fraction.

Mr. POMERENE. I am advised by the Senator from Utah and the Senator from North Dakota that they are selling down as low as ninety-two and a fraction. If on top of that you were to sell twelve or fifteen billion dollars worth of railroad bonds, even though they are guaranteed by the United States, what would be the effect upon the market value of the other bonds?

Mr. LENROOT. I will say that under the Plumb plan they are not guaranteed by the United States; they are direct obligations of the United States.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator is right.

Mr. POINDEXTER rose.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I feel very certain that when this plan is once understood by the people of the country it will not receive any support, even from organized labor, outside of the railway employees themselves, because a proper title of this plan would be "a plan to further increase the high cost of living," for that would be the inevitable result of the operation of the plan. I have such confidence in the judgment and the patriotism of the railway employees of this country that I am satisfied that when they thoroughly understand the viciousness of this plan they will not ask any such unjust special privilege for themselves. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I was just going to suggest when I rose that when the removal of all the ordinary safeguards for the proper conduct of business is considered, and the effect of the establishment of a railway system such as provided in the so-called Plumb plan, the removal of those safeguards and the removal of the incentive to the proper conduct of business, would inevitably lead to the paralysis of the business itself and consequently the destruction of the employment of these men; and when it is thoroughly considered, the railway employees themselves would not be in favor of it.

Mr. LENROOT. I think that is true. So much for the Plumb plan. Now a word, Mr. President, with reference to the general plan that is now pending before the Senate. I wish to discuss it in detail a little later, and I shall touch upon some of the legal questions involved, which are very serious. But for the present I merely wish to speak of the general outline of this plan, and why, in my judgment, it does not offer a solution of the railway problem.

Under this plan it is contemplated that the transportation business of this country shall be conducted by between 20 and 35 independent systems, controlled, so far as the directorate is concerned, by the stockholders themselves; and it is urged, as against unification and complete consolidation, which I am in favor of, and which I believe offers the only correct solution, that this is necessary in order to preserve competition among the railroads and secure efficiency of service.

Mr. President, I have always recognized that through competition we do secure greater efficiency in service. Of course, so far as rates are concerned, there is no competition to-day, and has not been for many years, and there is the best of reasons why there should not be. But if the competitive system is to continue—and it is contemplated in this bill that it shall continue—the only possible purpose of the continuation of the competitive system is efficiency in service. And unless there be an incentive to secure that efficiency, competition will be nothing but a name, and very much more injurious to the public than any possible dangers connected with complete unification. This bill, as we all well know, practically removes all of the incentive to efficiency.

Assuming that when the plan is completed we will have 25 different systems of railroads in this country, when it is remembered that two-thirds of all of the earnings of a railroad in excess of 6 per cent is taken from the railroad by the Government, what becomes of the incentive to efficiency? What becomes of the incentive to compete, and, in order to secure the business, render the best possible service?

Let me give an illustration: Take the Pennsylvania road in competition with the Baltimore & Ohio, both in the same group. When the Pennsylvania Road has earned its 6 per cent, possibly on the 1st of July, around the middle of the year, will you tell me what great incentive there is to efficiency, when they know that two-thirds of all that they will thereafter earn, with the greatest economy, with the greatest efficiency, will be taken from them by the Government? Is there any incentive to efficiency with that kind of a situation? No. We have lost by that proposition the benefits of competition and gained nothing.

We have lost more than that as against a unified system of railroads throughout the country, in that we can not hope to secure the conduct of the railway business of the country as a business proposition in the interest of the investors, the public, and the employees, until we remove the temptation to regard railroad properties as chips in a poker game. So long as we have with us the opportunity for gambling and speculation, the wrecking of railroads, and then building them up so that a few men may gain vast fortunes for themselves, just so long will the railroad question never be solved in the United States.

Mr. President, so far as the outline of that plan is concerned, this is my objection to it. By the very terms of the bill the efficiency that is sought to be secured through competition is done away with by the taking away of excess earnings.

Now, a word before I get to the details of the bill. I have introduced a bill in the Senate. I shall not offer it as a substitute for this bill, because the bill I have introduced is not intended to take care of what I believe must be a temporary situation, but it is offered as what I believe to be a permanent solution of the railway question, and I shall take just a moment in giving its outlines.

One Federal corporation is provided for, as against 20 to 35 in the pending bill. This corporation is authorized to acquire all of the railroad properties in the country. The capital stock is limited only by the value of the railway property as found by the Interstate Commerce Commission, but no stock can be issued without its approval. The stock is to be sold to the public or exchanged for railway properties, the Government guaranteeing a minimum return of 4 per cent and allowing a maximum return of 6 per cent, or a less amount if the stock can be sold at par with a lower maximum. Stockholders will, however, in addition, share in excess earnings, as I shall in a moment point out.

The corporation under this bill may purchase the physical properties of the railroads, or a controlling interest in their capital stock, upon valuations fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission. It may also exercise the right of eminent domain.

The management is vested in a board of 11 directors appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, selected as follows: One shall be a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, who shall remain ex officio, as it may be termed, a member of the board of directors. In other words, he is a member of the board if appointed by the President only so long as he remains a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

One shall be a member of a State railway commission, to be selected by the President out of five recommended to him by the National Association of Railway and Utility Commissioners. Two shall be appointed from six persons proposed by employees of the railroads controlled by it. Two shall be appointed from six persons recommended by the United States Chamber of Commerce. Two shall be selected from six persons proposed by the agricultural and farm interests of the country. Three shall be selected from nine proposed by the stockholders of the corporation.

In the plan, I wish to emphasize, there is no element of Government ownership or Government operation, but every group interest will have representation upon the board. The dominant motive of at least a majority of the board will be efficient operation at a reasonable cost.

It has been objected that the owners will not control their property; that there will be private ownership of the roads under this plan as under existing plans, but they will have only a minority of the directorate. But every honest investor, who does not go into railroad investments merely as a gambling speculation would infinitely rather have the Government guarantee to him 4 per cent than to have a majority control upon the board of directors. When the Government does give the guaranty of 4 per cent it is eminently proper that the public, not the Government but the public, shall have the controlling voice in the management of the property.

Political appointees would be impossible under the plan, for under the bill the President is restricted in his appointments to nominations made by nonpolitical organizations. There is only one member that might in any sense be said to be political, and that is the member of the Interstate Commerce Commission. We all know that up to this time, or at least until a very few years ago, the appointees of the Interstate Commerce Commission were absolutely without regard to politics.

The board of directors shall choose a general manager, charged with the duty of operating the road under the supervision of the directorate. The country is to be divided into regional operating systems. The Interstate Commerce Commission is directed to permit rates that will pay the maximum return. Earnings in excess of the maximum allowed on the stock will be divided as follows: Forty per cent to employees, 30 per cent to the stockholders, and 30 per cent to the Government. Here, Mr. President, is the inducement to efficiency that the old competitive system was expected to furnish, but which under the committee bill is practically obliterated. If we would have efficiency in railroad operation, there is one of two things which must occur. Either the railroad must have the opportunity to earn and keep all that it can make under the most efficient management with reasonable rates, or else there must be a reward to those who are directly responsible for efficiency to become efficient. That is what is lacking under the pending bill.

Under the pending bill now before the Senate where the Government takes two-thirds of the earnings, the employees upon the road, however efficient they may be, do not receive a penny of it. There is no incentive to the employees upon the road to become efficient, and two-thirds of the incentive upon the part of the directors representing the stockholders to become efficient is taken away. Under the plan I propose there is the incentive to the stockholders equal with the present bill for there will be a 30 per cent return to them for efficiency. In addition to that, there is a 40 per cent return to the employees upon the road to induce efficiency. In addition to that there is the economy of complete unification, which all admit is a very great economy in the operation of a transportation system.

Wage boards are provided for in the bill very similar to those in the bill now pending in the Senate, with this distinction: While under the bill wage boards are provided for, one-half to be selected by the employees and one-half to be selected by the directors, the directors of the road are given the ultimate authority to fix the wages. Under the pending bill the transportation board is given that ultimate authority, but there is this distinction: Under the plan that I propose the directorate will represent primarily the public interest, while I am very much afraid—and I shall discuss it at more length when I come to it—that the transportation board will inevitably be constituted of men who have given their lives not to consideration of the rights and equities of the employees, but their experience, their entire experience, has been upon the side antagonistic to the employee, and therefore the transportation board will not constitute such an impartial tribunal as the employees have the right to demand to finally fix the wages that they shall receive.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HALE in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator think public opinion together with the power of confirmation of the Senate—and I understand they have that power—will largely control the personnel constituting the board to which the Senator is referring, and that it is only a question of a little time when that public opinion and the pressure of the Senate and the attitude of the Senate will demand that the board shall not be a political board or representative of interests hostile to labor, but that it shall be a fairly representative board of all the interests that may be involved in the question.

Mr. LENROOT. I assure the Senator from Utah that when I come to discuss the details of the bill I shall go into that a little more fully. I will only say now that considering the very important duties devolving upon the transportation board I think that public opinion would demand that those men constituting the majority at least of the transportation board should be men who had had long experience in the operation and management of the roads. That being true, of course they would naturally be antagonistic to the demands of the classified employees.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. I should hope, of course, that the men would be competent for the performance of the duties which the law would require of them, but I do not look at their duties in just that way. For instance, one of the most useful, and I think one of the most influential, men upon the Interstate Commerce Commission was taken directly from a high office; in fact, from the presidency of the Order of Railway Conductors.

If we have a President at that time who understands the duties which are to be performed by the board, I can not see any fair apprehension with regard to the constitution or the creation of a board that can and will do as nearly justice as can be done by human beings. I understand perfectly well that all of us are frail and there can not be expected from us that absolute perfection which we would be glad to have, but I think the Senator from Wisconsin will give due regard to the complete liberty and discretion of the President in selecting the men who will, all things considered, be best adapted to perform the several duties.

Mr. LENROOT. Of course, I do not question that the Senator from Iowa is expressing his very best judgment upon the question, but when I come to the details of the bill I shall examine with some care the duties devolving upon the transportation board, and considering the nature of the duties, I am impelled to believe that in the very nature of things the majority of that board will be selected from men who are not impartial in the consideration of wage disputes between employees and the roads.

Further, with reference to the bill that I have introduced, it is made a criminal offense for any Federal officer, legislative or executive, to influence the appointment of any of the employees or officers of the corporation.

Next is the basis of valuation of the property of the railroads, and when I speak of valuation I speak of it only in the sense we speak of valuation in connection with negotiations. The bill, of course, does not attempt to lay down a final rule of valuation. It only lays down a rule upon which negotiation for purchase is permitted. But, as I heretofore said, the determination of value is not a legislative but is solely a judicial question.

The plan that is authorized for negotiation is a combination of three factors—first, the original cost of the property less depreciation on March 1, 1913; second, reproduction value on the same date less depreciation, plus in each case the cost of additions and betterments made since that time. From those two factors added the average is taken of the two, and we secure thus one of the final factors to produce the result.

Next and third, it is provided that the earnings of the railroads for a 10-year period prior to their being taken over by the new corporation shall be capitalized at 5 per cent, and that produces another factor. The average of the cost obtained through the cost and reproduction value with the capitalization of earnings furnishes the final amount found by the Interstate Commerce Commission and that the board of directors are permitted through negotiation to pay for the property.

I will say that the capitalization of the earnings on the computations I have made for the 10-year period immediately past would amount to the sum of $16,500,000,000 for the railroads of the country. I think we will all agree that when the courts shall finally fix the matter of valuation that the sum will be found to be somewhere between $15,000,000,000 and $18,000,000,000.

This is a general outline of a plan that I have introduced in the form of a bill. It offers complete unification and consolidation of the railroads of the country under private ownership, and with no element whatever of Government operation. I believe that some such plan as this—I do not say in its details; of course, it is subject to modification—will sooner or later be adopted as a solution of this problem.

We are not going to have a solution of the problem, in my judgment, under the Senate bill, not only for the reasons I have stated but for another reason. I do not believe that if the pending bill should become a law to-morrow it would be possible for the railroads of this country to secure the credit or money necessary for betterments, additions, and extensions. It would be an impossibility. We hear it said upon the part of railway executives that the reason for the loss of railway credit was because of the action of the Interstate Commerce Commission prior to their being taken over in refusing to increase railroad rates as the railroads demanded. Mr. President, the Interstate Commerce Commission, in my judgment, deserves no such criticism. As the figures will show, in every case where the Interstate Commerce Commission refused to increase the rates as demanded by the railroads the net earnings of the railroads, subsequent to that refusal, were the largest in the history of the railroads.

Then, why was the credit of the railroads lost? Why had they failed to function at the time the Federal Government took them over? I think the cause is very apparent. There are two primary reasons: One, the reckless, not to say criminal, mismanagement of some of the railroads. When the New Haven road, whose stock was supposed to be the safest investment in the United States next to a Government bond, was wrecked, as it was wrecked, is it any wonder, Mr. President, that the confidence of the investors of this country was lost in all railroad investments? And the New Haven road was not the only one as to which that occurred. Every Senator can recall to his mind road after road which had exactly the same kind of history as that disclosed in the New Haven road. So it is not to be wondered at that men who were not merely speculators but investors were not willing to invest their money in railway stocks or in railway securities.

In addition to that, even when the roads were making the largest returns in their history, we found advertisements and found placards in every passenger station in the United States telling the public that the railroads were facing bankruptcy unless their rates were increased. Mr. President, if a department store in Washington should to-morrow morning announce in an advertisement that it was facing bankruptcy and the next morning should insert another advertisement offering its stock for sale, how much of an investment do you think there would be in its stock? That was exactly the situation with reference to the railroads. The railroads were crying that they were facing bankruptcy; and is it to be wondered at that investors refused any longer to invest in their stocks and securities? In my judgment, so long as we have this competitive system, so long as we have even from 20 to 35 railroad systems that can become the subject of financial manipulation for the purpose of enhancing or depressing the market price of stocks, just so long, in view of past experience, will it be impossible for the railroads to finance themselves further without such rates as will bring exorbitant returns, such as will induce the investor to invest in a hazardous enterprise with the prospect of such large returns that he can afford the hazard. Unless we do that, under this bill or under any bill that does not provide for complete unification and control in the interest of the public, the public will refuse to furnish to the railroads the money that is necessary for their improvement and for extensions, additions, and betterments.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, has the Senator from Wisconsin concluded his argument in favor of the unification plan?

Mr. LENROOT. I have, unless there are some questions which are desired to be asked.

Mr. KING. Unfortunately, I was called out of the Chamber during a portion of the Senator's remarks. I was wondering if the Senator had discussed—if he has, I shall not ask him to repeat and apologize for interrupting him—the problems that would be involved by one immense national system; the difficulties of managing the roads of this country from Washington; the lack of initiative that would result from having a sort of overlordship functioning here in Washington?

It seems to me, if the Senator will pardon me, that one objection to a unification plan, putting all of the railroads of the country under one management, would be that it would break down because of its bigness. The Senator will remember the statement made years ago by Mr. Justice Brandeis, in which he clearly elucidated the thought that enterprises, corporations, businesses, might become so big, so gigantic, as that they would cease to be efficient, would cease to be operated efficiently, intelligently, and economically.

I have somewhat studied the plan embodied in the unification theory or proposal, and it occurred to me that it would not work because of its bigness; that it would break down because the machinery would be so tremendous.

Mr. LENROOT. I will say in reply that, of course, I very well remember the statement of Mr. Justice Brandeis which is referred to by the Senator from Utah; but the Senator will remember that Justice Brandeis based that wholly upon the proposition that because of bigness there would not be the efficient management that would result in the case of smaller corporations where there was competition. If it were possible to have the full play of competition and at the same time a control in the public interest, I would at once agree that we ought to preserve competition; but under this bill competition is practically wiped out. There is no incentive to efficient management under this bill after a road has reached an earning point of 6 per cent. There exists exactly the same objection to the establishment of the corporations provided for by this bill, whether they be 20 or 35, which the Senator now states in relation to one unified corporation.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the Senator has stated several times that there was no incentive to competition under this bill. I want him to reexamine that subject a little. I assume the Senator will agree that with respect to every railroad that does not earn 6 per cent there is abundant incentive. The road that earns more than 6 per cent retains one-half of the excess between 6 and 7 per cent.

Mr. LENROOT. Up to a certain point.

Mr. CUMMINS. Up to the point of an accumulation of a company reserve fund equal to 5 per cent upon the value of its property. Now, assume that the excess between 6 and 7 per cent would amount to $50,000,000, does the Senator think that there is no incentive in the possibility of earning $25,000,000? Does not that furnish substantially the same incentive, the same stimulus, as though all the excess earnings could be kept? How can they divide their energy? In my judgment, a railway company will be just as anxious to earn that portion of the return above 6 per cent as though it were permitted to keep it all, and unless it is competent and efficient it will not get anything above 6 per cent.

Mr. LENROOT. I can not agree to that. There are some roads which I have in mind—and the Senator no doubt has them in mind as well—that can earn 6 per cent with practically the lowest point of efficiency possible. For such roads it does not require an effort along the line of efficiency to earn 6 per cent. The Senator speaks of $25,000,000 in connection with the accumulation of a fund equal to 5 per cent of the value of the property; but that would only apply in the case of a prosperous road for a period of a few years, because it would not take very long to build up that 5 per cent, and from that time on only one-third is retained by the road.

Mr. CUMMINS. Has the Senator looked into that to find out how long it will require any given road, specifying it, to put aside a fund equal to 5 per cent of the value of its property out of an earning of one-half of 1 per cent?

Mr. LENROOT. Out of one-half of 1 per cent?

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. It would be more than one-half of 1 per cent——

Mr. CUMMINS. It is one-half of 1 per cent——

Mr. LENROOT. Between 6 and 7 per cent.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is of the excess between 6 and 7 per cent.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is one-half of 1 per cent upon the value of its property. Therefore, it would require any company, if it earned no more than 7 per cent, 10 years at the very least to accumulate 5 per cent on the value of its property.

Mr. LENROOT. Suppose it earned 10 per cent.

Mr. CUMMINS. If it earned 10 per cent then it would take one-half of 1 per cent, between 6 and 7¼ only of the excess above 7 per cent; but there are not many roads which earn any such sum of money.

Mr. LENROOT. How about the Burlington?

Mr. CUMMINS. The Burlington does not earn that much. I have the exact figures here, and can give them.

Mr. LENROOT. How much did it earn during the period of the standard return?

Mr. CUMMINS. About 7 per cent.

Mr. LENROOT. More than that, I think.

Mr. CUMMINS. No. The Senator from Wisconsin probably does not discriminate between the earnings upon the capital stock of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy and the earnings upon the value of its property.

Mr. LENROOT. But that is not known.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Interstate Commerce Commission has said—and I have no doubt it is true—that the railway property of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy is worth possibly more than its capitalization, because it has pursued a policy to bring about that condition. According to investment account, concerning which very much has been said here, the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy is worth something like $200,000,000 more than its capitalization. On the contrary, take a road that may lie side by side with it; take the Chicago Great Western, for instance, and until very recently, at least, it was capitalized for twice as much as it was worth; but this bill deals always on the basis of the value of the property and never on the basis of capitalization.

Mr. LENROOT. I understand that.

Mr. CUMMINS. According to the statements presented to the committee, my recollection is that the earnings of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy upon investment account—and I do not assert that investment account is the correct measure of the value of the property—are about 7 per cent.

Mr. LENROOT. Upon the investment account.

Mr. CUMMINS. Upon the investment account.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? As I understand, after a fund has been accumulated by the road out of these excess profits, it may not use that fund unless there shall come a lean year, when it ceases to yield the revenue permitted, and it may then draw upon that fund for the purpose of paying its dividends.

Mr. CUMMINS. It never loses it. It belongs to the railway company. It is kept in its possession. It is drawn upon when the earnings of the company for any given year are less than 6 per cent upon the value of its property, and when drawn upon it must be immediately reaccumulated.

Mr. KING. Oh, yes; I understand that. It may be drawn upon; but if it is a prosperous road and its earnings do not get below the standard permitted, it never would have an opportunity of using it, so that it would be there as a nest egg without creating or procreating or yielding any benefit to anybody.

Mr. CUMMINS. Oh, I can not think that, because it can be invested and make a return to the company which owns it, and that return would not be included within the income from operation, just like any other outside investment; but after the fund is accumulated up to the point indicated, then, as the Senator from Wisconsin says, the road retains for its own purposes, for distribution or any other legitimate purpose, one-third of the earnings above 6 per cent. I differ with the Senator from Wisconsin about the incentive which that would furnish. I think that would furnish all the incentive of which railroad management is capable.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, the Senator may be right as to its being able to enjoy the profit derived from the investment of the fund. I am inclined to think, however, that a very critical and strict interpretation of the act would require any profit resulting from the fund that might be invested to be included in the return of the road, and it would have to be divided again with the larger fund which is created.

Mr. CUMMINS. No; if the Senator will recur to the provision of the bill in that respect he will find that it says, "if the income from operation in any year exceeds 6 per cent upon the value of the property." It is definitely limited to the income from the operation of the railroad as an instrumentality of commerce.

Mr. KING. It seems to me, Mr. President, that to make it an incentive and an inducement for efficiency and economies to the highest degree of perfection of railroading the fund might with propriety be distributed from year to year to the railroad.

Mr. CUMMINS. The whole purpose of that fund, as the Senator from Utah will agree with me, is to furnish stability to the credit of the railroad company, so that it can secure the funds that are necessary for its enlargement and betterment.

Mr. LENROOT. Now, Mr. President, I wish to take up in a very brief way one or two of the legal questions involved in the bill; and if I may have the attention of the chairman I should like to call his attention to page 11, line 15. This is the provision for the limited guaranty of not exceeding four months. It is provided—

That if, during the period the guaranty is in force, the railway operating income of any carrier exceeds the amount of the guaranty, it shall forthwith pay such excess into the Treasury of the United States.

I should like to ask the chairman of the committee under what theory he contends that after the roads have been turned back to their owners, and with no contractual relation between the owners of the road and the Government, if they make more than a certain amount of money we can simply take the excess and put it into the Treasury?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, to answer that from the standpoint of the committee, the Government is under no obligation to guarantee to the roads about to be returned any income whatever.

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly not.

Mr. CUMMINS. And I assume that it can attach to its guarantee any condition which it may desire to attach.

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly, as a contractual relation.

Mr. CUMMINS. As a contractual relation; and it is believed by the committee—at least, I have always looked upon it from that standpoint—that we are about to return these properties to their owners; we are proposing that during that transition, when everything is somewhat disturbed, they shall have the standard return, just as they have had it for the last two years; but if they make more than that, if they accept the standard return during these four months, they must pay any excess in their hands into the Treasury.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; but suppose they do nothing?

Mr. CUMMINS. They will not get the guarantee.

Mr. LENROOT. Let us see whether they will not. Why not?

Mr. CUMMINS. They ought not to have the guarantee unless they are willing to comply with this condition.

Mr. LENROOT. Exactly; but where do you find in the bill any acceptance required by the carrier?

Mr. CUMMINS. There is no acceptance required, but, in my opinion the acceptance of the guarantee itself creates the contractual relation.

Mr. LENROOT. How do they accept the guarantee under the bill?

Mr. CUMMINS. If we are called upon to pay anything to them——

Mr. LENROOT. Suppose we are not?

Mr. CUMMINS. Then I assume that the obligation probably would not be enforceable.

Mr. LENROOT. But the language is that the obligation is there. Of course, if they make more than the amount of the standard return there is nothing to call upon the Government for, and yet we require them to pay into the Treasury of the United States the excess.

Mr. CUMMINS. I should be very glad, then, if the Senator from Wisconsin would offer an amendment requiring an acceptance of that kind, so that there would be no question about it. I can see the point made by the Senator from Wisconsin, and I should be very glad to make it beyond question.

Mr. LENROOT. The purpose of my inquiry was to know whether there was any reason for omitting that acceptance.

Mr. CUMMINS. There is no reason at all. If the point is well taken, it is a mere oversight on the part of the committee——

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, I was not criticizing it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Because we intended that the guaranty should be conditioned upon an agreement of that sort on the part of the carrier.

Mr. LENROOT. Before discussing group rates, if the Senator will turn to page 28, section 11, I call his attention to this language:

If it finds that a carrier can not, by reason of the congestion of its lines, properly handle its traffic it shall have power to require the distribution of such obstructed traffic over other lines of roads upon such terms as between the several carriers it may find under the circumstances to be just and reasonable.

Now:

If, under the power in this paragraph contained, any traffic shall be diverted from a carrier which it is ready and able to handle properly, then such carrier shall be entitled to recover from the carrier or carriers to which such traffic shall be thus diverted the revenue accruing on such diverted traffic in excess of the actual out-of-pocket cost of transporting the same.

On what theory does the Senator contend that a carrier can be compelled to transport property without compensation?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I desire always to be absolutely frank in the discussion of any question of this sort, and personally I have very grave doubt about some of the provisions of the section to which the Senator is now calling my attention. Without attempting to bring anyone else into this discussion, I may say that I think these ideas largely emanate from the Interstate Commerce Commission. They are no part of the general plan which the chairman of the committee had in mind; but I think the Senator from Wisconsin, after all, has misunderstood that particular section.

The board has the power to divert traffic if it finds that a congested line can not handle it properly and promptly, and it sends it upon some other line; but if the board makes a mistake in that respect and diverts traffic from a line that is ready and able to handle it properly the profit which would have come to the carrier from which the traffic was taken may be recovered from the carrier which actually transports the business.

I have very grave doubts whether the carrier which is thus compelled to carry the traffic can be required to carry it without proper compensation. I do not believe that any carrier can be compelled—that is, if the carrier does it rightfully—to carry anything for simply cost; and there is another provision in this bill which recognizes that principle. Where a shipper routes traffic, and the routing is disregarded, and some carrier takes that traffic wrongfully and carries it to its destination, then I think that in such a case the entire revenue derived by the carrier can be recovered by the carrier from which it was diverted.

Mr. LENROOT. I certainly would agree with the Senator about that proposition.

Mr. CUMMINS. But I am quite ready to say that I have serious doubts about the right of the board, or the commission, or anyone else, to divert traffic and then have the innocent carrier which does the business called upon to respond on account of a mistake of the board or of the commission, as the case may be. I do not think it can be done.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa, in the event that a mistake is made by the board and traffic is diverted that ought not to be diverted from a road that is ready to care for it, in what way would both of them receive compensation?

Mr. CUMMINS. They could not both receive compensation. The carrier which actually does the business must have its reasonable rate, and the carrier from which the traffic is wrongfully diverted can have no other recourse except upon the United States.

Mr. KING. It seems to me, Mr. President, that there ought to be some provision that would more effectually protect both of the carriers in cases of that kind against the mistakes of the board. It seems to me that the delay of requiring either of the carriers to present claims to the Government of the United States and have them adjusted, passed upon, or appropriations made, would be practically a denial of justice, and serious and perhaps irreparable harm would come to one or both carriers. It seems to me that some amendment should be made that would more effectually protect the carriers in contingencies of that kind.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will say very frankly that so far as the chairman of the committee is concerned, he will not resist an amendment upon that point.

Mr. LENROOT. I will say that it is my intention to move to strike out all of that portion of the paragraph following the word "reasonable," in line 23. It seems to me that when you give the authority to divert traffic upon such terms as may be just and reasonable, you have afforded a full remedy and an opportunity to secure justice between the two carriers. The balance of it, to my mind, is not only clearly unconstitutional but it would be incapable of being carried out, because it would be a human impossibility for one carrier to determine the out-of-pocket cost of transporting any particular article or commodity.

Coming, then, to this matter of group rates, Mr. President, which is really one of the foundation stones of this bill, I have read very carefully the speech of the chairman upon the subject, and the briefs that have been presented upon both sides of the question, and while I, of course, would readily admit that this is a doubtful question, the best that can be said for it is, being a doubtful question, . is very clear that it must go to the Supreme Court of the United States before the constitutionality of this bill can be settled; and until that is done, it not only will be open to grave doubt but it will very greatly interfere with the application of this plan.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I wish the Senator from Wisconsin would suggest the specific question which he regards as doubtful.

Mr. LENROOT. I am about to do so.

Mr. CUMMINS. There is in that section a provision upon which I said, when I opened the discussion, lawyers may differ, and honestly differ. I do not personally reckon that difference as creating a doubt in my mind, although I think there is a difference between declaring that a certain question is a doubtful one and declaring that it is one upon which men may reasonably and honestly differ. I put one of the questions in this section in the latter category. If it is to that the Senator refers I readily grant his premise.

Mr. LENROOT. I will say to the Senator very frankly that I am referring to two questions, the power of Congress to compel transportation at an adequate rate upon the one hand, and the power of Congress, after fixing a rate, to take an excess of return over that rate.

Mr. CUMMINS. The latter is the question I had in my mind when I made my last observation.

Mr. LENROOT. I supposed so.

Mr. CUMMINS. So far as the former is concerned I do not quite catch the Senator's point of view, because I do not look upon that as having any doubt in it at all; accompanying that with the statement that any regulation which the Interstate Commerce Commission might put upon the railroads is subject, of course, to certain provisions in the Constitution of the United States, and the railway companies must all necessarily have the right to appeal against any regulation of commerce, either by Congress or under the authority of Congress by the commission, which takes its property without due process of law; or, in other words, which confiscates its property or, I am willing to go further, which requires service without just and reasonable compensation. The carrier will always have that remedy, whenever it chooses to seek it, and the Interstate Commerce Commission can make no rate or be responsible for no rate that is not open to that inquiry. That, in my judgment, is the only inquiry which the carriers can make. I am not now speaking about the point as to excess earnings. I have already dealt with that, and I will be glad to speak upon it a little further; but I am speaking about the group rate.

Mr. LENROOT. I would agree with the Senator if it were not for the fact that, as I construe the language of this section, the Interstate Commerce Commission is not only authorized to fix such group rates as will result in a 5½ per cent upon the aggregate value of the property within the group, but they are prohibited from prescribing any rate that would of itself create a higher return except the additional one-half per cent that is provided for in the bill. It might, of course, produce a higher return, I understand, but not with the intention of producing any higher return.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think the Senator is in error with respect to that. As I remarked a moment ago, the carrier has a right to complain if the Interstate Commerce Commission establishes any rate which is contrary to the constitutional rights of the carrier. Let us assume that in these districts rates are established, and that with respect to a particular commodity, or several commodities, the rates established are claimed by the carrier to be confiscatory, contrary to the Constitution, if that plan is sustained in the courts, those rates or that rate must be advanced. The Senator, as I understand him, thinks that there is nothing in the bill which gives the commission the latitude or discretion to meet that contingency.

Mr. LENROOT. I would agree that they might raise those rates, but if they raise those rates they would have to lower the others.

Mr. CUMMINS. In a broad way that is true, although there is a discretion here within reasonable limits.

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, I understand. They would have to lower them so far as, in their judgment, permitting them to remain would allow the returns to be more than 6 per cent.

Mr. CUMMINS. If a decision of that kind involved a general raising of the basis of rates above 6 per cent upon the value of all the property I think the conclusion suggested by the Senator would probably follow. The Senator is familiar, of course, with the decisions on that point, which indicate very clearly that any declaration by a legislative body, or any policy established by a regulatory body, if it yields 6 per cent upon the value of the property rendering the service, is not confiscation and is constitutional. So the contingency mentioned by the Senator from Wisconsin never could arise.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator does not get my point. Here is a direction, as I take it, to the Interstate Commerce Commission, to allow rates that will yield 5½ per cent, plus, in its discretion, an additional one-half per cent, or a total of 6 per cent. We will assume that in a group they fix such rates as will yield to all the railroads of that group 6 per cent. But here is a weak road, weak not because there is not a need for the road, not because it is not efficiently operated and managed, but solely because of conditions of traffic along its line, where, under this group rate system, it will not receive an adequate return upon its property. Of course the Senator concedes that the 5½ per cent is not 5½ per cent upon all the property of each individual road. It may be 10 per cent upon one road and it may be 2 per cent upon another road. That is true, is it not?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, that is true.

Mr. LENROOT. The road, then, that receives under this rate-making power only 2 per cent goes into court, and the court says it is entitled to 5 per cent. That rate is then increased by 3 per cent, so far as that road is concerned. What becomes of the provision in the bill that the rates as a whole in the group shall only afford a return, in so far, of course, as it is intentional upon the part of the commission, of an aggregate of 6 per cent, without lowering the rates upon the other roads?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, that presents the insoluble problem of railway regulation under the system now in force, which I attempted to discuss the other day, and which nothing but Government ownership and operation, or complete consolidation into one system, can wholly remove. But the Senator from Wisconsin will remember that in the 5 per cent advance rate case and in the 15 per cent advance rate case the Interstate Commerce Commission discussed this whole subject. It was then considering rates for the so-called eastern district in the United States, and it was recognized as impossible, being in a competitive area, to raise the rates so that the weaker roads, even though they be efficiently and honestly managed, could receive what everybody would accept or agree was a fair, adequate return upon either the capitalization or the investment account, or any other basis for the value of property, except the sheer basis of capitalized earnings.

If the point raised by the Senator from Wisconsin should be sustained, then every railroad is worth just what its earnings, capitalized, will secure for it, and the only way of overcoming the difficulty is to reduce the value of the railroad according to the rules of capitalization, for it is simply unthinkable that we shall raise the rates in a competitive area to a point at which the weakest road can earn an adequate return upon the value of its property, if the value be ascertained by the cost of reproduction, either with or without depreciation, or the original investment, if you please, without any depreciation.

My answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin is that the Supreme Court, or any court, must take these circumstances into consideration and hold that the road which can not earn a fair return upon the value of its property, ascertained according to the plan which I have just suggested, can not insist upon rates being established at a point which will enable it to do it, if those rates enable its competitor to earn an inordinate or excessive income.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit an interruption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators will please observe the rules of the Senate and address the Chair.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. KING. I do not understand the position of the Senator from Wisconsin to be supported by the bill, certainly not by the position as announced by the chairman of the committee. Under the group system, taking the aggregate value of the property and fixing as a basis for rate making 5½ or 6 per cent, I do not understand that the bill provides that the poor roads which may only get 2 per cent may go into court or by invoking any provision of the bill secure a raise in the rate above the 2 per cent. I do not understand that because one road may earn 6 per cent a poor road within the district, being poor because of physical environment, because it goes into a district where there is a sparse population and but a small amount of exports, can get a rate of interest in excess of the 2 per cent, if that be the amount which it would earn under the competitive system established by the group system.

Mr. LENROOT. I think the Senator from Iowa in that respect was speaking only of the constitutional right of the carrier, that it might be entitled to a higher rate than 2 per cent.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President——

Mr. LENROOT. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. KIRBY. I should like to ask the Senator a question right at that point. Suppose a case of this kind: A road was built through difficult country which was not thickly settled at the time and which has not since developed. It cost $60,000 a mile to build the road. It would cost $80,000 a mile to reproduce it at this time. The rates which other railroads are charging in the State will not pay a dividend of 2 per cent on the traffic carried on the basis of $60,000 a mile, and the rates allowed under the bill would pay only a dividend of 2 or 3 per cent on the $60,000 per mile basis.

What is to become of a road of that kind? It can not operate. Certainly it ought not to be allowed to increase the rates of all the roads in the region in order that it shall have 5½ per cent when some of them are making 10 or 15 or 20 per cent under rates already fixed under the level-rate proposition.

That is only a suggestion as to the actual condition that must be met.

Mr. LENROOT. For myself, in a word, the distinction seems very clear concerning the proposition that the railroad may be transporting traffic at such rates as will pay only a return of 2 per cent, as was the fact in many cases before the railroads were taken over, as is the case to-day so far as returns are concerned. That is a very different proposition than the Government compelling them to so transport property.

There has been no compulsion in the past under the present interstate-commerce act to compel any railroad that is properly managed and that fills a public need to transport property at anything less than a fair return upon the value of its property. The result is that through competition if a rate is fixed, for instance, upon the Pennsylvania Railroad, even though the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad would, as a matter of law, be entitled to a higher rate, the very circumstances prevent them from charging it. There, I think, is a distinction that should be made between compelling a return that will confessedly be an adequate return, and the railroad itself, for its own reasons because of business conditions, receiving an inadequate return.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. In the case tried by the Interstate Commerce Commission involving the 5 per cent increase of rates in the district east of Chicago and north of the Ohio River, the commission made an order refusing to permit the railroads to increase the rates more than 5 per cent. That order was binding on all the railroads, the Pennsylvania as well as the Baltimore & Ohio and the Erie. I ask the Senator whether, if that yielded the Pennsylvania Railroad, say, 6 per cent, it was constitutional as to the Pennsylvania Railroad?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly; I concede that.

Mr. KELLOGG. Very well. Then that rate as a whole was made by authority of Congress vested in the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the commission by virtue of the authority prevented the rate from being raised on the Baltimore & Ohio and the Erie more than the 5 per cent.

Mr. LENROOT. I would not agree with the Senator that Congress could constitutionally say to the Baltimore & Ohio, throwing aside the question of possibly it not being well managed, and those other things, and assuming all those things, that it can be compelled to transport traffic at less than a fair return.

Mr. KELLOGG. I am not speaking of the constitutionality as to the Baltimore & Ohio or the Erie. As a matter of fact, the order did prevent them from charging any more unless they went into court to test it, which they did not do. So long as any railroad rate is that way, either under the law as it now exists or under this bill, the result would simply be that the rates would be made upon the more favored roads and the others would be obliged to accept them. That has always been the provision. The order of the Interstate Commerce Commission in the 5 per cent case was not attacked; it could not be attacked, because otherwise the rates would have been made on the favored roads.

Mr. LENROOT. I would agree to that, but the Senator will readily understand that the constitutionality of this provision is going to be attacked, and even though that provision with relation to excess rates might be sustained, even though, as a matter of fact, it would not do the railroads the slightest good, nevertheless if a compulsory, inadequate rate is found in this section, as it seems to me it fairly is, because the chairman has admitted it, then the whole section or the whole scheme falls. That is the point I am making and that is why I am discussing the inadequate rate. As a practical question, of course, it would not be thought of for the Baltimore & Ohio to be permitted to charge rates that would yield 6 per cent and the Pennsylvania charge the same amount, because the rates upon the Baltimore & Ohio would be very much higher than those upon the Pennsylvania, and they would not get the business and they would not make the money.

Mr. KELLOGG. I wish to invite the Senator's attention to this proposition: There is in the bill a direction that the commission shall take into consideration all of the circumstances in fixing a fair rate. The bill then goes further and names a percentage which it thinks is a fair return on all of the railroad property. If the courts should hold that was constitutional as to the Baltimore & Ohio, they would be exactly under the other provisions of the bill which give them power to fix a fair return, and if the commission should fix 5½ or 6 per cent the roads would be in no better position than they are to-day.

Mr. LENROOT. My point is that if the courts should hold that it is not within our power to impose an inadequate rate in a given case, the whole scheme of group rates falls to the ground.

So much for that side of the question, the inadequate rate. Now, let us come to the question—and I am not going to discuss it at great length, because it has been discussed by lawyers much abler than myself—of the power of the Government to take from a carrier or a shipper the excess earnings of the carrier over and above a given rate.

A railroad is entitled to have such rates imposed as will pay a fair return upon the value of the property devoted to the public use. On the other hand, the shipper is entitled to have his property transported at no higher rate than will afford such return. If we attempt to compel a railroad to transport property at a rate that will not afford it a fair return we are confiscating the property of the carrier. If we attempt to compel a shipper to pay a rate higher than is necessary to afford the carrier a fair return, we are confiscating the property of the shipper.

It seems to me that is exactly what this bill does. It fixes 6 per cent as a fair return to the carrier. The excess over that 6 per cent either belongs to the carrier or else it belongs to the shipper. I can not see how it can be said to belong to the public.

I am not going to quote authorities at length. I just want to call attention to the very familiar and leading case of Smyth against Ames, wherein the court said:

> What the company is entitled to ask is a fair return upon the value of that which it employs for the public convenience.

That is one side of it. The court continues:

> On the other hand, what the public is entitled to demand is that no more be exacted from it for the use of a public highway than the services rendered by it are reasonably worth.

When you fix in the bill the standard that 6 per cent is a fair return on any rate that designedly produces a greater return, it is exacting property of the shipper without compensation, it seems to me. If it does not do that, if this is not to be considered as a return secured through an excessive rate, then it is property of the carrier, it seems to me, that we are not entitled to take under the Constitution. One of the two things must be true.

Let us see how this would work out in operation. Under the group-rate system we may have in a group a line of road the value of which is one-third of the value of all of the roads within the group. It is a weak road and it may not be competitive at all with another road within the group. Taking the aggregate value as the basis for rates, the shipper upon the prosperous road is compelled to pay a very much higher rate than he would be if that road were considered by itself alone. If there be no competition between the two roads, under what theory of constitutional authority can the money of the shipper be taken in excess of what would be a fair return upon the only road upon which he does business and the public take it from him? It seems to me, Mr. President, that this is a proposal, to say the least, of such doubtful constitutionality that we ought not to experiment with it at this time.

To my mind there are only two ways by which we can lawfully take the excess returns of a carrier. One is through the exercise of the power of taxation. I have no doubt that we can, through the power of taxation, take all of the revenues of the railroads in excess of 6 per cent. Another, of course, is to provide for Federal corporations. Then any road that becomes a Federal corporation is bound, under contractual obligations, by any provision that may be found in the charter which it accepts; and it may well be that we could lawfully provide in the charter of a Federal corporation that the Government will take all of the earnings in excess of a given rate upon the value of its property.

With reference to who owns the excessive return, I have in my hand the case of the Southern Pacific Co. v. Darnell-Taenzer Co. (245 U. S., 534), where the court says:

> The carrier ought not to be allowed to retain his illegal profit, and the only one who can take it from him is the one that alone was in relation with him, and from whom the carrier took the sum.

What right has the public to step in and take from the carrier something received by the carrier in excess of a fair return? If the rate is fair, the carrier ought to be entitled to make all that it is able to make through efficient management and economy. If the rate is not fair, if the rate is excessive, the money can not belong to the public; it must belong, as the court here says, to the shipper. For these reasons, Mr. President, I can not bring myself to the support of this plan which is so doubtful as to its constitutionality and, to my mind, so unworkable in its practicable application.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NEWBERRY in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. KING. Going back to the question which the Senator from Wisconsin was discussing a moment ago, in connection with group rates under which certain roads might only make 2 per cent and others might make 6 per cent, I did not quite understand the position of the Senator. I understood him to say, however, that there would be no power upon the part of Congress to compel one of the roads with a small earning capacity under the group system to transport the freight that was tendered to it where it did not receive a sufficiently compensatory rate.

Mr. LENROOT. The statement was that it would be entitled to such rates, if it could secure the business, as would give it fair compensation. Whether the road can secure the business or not is not for the Government to determine; that is a chance that the railroad must take.

Mr. KING. Then, do I understand the Senator's position to be that any grouping which would put roads so different from each other under one rate-making scheme would be improper?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; that is my position.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit me to call his attention, briefly, to one or two roads, in order to show some of the difficulties and problems which are incident to working out the scheme that is provided in this bill?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. KING. I have here some tables compiled by the Interstate Commerce Commission which show certain facts. For instance, the Pennsylvania Railroad Co.'s ratio of operating expenses to operating revenue was 78.63; the average receipts per ton mile were $0.637; number of revenue tons carried 1 mile per mile of road, 6,115,450; operating revenues per mile of road, $56,173; total railway capital per mile of line, $279,629. Yet I find some roads the average receipts of which per ton per mile are $2.157; operating expenses, 81.85 per cent; and the ratio of operating expenses to operating revenues of one road was 128.70. That is, there was a minus quantity. Its average receipts per ton per mile were only $0.65; the number of revenue tons carried 1 mile per mile of road, 3,441,423; operating revenues per mile of road, $22,617; and the total railway capital per mile was $93,025.

I find that the total railway capital per mile of various roads reaches great inequalities. For instance, one road shows $625,000 plus; and others the following amounts: $964,000 plus; $399,000 plus; $136,593, $64,000, $38,000, and so forth. Those disparities exist as to all of the roads, differing only in degree or amount.

It seems to me very difficult, in view of these great discrepancies and disparities, to establish a group system under which any sort of justice can be done.

Mr. LENROOT. I think that is true.

Coming now, Mr. President, to the discussion of the provisions of the bill concerning the prohibition of the right to strike, I am opposed to that proposition, not because I do not think that there should be some remedy afforded for the existing situation, but because I believe that the provisions of the pending bill are not fair and will not afford justice to the railroad employees. In that connection, we have heard a great deal upon the proposition that this section is only intended to reach conspiracies to interfere with interstate commerce and that it is not designed to affect in any way the right to quit either singly or collectively. I wish to read from the majority report of the committee what seems to me very clearly to be the construction of the committee in this regard:

> A proposal to prohibit an agreement among workers to quit their employment at a given time without substituting some other instrumentality for securing justice would not receive at the hands of Congress a moment's consideration. In making the strike unlawful, it is obvious that there must be something given to the workers in exchange for it. The thing substituted for the strike should be more certain in attaining justice and should do what the strike can not do, namely, protect the great masses of the people who are not directly involved in the controversy. The committee has substituted for the strike the justice which will be administered by the tribunals created in the bill for adjudging disputes which may hereafter arise.

It is as to that last expression that I particularly take issue with the committee, for I insist that they have not provided in the bill for a just and impartial tribunal to adjust disputes between wage employees and their employers.

I fully agree that some other method should be substituted for the present condition. I noticed in a newspaper yesterday a synopsis of a speech delivered by the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] concerning this subject, and I fully agree with his statement that we ought to provide for impartial tribunals to settle these cases and make final decisions in disputes between railway employees and their employers. I believe that should be done; and, if we would create an impartial tribunal and make the decision of that tribunal final for a given length of time, it would not be necessary to provide any sort of a prohibition of strikes in the law. Remove the incentive to strike, Mr. President, and you remove the strike itself wherever it is instituted for any wrongful purpose.

But a distinction should always be made between the right to strike for the purpose of coercion into a given line of action and the right to quit work, singly or collectively, because employees no longer are satisfied with the conditions of employment. Under the report of the committee where they specifically treat the strike provision of the bill as the prohibition of an agreement to quit work I say it is denying a right to the employees that we have no constitutional right to deny to them and which we ought not to deny to them. For instance, suppose after the railroads are returned to their owners they attempt to reduce the wages of railway employees 25 per cent, would you, sirs, deny them the right to agree that they will not accept that reduction and to quit work, not for the purpose of coercing the railroads to pay them a higher wage or restore the old wage scale, but because they do not propose to remain in the employment of the railroads with that reduction of wages?

So we should always distinguish between the right to quit work, either singly or collectively, and quitting work for the sole purpose of coercing the employer, through the restraint of interstate commerce and interference with it, to grant the demands that the employees may make.

If we had provided or could provide in this bill for a fair and impartial tribunal with the right finally to pass upon wage disputes between employers and employees, and provide in the bill that the decision of that tribunal should be final for a period of three months or six months, as the case may be, there would be no strike upon the part of railway employees for the purpose of securing increases in wages, because in that event there would be no power in the tribunal thus created to grant their demands within the time fixed by the law itself. Now, is such an impartial tribunal created by the terms of this bill?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. KING. The Senator says with a good deal of emphasis, as I interpreted his remarks, that if the character of tribunal to which he has referred were created, without any penalizing clause or provision, there would be no strike, because the decision of this board or tribunal would be final for three months or six months.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. KING. Why does the Senator say there would be no strike because the tribunal could not grant relief? The strike might go ahead, and the distress of the public might be of such a character as would compel the owners of the roads—whether the Government was operating or whether private individuals were operating—to go around the award and the decision and grant the demands of the striking employees anyway.

Mr. LENROOT. They could not increase the wages thus fixed without violating the law.

Mr. KING. Well, suppose the strike was had because the employees said that the decision of the arbitrators or the tribunal was unfair, and they did not propose to work for wages which they considered inadequate, and they struck, and the people, as was the situation a short time ago, were without coal, or, this being a railroad strike, the people in the cities were devoid of food—does the Senator say that it would be beyond the power of the railroads to grant higher wages to save the people from starvation?

Mr. LENROOT. I say it would be, to those employees. There would be nothing in the plan that I suggest to prevent the railroads or the Government from granting higher wages to others, because it is deciding only the dispute between those employees and the road; but there would not be a strike that in any sense of the word could be termed wrongful if that were the case. The only kind of a strike that anyone can object to is the coercive strike; and if they can not obtain their ends through coercion, because it is beyond the power of the authorities to grant it, there never will be that kind of a strike.

But there should be an impartial tribunal in such a case, and, in my judgment, an impartial tribunal can not be secured by selecting a portion of them from the employees and a portion of them from the employers. An impartial tribunal should be created, and the persons who are appointed to it should be men who have no relations either with the railroads or with the employees, and they should consider the matter solely upon the question of what is just and right as between the contending parties under the circumstances.

Mr. President, under this bill the transportation board is given this authority. Under this bill the chairman of the committee thinks that such a tribunal as I have suggested will be created—a tribunal that will be just and impartial to the employees and the railroads. Let us examine the character of the duties devolving upon this tribunal.

In the first place, under section 10, they are to prepare plans for the consolidation of all of the railroads of this country. Will anyone say that for that very important duty men who are familiar with the financial operations of railroads will not be selected by the President? Are not men of that character, who have a wide knowledge of transportation problems, who have had long experience in transportation problems, the kind of men that would be selected for this transportation board?

It is also provided that they shall inquire into the transportation needs of the country and into the state of credit of the railways, and that they shall also inquire into what new credit is required for the efficient operation of the railroads, and the findings of this board are prima facie evidence. Up to this point these very important duties, the most important referred to in the bill, necessarily require men who have had long experience in railway management, and have been closely in touch with the financial operations of railways.

The next section gives them authority over the diversion of traffic.

Section 13 gives them the power to incorporate Federal railways, and gives them the power to exercise the right of eminent domain.

Under another section they are given the power to guarantee an operating income to the railroads pending reorganization.

These are the most important duties devolving upon this transportation board; and while there are transferred to this board certain other duties with reference to safety appliances, inspection, and so forth, they are very minor compared to the important duties that I have now suggested, and which I have taken from the bill; and it is very clear that in the minds of the committee in the drafting of this bill it was these financial and practical operations of railroads that were regarded as the most important by the committee, because the bill provides that when these consolidations have been complete the board shall then be reduced from five members to three members.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. LENROOT. I do.

Mr. KELLOGG. Do I understand the Senator to object to the Board of Wages and Working Conditions as a preliminary board?

Mr. LENROOT. Not at all. They are mere representatives for negotiation. That is all they are. They are not tribunals in any sense of the word.

Mr. KELLOGG. I should like to ask the Senator one other question—if he thinks the Interstate Commerce Commission would be such an impartial board?

Mr. LENROOT. Very much better than the transportation board.

Mr. KELLOGG. Personally, so far as I am concerned, that would be entirely satisfactory to me. I can not speak for the chairman.

Mr. LENROOT. I say "very much better," because I think it is clear that in the creation of this transportation board the committee had in mind that this board must be composed of expert railroad men, having long experience in finance and in operation; and I insist that that kind of a board is not that impartial tribunal that should be given the final decision in wage disputes between railroads and their employees.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. LENROOT. I do.

Mr. KING. The other day, when this matter was under consideration, I suggested that in my opinion the Interstate Commerce Commission would be a better agency for the determination of the wage question than the transportation board, and for a number of reasons, but one of the reasons being that an increase in the wage would of course necessitate an increase in the rates, and the body that had to do with the fixing of wages ought to have before it the broad principle of the fixing of rates; and therefore it seems to me that the Interstate Commerce Commission, notwithstanding the tremendous burdens placed upon it, would be in a far better position to pass upon the question of wages as the ultimate tribunal than the board of transportation.

Mr. LENROOT. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. Again I desire to say that so far as that question is concerned, there was very great difference of opinion in the Committee on Interstate Commerce in regard to it. It is merely a matter of good, sane judgment, and I recognize that there are a great many reasons which make toward the selection of the Interstate Commerce Commission rather than the transportation board; and so far as I am concerned I would not regard it as any invasion of the principle of this bill to substitute for the transportation board in that respect the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. LENROOT. I think it would be a very great improvement over the bill if that were done.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. LENROOT. I do.

Mr. POMERENE. I am not sure that I fully understood the objection which the Senator from Wisconsin makes. Do I understand that it is to the transportation board as an appellate board in labor disputes?

Mr. LENROOT. Having the power of final decision; yes.

Mr. POMERENE. And the Senator's suggestion was that there should be substituted for it the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. LENROOT. I suggested an impartial tribunal, and I do not believe this would be such a tribunal. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] suggested the substitution of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and I replied that I believed that would be preferable to the transportation board.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. In addition to what has been said, is not this true also: It will be put into the hands of both boards to operate in the matter. It will be easier for the transportation board to grant increases of wages, because it has no responsibility for taking care of the wages after the wages are increased. It just transfers that responsibility to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and thereby its line of least resistance would be simply to grant whatever increase in wages might be asked and benignly pass them on to the Interstate Commerce Commission to fix the rates to take care of the wages. That seems to me to be an objection also.

Mr. LENROOT. Well, my own fear is quite the opposite, not because of any lack of intention on the part of the transportation board to be fair, but because their whole experience and environment have been such that they have occupied a position of antagonism to the employees of the railroads.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me again, I agree with the Senator about that. The point that I was endeavoring to make was that whichever horn of the dilemma the transportation board took the public would be hurt by it.

Mr. LENROOT. That may be true.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. LENROOT. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. I can not allow that remark to go unchallenged. The public can not be hurt by faithful performance of duty on the part of any public official. The suggestion of the Senator from Tennessee is that the transportation board would be without any sense of responsibility. I deny that. If they are honest men and agree to an advance in wages, they know that they are responsible for a corresponding increase in rates, or the rates that are necessary to pay these wages. I see some reason in the objection of the Senator from Wisconsin, namely, that the Interstate Commerce Commission would be further removed from the actual management of the railway property, and therefore might be thought to be more impartial and possibly more sympathetic. But the notion that we are creating in this bill a board that is without a sense of public duty and which would unnecessarily fasten burdens upon the public I can not allow to go without challenge.

Mr. LENROOT. I have not suggested that.

Mr. CUMMINS. I know the Senator from Wisconsin has not suggested it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Nor have I. I was just pointing out what might occur when these two organizations were created.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators will please address the Chair.

Mr. LENROOT. Now, Mr. President, returning to the details of the bill for a moment, if I may direct the attention of the chairman to the provision on page 10 regarding the four months' guarantee, as I read the provisions of this section, the guarantee covers not only all of the railroads now in possession of the Government and under Federal control, but also covers railroads that were originally taken over, and it provides that whatever the deficit may be in those railroads over which the Government has no control, whatever the deficit may be for that period of four months, it will pay the deficit. Am I correct?

Mr. CUMMINS. Substantially correct.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator think that in the interest of the Government, and with fullest sympathy with these short-line roads and the fullest desire to be of some help to them, it is safe for the Government to say to them, "You can operate as many trains as you like, as extravagantly as you wish, and the Government will pay all of the bills"?

Mr. CUMMINS. No, Mr. President; that would not be wise; and I think the Senator understands how complicated a subject this is.

Mr. LENROOT. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. And how difficult it is to properly safeguard every point in it. A review of the bill has convinced me that there ought to be, on the part of the Interstate Commerce Commission, complete power to revise the cost of maintenance and operation of every road which falls within the guarantee, and correct it if it be found excessive or exaggerated. The clause to which the Senator refers has this protecting provision:

Provided further, That in computing the actual railway operating income for the purposes of this section, the commission shall not allow as operating expenses, for maintenance of way and structures, or for maintenance of equipment, respectively, for any month of the period covered by such guaranty, more than the monthly proportion of the amount fixed by the commission as the amount applicable for such maintenance of way and structures or such maintenance of equipment under the proviso in section 5 of paragraph (a) of the standard contract, but the cost of fire insurance may be included in such expenses. The commission may, in its discretion, make further allowance as operating expenses, in accordance with paragraph (e) of section 5 of the standard contract, to the extent that, in its judgment, will be necessary, so that the amount of the guaranty shall be the substantial equivalent, proportionately for the time being, of the standard return.

I am quite ready to grant that the proviso I have just read may not be broad enough and comprehensive enough to enable the Interstate Commerce Commission to revise the operation of the road and exclude expenses that ought not to have been incurred. But, so far as the principle of the matter is concerned, I believe in this provision profoundly. I think it ought to go further than it does, and I understand that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] has an amendment which he will offer at the proper time.

I will give the Senator from Wisconsin just one instance which actually occurred in Kansas. The Kansas City & Northwestern road was taken into Federal control. The Government did not enter into any contract with it, refused to enter into any contract with it; they were never able to agree upon terms; but the Government actually directed the expenses of the road, the purchase of its materials and its equipment, if any were purchased for the road, and practically governed the management of the property. That road at the beginning, when the Government took it over, had no debt at all, had no bonds or any other sort of debt, but under the manipulations of the Government in connection with it, it is now in debt $400,000, mainly to the people along its line who have furnished it supplies.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, may I state right there that it had netted $17,000 the last year before the Government took it over.

Mr. CUMMINS. It was a paying road before the Government took it over. The Government diverted traffic from it and refused to deliver to it the freight which ought to have been delivered to it, with the result that about a month or more ago—I do not know just how long ago—it passed into the hands of a receiver. The road has actually been abandoned and is not now in operation, and has not been for more than a month, and the people whom it formerly served are left without the transportation facilities to which they are entitled. I think the Government ought to pay the deficit for a road of that kind.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator understands that the only point of my inquiry was a proper protection to the Government against paying excessive deficits, deficits that would not have been created except for the guaranty.

Mr. CUMMINS. I agree entirely with the Senator from Wisconsin upon that point, and I renew my statement that upon going over this proviso again I think it might well be broadened so as to cover, on the part of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the power to do the very thing which the Senator from Wisconsin suggests.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I think I have only one other criticism or suggestion in connection with the details of the bill, and that is the provision found upon page 35, if I may have the attention of the chairman to this language, speaking of the transportation board, relating to the reorganization and consolidation of railroads under the plan provided in the bill:

It shall have the power, subject to the approval of the commission, to make contracts with such existing railway corporations as will cooperate with the board in effecting the aforementioned plan of reorganization and as may agree with the board upon the valuation of the railway properties upon the aforesaid basis—

Now I come to the point.

Providing for a guaranteed operating income pending the reorganization, whether the reorganization and consolidation shall be carried out under an original incorporation under this act or a reincorporation of an existing company, and until, with reference to any particular system, the reorganization and consolidation are complete.

If I correctly construe the language of this section, it delegates to the transportation board the power to obligate the Government to the payment of an operating income limited only by the limits that now exist under the Federal control. It seems to me that under this language, after the board has once made its plan of reorganization, and some weak, struggling road comes in and says that it desires to adopt that plan, pending that reorganization, which might cover several years, the transportation board is authorized to obligate the United States to pay a guaranteed income to that railroad. If I am correct in that, surely the Senator from Iowa will agree that no such authority should be reposed in the transportation board.

Mr. CUMMINS. I can only suggest what I think the committee had in mind. The committee had in mind the period of voluntary consolidation, seven years from the passage of the bill, because the basis of the sentence read by the Senator from Wisconsin is that an incentive or motive shall be presented for consolidation. The thought in the minds of the committee was that here is a plan for ultimate consolidation. As a part of that plan A road and B road are to come together. That would be in furtherance of the plan; it would be a partial consolidation. In that event the two roads would, during the process of their voluntary consolidation or reorganization—and, of course, a temporary disorganization as well, or probably internal disturbance—have the security or the guaranty for each of those roads during that period. It was not intended by the committee that that period should pass over into the period of compulsory consolidation, nor do I think it does. At least, that was not in my mind. I had in my mind just the thought I have attempted to express, that if two railway companies desired to come together in accordance with or in furtherance of the plan proposed by the transportation board, and approved by the commission, this guaranty would protect them during that period of reorganization, when their affairs were likely to be somewhat disturbed. It commended itself to me, because I am a friend of consolidation. I want to see the railroads of the country so consolidated that we can apply reasonable regulation to them and be just both to the capital invested in them and to the public as well.

That is the thought in my mind, and I believe that is the thought in the mind of the committee.

Mr. LENROOT. I, like the Senator from Iowa, am a friend of consolidation, complete consolidation and unification, but I say that I think under this provision the price the Government may be called upon to pay out of the Treasury of the United States under this provision will be altogether too high for such advantages as may be gained under the consolidation that is contemplated in the bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is not likely, I hope, that very many roads will be found earning less than the standard return.

Mark you, the standard return is not applied to the district or the country as a whole.

Mr. LENROOT. I understand.

Mr. CUMMINS. The standard return is applied and is ascertained by reference to the affairs of the particular road. If there are very many roads which do not earn in the years to come the average return of 1914, 1915, 1916, the transportation of the country will be in a bad way.

Mr. LENROOT. That is exactly the point. So long as the railroads are prosperous and are making at least the standard return I do not look for any voluntary consolidation, but if there is industrial depression throughout the United States, as is quite possible, then is the time that the railroads will take advantage of the provision, then is the time they will ask for the reorganization, then is the time that they will want the guaranty of the Government. In an industrial depression like that through no fault of the Government, with the railroads under private control, why should not the owners of the railroads take their share of the depression instead of having a provision of law whereby they may go to the Government and get the same returns that they did during prosperous times?

Mr. CUMMINS. If I may interrupt the Senator from Wisconsin further, I have given the reason which I think actuated the committee. I believe it is a good reason, but I want all Senators to observe that the provision is not vital to the bill in any way. It does not concern the technical life of the bill.

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, no; I understand that.

Mr. CUMMINS. Whether it is to be eliminated or not, any motion made to that effect would be a question simply of sound judgment on the part of Senators. I want them to know that I do not regard it as vital in principle. I am fighting here for the principle of the bill, but I do not intend to be dogmatic with regard to particular provisions which may be presented to the Senate and reasons furnished possibly which were not laid before the committee.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I have now occupied very much more time than I had expected to in the discussion of the bill. With reference to what the Senator from Iowa has just said, I shall offer an amendment striking out that portion of the bill.

With reference to some other suggestions or criticisms which I have made concerning the details of the bill, I am frank to say that I have not attempted to frame such amendments to many of the provisions as I would have been inclined to do had it not been for the fact that it is apparent to all of us that such railway legislation as will be enacted by Congress in all probability will not be this bill or the House bill that is pending in the Senate, but will be a bill written in conference. I have, therefore, said the things that I have and made the suggestions that I have not so much with the idea of taking the time of the Senate now and fighting them out, but rather to get before the committee the views that I hold with respect to certain features of the bill, knowing that they will give them consideration.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit an inquiry?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I apologize to the Senator for recurring to a matter which he passed some time ago, and as to which I did not quite get his views.

The Senator called attention to the fact that within a rate group there might be a road that was not competitive, and yet which, under the system of rate making provided by the bill, would be brought down to a return of 2 or 3 per cent upon any basis established to ascertain the value of the roads. What plan does the Senator suggest, consistent with the general framework of the bill, by which that road might get a higher rate than that provided by the bill—one which would be fair, measured by any standard to be ascertained of the value of the roads?

Mr. LENROOT. Naturally, as I am not in favor of this plan at all, I would not be perhaps competent to make any suggestion; but it seems to me that, while we might in a general way take the value of a property within the group in arriving at some general conclusion with respect to rates, after all, justice can not be done unless there is a valuation of the different units within the group and rates approximated that will be just, in so far as justice can be done, to those different units within the group.

Mr. KING. May I propound one other question relating to another subject discussed by the Senator? Does the Senator distinguish between the duty of Congress in dealing with public utilities—common carriers such as railroads that are so indispensable to the life of the Republic and the people and private corporations in their dealings with their employees? That is to say, a public corporation such as a railroad chartered by a State or by the Federal Government is in a sense a public instrumentality. The owners of the road may not do with that road as they please; they may not suspend operations if they desire to do so. The public is interested in the operation of the road.

Does the Senator think that in dealing with the relations between common carriers and their employees there should be adopted by the Government the same policy and course of procedure as that employed in dealing with disputes between employers and employees of private corporations or private individuals? In other words, are the employees of transportation companies so related to the public that the public ought to exercise any control over controversies or disputes between such companies and their employees, and for that purpose over the employees themselves?

Mr. LENROOT. Of course, there is a distinction between railroads and other public utilities and private corporations. That is largely academic, perhaps, so far as any different treatment by Congress is concerned because it is only under existing war powers that we have the right to deal with the subject of private corporations at all, and once peace is restored Congress, I take it, has no power whatever over the subject in so far as private industry is concerned.

As I have said heretofore I believe the remedy is by the creation of impartial tribunals to finally determine disputes between railway employees and their employers, and with that power of final determination, with an impartial body, I believe that the strike question will settle itself without any possible suggestion concerning compulsory service or interference with the constitutional right of the employee to quit work, aside from any contractual relations, at any time that he sees fit.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I have only this to say: As I said in the beginning, I do not believe that the pending bill offers a solution of the railway problem. For that reason I can not support it. I believe that it will only further complicate a very badly complicated problem. I do not believe that it is possible to operate the railroads in the future and secure the capital that is necessary for successful operation without a guarantee from the Government. I do not believe that Congress will and I feel very certain that Congress should not give such a guarantee while the railroads are managed under the old system. I do not believe that Congress will ever be warranted in affording a guarantee unless the majority control is not in the hands of the Government, not in the hands of political appointees, but in the hands of a body that will have as its first consideration, not the interests of the stockholder, not the interests of the employees, but the interests of the public. I believe that solution which I have suggested will bring it about. I do not expect any such legislation will be reached now, but I would very much prefer that the Senate should take the House bill and build upon that rather than to launch now into such an experiment as is embodied in the pending bill, of doubtful constitutionality, and, to my mind, absolutely impractical in its operations.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr President, I wish to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does the Senator believe it is possible for us to reach a satisfactory conclusion in this matter before the Christmas holidays? Is it not probably true that if we let the matter go over until January we can come here and reach a conclusion that will be satisfactory to all Senators? I have heard quite a number of them say that they are not satisfied with the measure and not ready to vote on it, and I believe they will vote against the bill at the present time. As the Senator has evidently given a great deal of study to the matter, may I inquire what are his views on that question?

Mr. LENROOT. I will say, as I said the other day, that my views are that the railroads ought not to be returned to their owners the 1st of January. I do not believe that it is in the interest of the railroads, the public, or anybody else that they should be returned at the period of their highest expense and lowest revenue. I think the railroads should not be returned until next April or May. If that were done, we would have more opportunity to consider this very important question as it ought to be considered. But we have been told by eminent Senators upon the other side of the aisle that they believe the President intends to return the railroads upon the 1st of next January, about two weeks hence. It does not seem possible that the President would take any such responsibility as that of driving the major portion of the railroads of the country into bankruptcy, but I do not know what the President may do.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator a question. Does the Senator believe it is possible to reach a satisfactory conclusion on this subject before the Christmas holidays? Is it not probably true that if we let the measure go over until January we can come here and reach a conclusion that will be satisfactory to all Senators? I have heard quite a number say that they are not satisfied with the bill and not ready to vote on it; I believe they would vote against the bill at the present time. As the Senator has evidently given a great deal of study to the matter, may I inquire what are his views on that question?

Mr. LENROOT. I will say, as I said the other day, that my views are that the railroads ought not to be returned to their owners the 1st of January. I do not believe that it is in the interest of the railroads, the public, or anybody else that they should be returned at the period of their highest expense and lowest revenue. I think the railroads should not be returned until next April or May. If that were done we would have more opportunity to consider this very important question as it ought to be considered. But we have been told by eminent Senators upon the other side of the aisle that they believe the President intends to return the railroads upon the 1st of next January, about two weeks hence. It does not seem possible that the President would take any such responsibility as that of driving the major portion of the railroads of the country into bankruptcy, but I do not know what the President may do.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I can not think it is possible that he is going to return them on the 1st of January.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I make a short reply to the inquiry of the Senator from Georgia? The Senate committee has been studying this question for at least two years. At the beginning of this session a subcommittee began the formulation of a bill. A little later it reported a bill which was referred to the Interstate Commerce Committee for action. On the 23d of October that bill was reported, is now on the calendar, and is the bill at present being considered.

The Senate of the United States will never be in better position to consider the railroad question than now. The Members of the Senate do not usually, I think, give close, undivided study to a subject until it is imminent. It can not do so in view of the many engagements of its Members. We have been two weeks upon this bill, and I am sure that Senators all have opinions with regard to it and to the general subject. It is of the highest concern that the bill be disposed of very soon—I hope this week—for if it is not disposed of this week, nothing will excuse Senators, I think, from staying here and considering it during the holidays. I can not imagine a Senator being willing to abandon the railroad question now and leave the transportation of this country open to the vicissitudes which confront it. I know the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] well enough to be sure that he will have an opinion, and a very intelligent one, upon this subject, and that he will express it in his vote. I think that every other Senator will be able to do likewise. I can not with complacency think of having the disposition of this bill or any other bill upon the subject go over until after the 1st of January.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I desire to say that it is true that Senators only begin to study most questions when they become imminent. We have so much to do that is almost a necessary consequence of the situation which confronts us.

I am satisfied there are a great many Senators who have only begun to study this bill during the past two weeks. They have gathered a great deal of information about it but have not reached conclusions. I have heard a number of Senators in the last two days express the desire to have more time to study the bill. Of course, if the railroads are to be turned back to their owners on the 1st of January without any legislation the situation would be very bad, but I can not think that possible. I do not think the railroads ought to be turned back to their owners before the middle of the spring.

Mr. CUMMINS. What would happen now if the bill were laid aside? Senators would lay aside the subject and would not take it up again until the bill came before the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think Senators have their minds on it now and are studying it. I know I am giving what time I can—and considerable time—to trying to inform myself somewhat about it, and I have not yet reached a conclusion.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, some months ago the President of the United States stated in unequivocal terms that he expected to return the railroads to their owners on the 1st day of January, 1920. Since then there has emanated from the White House no statement to show that the President has altered his purpose or changed his intention. In view of that situation, does not the Senator from Georgia think that it is incumbent upon the Senate to stay here and transact its business and enact such legislation as will save the railroads from conditions that will inevitably result if they are turned back to their owners on the 1st day of January without legislation on the subject being enacted?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not think the Senate is responsible for the situation which the railroads are in. I do not think—I can not believe—that the President will turn the railroads back on the 1st day of January if legislation has not then been completed. It seems to me that those upon the committee might well communicate with the President and let him understand the labor of this work which is put upon Congress without any help from those who put it upon Congress.

Mr. WATSON. If the Senator will permit me, I desire to say I know that the chairman of the committee has consulted Director General Hines about this matter and he can state the result of his interview; but I further know that, in company with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], I visited the Director General a week ago and more and asked him to let us know what the President intended to do about the railroads; whether they would be returned on the 1st day of January with or without legislation. He responded that he had placed the matter before the President, that he had made a report as the President had requested, and that he had offered a suggestion, although he did not volunteer to state what the suggestion was, and we did not inquire as to what it was. But he stated that as soon as the President signified what his intention was, he would let us know. We returned four or five days later and sought to ascertain whether or not he had received an answer from the President, in order that Congress might know and the railroads might know precisely what the intention of the President is at this time with regard to the disposition of the railroads; but up to this day we have had no response. Therefore we do not know the intention of the President; and inasmuch as there has been nothing to negative the assertion that the President made some time ago that he intended to return the roads on the 1st of January, I think we are warranted in believing that they will be returned, whether we pass legislation or whether we do not.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the President has given no formal announcement by proclamation of the time the roads will be returned. The message, so far as I recall it, to Congress stated that legislation would no doubt be necessary, but that the President had no suggestion to make about what kind of legislation would be required.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, if I may, I desire to suggest that not long ago I put in the RECORD a letter written by the Director General jointly to Mr. ESCH, chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House, and to myself, as chairman of the like committee in the Senate, in which he said—I am not quoting him exactly—that it was utterly impossible for the Government to continue in the operation of the railroads unless Congress were willing to fix a definite time in which it would be sure that Government operation would continue and to make the necessary appropriations. The Director General can not make contracts, or hesitates to make contracts, that must be made for supplies for the coming year. There must be millions of ties bought and they ought to be bought now, because they should be taken out of the woods in the winter.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does the Senator know whether the railroads are making such contracts?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly not; the railroads can not make such contracts. They neither have the money with which to pay for supplies nor do they know that the railroads are going to be returned to their owners. The railroads are utterly powerless to do anything. There ought to be 20,000 refrigerator cars ordered now in order to get them next summer when they will be absolutely needed. The Director General does not feel that he ought to put that burden upon the carriers if the property goes back immediately, and the carriers are utterly incapable of doing it for themselves. There has been no contract made for rail replacements. Everyone knows that it is necessary to have a large volume of steel rails for use during the coming year. They can not be had unless they are ordered months in advance, and there is nobody to order them. The situation is really most distressing, and I can not understand how Senators are willing to postpone the passage of some kind of legislation for a single day.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is it not true——

Mr. WATSON. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will yield in a moment. Is it not true that a definite time should be fixed and the railroads notified, not by a statement through the press but by something more formal to the railroads? And is it not also true that they are not ready to take their property back on the 1st of Jannary, and that paralysis of transportation would follow if an effort were made to turn them over to their owners on the 1st of January?

Mr. CUMMINS. Paralysis would follow——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is it not absolutely impossible to turn them back to their owners on the 1st of January and go on with transportation?

Mr. CUMMINS. No; if a railroad bill has passed at that time, or if it is reasonably certain that within a month after the 1st of January a railroad bill will become a law, the roads can be turned back with perfect safety and there will not be a jar. If, however, they are turned back without any prospective legislation, and with the known habit of Congress to delay everything until the necessity becomes obvious to even the most indifferent mind, then there will be paralysis; then there will be chaos.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Could the railroad corporations organize their distinctive forces between now and the 1st of January? Have they their organizations ready to go on?

Mr. WATSON. They have not, nor can they secure them by reason of the suspended condition in which they now find themselves.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Therefore I am urging that there should be fixed formally a definite time, some little while in the future, and adequate notice should be given of the time so fixed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I recall, notice was published broadcast throughout the land about six months ago informing the railroads that they were going to be turned back on the 1st of January, 1920; and if they have not done anything themselves up to date it is their fault; it is not the fault of the administration.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It was not a formal order from the President. There was no order from the President announcing the time of return.

Mr. WATSON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. So far as I know, there has been no final order emanating from the White House fixing the time for the railroads to be turned back to their owners. If there has been, I should be glad to be corrected.

Mr. WATSON. I am trying to inform the Senator on that point.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WATSON. In his message to Congress on the 20th of May of this year, the President said, unequivocally:

> The railroads will be handed over to their owners at the end of the calendar year; if I were in immediate contact with the administrative questions which must govern the retransfer of the telegraph and telephone lines, I could name the exact date for their return also.

There is a straight, square, unconditional, assertion that the railroads will be handed back to their owners at the end of the calendar year; the President has never stated anything to the contrary; and yet, notwithstanding that fact, the railroads have not been in any position to prepare themselves for receiving their property, because they have not known whether the roads would be turned back, inasmuch as there were certain statements emanating from the Railroad Administration which led the railroad men to believe that the roads would not be turned back on the 1st of January. At all events, their own matters have not been placed in their own hands at any time to the degree that they could take charge, to the degree that they could make contracts for needed supplies and equipment of which the Senator from Iowa well speaks. They will not know, until some definite statement has been made as to the intention of the President, whether the railroads will be turned back to their owners or whether the Government will continue to hold them after the 1st of January.

But I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that here is a straight, square declaration that they will be turned back; and, under those conditions, does not the Senator think that it is positively imperative that we should remain here and legislate in the interest of these great properties?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think first a formal order ought to be issued by the President fixing the time, and directing that the properties be turned back to the railroads, and that formal order ought to be a sufficient length of time ahead of the actual return of the roads to give the amplest notice. I do not think even a declaration in a message that at the end of the year they would be turned back turns them back. I feel that no formal order having been issued, it is not at all settled that the railroads will be turned back on the 1st of January, and that only following an order for their return do we know the time of the return.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, we are not at all responsible for the Railroad Administration nor for the President. I assume that each of those functions will perform its duty according to the way it sees its duty. What we have to do is to perform the duties of Congress so far as the Senate takes a part in legislation. Now, we have a duty. I supposed it was the desire of a very large majority of the Senate and of the Congress, too, and I know of the people of the United States, to relieve the Railroad Administration of the operation of the railroads. If there is any one thing upon which the people of this country are united, it is that the railroads ought to be returned to private management and operation. If there is any dissent from that opinion, except among certain employees of the Government, I have not heard it.

Now, our duty is to put the railroads back in private management, if we believe that they ought to be in private management, and that is what this bill does. This bill does not wait upon the President or the Director General to determine when Government operation shall cease. This bill declares that it shall cease at the end of the month in which the bill becomes a law; and if I understand the temper of the people of this country, that is what they want. They want the roads returned and the management of the railway corporations regulated by the laws; but we can not return them and answer that sentiment of the people of the country until we pass some such bill as this to protect not only the interests of the carriers but the interests of the public as well; for if the roads should be returned without effective legislation they could exist about a month, and then they would fall into hopeless confusion, and two-thirds of them would be in the hands of receivers.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. CURTIS. I should like to dispose of this amendment. If the Senator wants to ask me a question, I yield.

Mr. KIRBY. No; I wanted to suggest the absence of a quorum. I think we ought to have enough Senators here to consider this bill, if we are going on with it. However, I will not make the suggestion.

Mr. CURTIS. Let the amendment be disposed of.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 11, beginning on page 10, after the word "carriers," it is proposed to strike out the words "of which 'Federal control' was relinquished prior to July 1, 1918, as provided in the act of March 21, 1918, this act shall constitute a guaranty for the said period," and insert the following:

> Referred to in the following provision in section 1 of the act of March 21, 1918: "That every railroad not owned, controlled, or operated by another carrier company, and which has heretofore competed for traffic with a railroad or railroads of which the President has taken the possession, use, and control, or which connects with such railroads and is engaged as a common carrier in general transportation, shall be held and considered as within 'Federal control,' as herein defined, and necessary for the prosecution of the war, and shall be entitled to the benefit of all the provisions of this act" and subsequently relinquished regardless of the wishes of the owners: This act shall constitute a guaranty—
>
> (a) to the extent of any actual operating deficit, including taxes, that may have been incurred during the period January 1, 1918, to the date when this act takes effect; and
>
> (b) to constitute a guaranty until expiration of the four months' period heretofore provided in this section—

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the reason for offering this amendment was very well stated a few minutes ago by the chairman of the committee. I had in mind the road referred to by him, the Kansas City & Northern, and also one other road in the State of Kansas. The Kansas City & Northern had made a net profit of $17,000 the year before it was taken over by the Railroad Administration. The administration took over the road, handled it for a time, refused to make a contract, has taken possession of and retained its terminals, directed the movement of its cars, taken its coal, and diverted its freight, and now that road finds itself in debt from three to four hundred thousand dollars. I am told that when the Railroad Administration put its hands on it the road did not owe a dollar in the world. That is one railroad. There was another road without any indebtedness that has been able to live, but the Railroad Administration has diverted its freight, and so manipulated its affairs that the road will have to stop on the 1st of January if something is not done. This other road, the Kansas City & Northern, has stopped operation, the men have been discharged, and the people along the line who have spent a good many thousands of dollars in building that road are now getting no accommodations whatever.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, is it the purpose of this amendment to relieve roads that were first taken over, or sought to be taken over, by Government control and afterwards released?

Mr. CURTIS. The so-called short lines.

Mr. KIRBY. Is it the Senator's idea, then, that they ought to be guaranteed some return hereafter, notwithstanding they have not been under Government control at all?

Mr. CURTIS. If the Government has been diverting the freight and managing them and preventing the operation of the road in the usual way, as was the case with the Kansas City & Northern, and has taken possession of and holds its terminals in Kansas City.

Mr. KELLOGG and Mr. KING addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. KELLOGG. Do I understand the Senator to say that as to these two roads the Government has had possession all the time?

Mr. CURTIS. It has had possession of one of them, and in the case of the other it has controlled and diverted the freight and agreed to make contracts. The parties have been on here four or five times, but the contracts have never been signed. The Government says it has not had possession. That is a disputed question.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, if the road has been in the hands of the Government, under the Federal control act, it has its claim for compensation during the entire period.

Mr. CURTIS. But, Mr. President——

Mr. KELLOGG. Just a moment, if the Senator will excuse me, until I get through with my statement. If it is not in the hands of the Government, if it has not been taken over and operated, then it has not a claim for indemnity. We ought not to decide that question in this bill, because there are a great many short lines that were taken over and turned back, and we are not proposing to pay them for the last two years a guaranteed return, and there is no reason why we should pay the Kansas City & Northern for two years if we do not pay them all; and if we are going to open the door now we will open that door to every railroad company in this country which was taken over and then turned back again.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I think the circumstances connected with the Kansas City & Northern justify this amendment. I do not know that it is drawn so that it will exclude others, but that matter can be very easily handled in conference. It will take but a very short time, and I have no objection to its being changed to meet the situation. The object desired is to have the roads which were taken by the Railroad Administration—or where the greater part of its property was taken and held and where its freight was diverted and it was controlled by the Railroad Administration, and the other roads in like condition—fairly treated.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. KIRBY. Does the Senator expect to have a question of fact determined here by this bill?

Mr. CURTIS. No; I do not want a question of fact settled—not at all. If the amendment is not worded now so that it requires a showing to be made to the proper authorities, I would be perfectly willing to have the conferees make such a change of the language so as to leave the question of fact to the Interstate Commerce Commission or to some other organization.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Is not the bill sufficiently broad to include all roads over which the Government has exercised jurisdiction or of which it took possession during the period of the war?

Mr. CURTIS. I think not.

Mr. KING. That is a question of fact that is easily susceptible of demonstration. If the Government took this road over and did not return it, then, under the bill, the Government would have to meet the guaranty; but if it did take it over and returned it—and that is a fact easily demonstrated—then it is clear that we ought not to make a guaranty for this road unless, as the Senator from Minnesota says, we guarantee all of them.

Mr. CURTIS. But here is the trouble: The Government took the road over and did not make a contract, but it has been directing its management ever since—has full and absolute control of its property, has full control of its terminals in Kansas City, and has diverted freight according to its own desires and ordered that a certain number of cars of freight should be delivered to the line just the same as if it had the legal control. The chairman of the committee made a very fair statement in regard to the treatment of this railroad a few moments ago.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I think the amendment is entirely within the spirit of this bill. We have already made provision in the bill for all these roads that were taken over—and they were all taken over. That does not settle the question of fact. I know they were taken over, because I have seen the notices which were sent out by the Director General about the 1st of January, 1918, in which the Government did undertake to control all of them; but this bill covers those that were dismissed from Government control prior to July 1, 1918. Unfortunately, however, the road of which the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] speaks was not dismissed prior to July 1, 1918. Therefore, it could not come within the terms of this bill, and it has just as good a right to be within the terms of the bill as any of the other roads. So, while I am not sure that the amendment is drawn just as it ought to be—I have not had an opportunity to review it—I know that the spirit of it is right. I think it ought to be subject to some kind of revision by the conference committee or in some other way.

Mr. CURTIS. I am perfectly willing that that shall be done.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, as I understood the Senator, he stated that he knows that this road was taken over by the Railroad Administration.

Mr. CUMMINS. No; I said that I know the facts with regard to the taking over of railroads, because the facts were developed before the Committee on Interstate Commerce. When the President took possession of the roads on the 27th day of December, 1917, he caused to be sent out—not he, of course, personally, but his Director General caused to be sent out—notices addressed to every railroad in the United States containing a copy of the proclamation which the President had issued, setting forth the war necessity and other things of that kind, and directing the railroads to which the notices were sent to hold themselves for the Government of the United States. I know that subsequently certain persons connected with the Railroad Administration claimed that these railroads had not been taken over, and the injustice of it was so apparent that I introduced a bill, just before the 1st of July, 1918, declaring that these roads were in the possession of the United States and must be dealt with accordingly. The Senate passed the bill and the House passed the bill, and the President vetoed it. Such is my recollection. We are trying in this bill for counsel. These sections are for counsel largely. We are trying to do some tardy justice to these roads, many of which have in fact been ruined by the injustice practiced by the Railroad Administration upon them.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, did not the Railroad Administration simply divert the traffic over roads which it controlled, over which it exercised jurisdiction, and whose employees they took under its protection and direction, and other roads over which it did not assume jurisdiction, and to which it gave no traffic to, and leave them to obtain just such traffic as they could obtain from the country in which they were operating?

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I have stated that in this case I know that they did direct certain traffic to go over this road. I know that they did take possession of the terminals, because the Railroad Administration advised me that they did so. I know that they filled the tracks of the terminals full of the cars of other roads. I know that they did advance money to this railroad.

Mr. CUMMINS. There is no doubt about the Government having taken over the railroad to which the Senator from Kansas refers. Nobody questions that.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it is quite likely, under the statements made by the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Iowa, that this road ought to come within the provisions of this bill and obtain whatever guaranties other roads obtain. But it does seem to me that we ought to be very cautious about enacting legislation that would give any pretext whatever to roads that the Government did not take possession of to come in and demand that the Government should guarantee them their earnings during the period of the war.

Mr. CURTIS. If the amendment is broad enough for that, it can be modified in conference; and I have already told the chairman of the committee that I should be perfectly satisfied if the conferees made such a change as they thought necessary. There are certain short lines that are entitled to relief.

Mr. KING. Let me ask the Senator from Iowa whether the language of the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas could in any way be tortured into bearing the interpretation that the Government must pay this guaranteed return to any of the roads throughout the United States which confessedly the Government did not take over?

Mr. CUMMINS. The question of fact is still open. It is not adjudicated by the bill.

Mr. KING. Let me make myself clear. I know a number of small roads which insisted that the Railroad Administration had taken them over under the proclamation made by the President. They were promptly notified that they were not taken over, to continue their operations as they had been operating in the past, and that the Government did not intend to disturb them in the management and control of their own roads; but they have persisted from that time until the present in insisting that the Government had taken them over, although it did not; and, of course, if you permit language that will bear any sort of an interpretation that would include them within the terms of the bill, they will insist that the Government shall pay them this guaranty, the same as it will pay these other roads which unquestionably it did take over and to which it is obligated.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have not read the amendment of the Senator from Kansas carefully enough to answer that. I only know the spirit of it, and with the spirit of it I am in harmony.

Mr. KING. As I understand, the amendment has not been printed?

Mr. CURTIS. No; it has not been printed.

Mr. KING. It has just been read from the desk, and I would like to ask the Senator if he would object to having it printed and give us an opportunity to examine it?

Mr. CURTIS. I have no objection to having it printed and go over until to-morrow.

Mr. KELLOGG. On that subject I will state to the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] that when the President published his order, under the law of 1916, authorizing the Government to take over the railroads, it included all the railroads in the United States in a general description. Afterwards the question arose as to what roads had been taken over and what not, and before the 1st of July, 1918, the President released a large number of railroads in the United States, many of them known as short lines. Those companies have been operating their own railroads from that day to this. They claim, and undoubtedly it is true, that they have suffered by reason of the general rise in wages and operating expenses, and that they could not raise their rates because none of the roads had raised their rates, beyond the one increase of 25 per cent upward. They came to the committee and insisted upon a certain indemnification, and the committee provided that pending the six months after the bill passes they shall be given the same guaranty as the other roads. But it is manifest that if one or two of them are given the guaranty to run clear back to 1918, it will not be possible to leave any of them out, and Congress will have to take care of the entire number of railroads that have been in private operation.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. KELLOGG. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think the Government ought to be burdened with that responsibility?

Mr. KELLOGG. It was not the opinion of the committee that the Government ought to assume that, and the committee restricted the relief to the time of resumption after the roads go back.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think the Government ought to pay anything to those roads for the period from the taking over until the time that the proclamation was issued restoring them, when there was no demand made to regulate or control them or operate them?

Mr. KELLOGG. It was impossible for the committee to examine into one or two thousand railroads scattered over the country, to know to what extent they had suffered or what obligation the Government was under to them.

Mr. KING. Does the bill contain any provision for the method of determining what shall be paid to them?

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes; it makes provision for determining what shall be paid to them.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read it.

The SECRETARY. After line 17, page 16, insert:

Provided, however, That any railroad corporation proposing to undertake any work of new construction may apply to the transportation board for permission to retain for a period not to exceed 10 years all or any part of its earnings from such new construction in excess of the amount heretofore in this section provided, for such disposition as it may care to make of the same; and the said board may, in its discretion, grant such permission, conditioned, however, upon the completion of the work of construction within a period to be designated by the board in its order granting such permission.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, this amendment is offered in the conviction that the bill as reported does not offer sufficient inducement to hold out the hope that there will be any further new railroad construction.

During the year 1910 there were lines projected in the State of Montana, surveys had been made, rights of way acquired, and terminal facilities assured, aggregating something like 1,200 miles, divided almost equally between the Soo Line, the Northern Pacific, and the Great Northern. The Soo construction would introduce another transcontinental line into the State of Montana. For reasons upon which it will not be necessary to dwell the construction has never been undertaken. All these lines penetrate a rich agricultural section, into which, even then, settlers had gone, and the country has been quite generally settled since that time, in the confident expectation that the roads will be constructed at no distant day. Many of the settlers are now at a distance of from 50 to 75 miles from railroad facilities.

I can not believe, Mr. President, that there is anyone who will be quite willing to put money into new railroad construction being assured beforehand that the only return which can be secured upon the money is the equivalent of 6 per cent, with an additional one-half per cent on earnings between 6 and 7 and one-third on earnings over 7 per cent.

Liberty bonds drawing 4½ per cent interest are being sold upon the market to-day, Mr. President, at about 92. I think it a very reasonable expectation that those bonds will be at par in three years. If that is the case, it would pay a man very much better to buy Liberty bonds with his money now than to put it into railroad construction; that is, into new construction.

The amendment offered by me proposes that any railroad contemplating new construction may apply to the Interstate Commerce Commission for permission, upon the construction of the road, to retain all or any part of its earnings, notwithstanding the limitation of the bill, for a limited period, not to exceed 10 years. The Interstate Commerce Commission would then take into consideration the necessities of the region through which the road is to go, the difficulties of construction, and the length of time that will be necessary to put it upon the basis of already established roads.

I think, Mr. President, everyone will concede that some inducement should be made to the roads that are undertaking new construction over and above those that are held out to roads already in existence.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask the Senator whether he has considered the difficulties of making computations, allocating earnings to new construction?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I appreciate the difficulty suggested by the Senator; but the difficulties are no greater than they are in connection with what is ordinarily known as a branch road, and you are bound to do it there. You have to divide the earnings in some way in a case of that character. Although the problem is not simple, it seems to me it ought to be worked out without any particular difficulty by the Interstate Commerce Commission and by a proper system of bookkeeping, so as to make the showing required by the amendment suggested.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator a question. Is it not a fact that under the old system railroads were entitled to earn, according to decisions of the courts, reasonable returns upon capital invested, including branch lines along with the main system, whether they were making money or losing money? That is my understanding.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The amendment is intended to reach the case not of the branch line at all, which becomes a part of the whole system, but it applies entirely to new construction.

Mr. CUMMINS. I, of course, have no authority to accept the amendment, but I see no objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, I send to the desk the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read it.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 17, after the word "court," on page 57, strike out sections 25 to 31, inclusive, down to the words "Sec. 32," line 22, page 66.

Mr. STANLEY addressed the Senate. After having spoken for nearly two hours,

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky has been speaking for several hours, and I am sure he is tired.

Mr. STANLEY. I am not at all tired, but I am sure the Senate is tired.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senate is not tired; but I was going to suggest that there is an important conference report on the Edge bill, and I would like to know if we could not take that up and dispose of it, and the Senator might proceed to-morrow.

Mr. STANLEY. That would be very agreeable, if it suits the convenience of the Senate and the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee, to desist at this time and conclude my remarks in the morning at 11 o'clock, when we convene. I will need to take only a short time to-morrow.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words with regard to the suggestion made by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY]. I realize that he has been on his feet for some time, and naturally is fatigued, and I would like very much to accommodate the Senator; but I think we might as well look forward and see what we ought to do. I assume that the Senate would not take a holiday recess with this bill pending. I assume that it is the intention of the Senate to dispose of this bill in some way before we take a recess, if we take any.

Personally it makes no difference to me. If the bill passes, I shall be here at work with the conference committee. I think it is now for the Senate to determine whether it shall hold evening sessions, or one or two evening sessions, at any rate, or forego the holiday recess. We all know that the House has it in mind and very much desires to take a recess of that kind for a week or ten days or two weeks.

So far as I can control the situation I would be very, very unwilling to see any recess taken by the Senate until the pending bill is disposed of. I want to do the thing that will most completely convenience the Senate. What I would like to see done, if possible, would be this: The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] is weary, as I know——

Mr. STANLEY. I am perfectly willing to go on, but the Senate has been in session much longer than usual to-day. We have been adjourning about half past 5.

Mr. CUMMINS. I gave notice on Saturday, as all Senators will remember, that we would continue this afternoon into an evening session. All Senators had notice of that purpose on my part. But I do not control the action of the Senate, of course, and I want to do the thing that the Senate desires to do. I only know that if we do not make progress upon the bill we shall have no Christmas recess. It is for Senators to determine. It will make no difference with me as a matter of convenience, because I shall not be away anyhow.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. STANLEY. Certainly.

Mr. McLEAN. We might relieve the Senator from Kentucky by temporarily postponing the railroad bill and considering the conference report on Senate bill 2472. I do not think it would take very much time to dispose of it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am very anxious to have some plan that will be satisfactory to all sides. If I felt sure that the conference report to which the Senator refers could be disposed of this evening, I would have no serious objection to that course.

Mr. SMOOT. We had better go on with the railroad bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am assailed on all sides. One Senator wants me to go on with the railroad bill and another Senator wants to go on with the conference report. My own inclination is to go on with the railroad bill just as far as we can go with it this evening.

Mr. HARRISON and Mr. KELLOGG addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. STANLEY. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not think the conference report suggested by the Senator from Connecticut could be disposed of in half an hour. I think I heard the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] say that it would take much longer than that. He wants to speak on the conference report. I suggest to the Senator from Iowa, if the Senate is willing, that we enter into a unanimous-consent agreement to vote on the railroad bill on Friday, if that may be done.

Mr. CUMMINS. I should be very willing to do that, but I have observed that requests for unanimous-consent agreements of that character are not often favorably considered until the debate is practically at an end.

Mr. McLEAN. The conference report on the finance bill has now been pending for more than two weeks, and if it is postponed much longer the Senate of the United States will have to take the responsibility of doing it.

I do not think it will take over an hour to dispose of it, and it seems to me that the conference report ought to be accommodated to that extent. It is an important measure and it has been postponed and postponed. I think it would not interfere with the progress of the railroad bill to try at least to select an hour or an hour and a half some time to accommodate the conference report on this important measure.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am quite desirous of meeting the views of the Senator from Connecticut. It was in my mind that when the Senate has considered the railroad bill as long to-day and to-night as it cares to stay in session we might take an adjournment until to-morrow at 11 o'clock, giving the Senator from Connecticut two hours, or something like that, to dispose of the conference report.

Mr. McLEAN. With that understanding, I am perfectly willing that the conference report shall go over until to-morrow.

Mr. STANLEY. If we can not take up the conference report at this time, it is suggested to me by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] that the hour is getting late and that I resume my argument in the morning.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. STANLEY. Certainly.

Mr. WATSON. I think that ought to be accompanied by a statement by the chairman that he will insist upon a night session to-morrow night and each succeeding night until the railroad bill shall have been disposed of.

Mr. CUMMINS. I said that on Saturday. I would only be repeating what I said then.

Mr. STANLEY. I will say to the Senator from Indiana that I am more than pleased to yield the floor right now and let the Senate take up the conference report, or any other business that may be brought up, and then resume my argument in the morning.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] is not here.

Mr. McLEAN. He is on his way, I am informed.

Mr. CUMMINS. The conference report can not be taken up in any event until the Senator from North Dakota is here.

Mr. McLEAN. I would like to ask——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators desiring to interrupt the Senator from Kentucky will please address the Chair. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. STANLEY. Certainly.

Mr. McLEAN. I ask unanimous consent that the conference report be taken up to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

Mr. STANLEY. I suggest that the Senator amend that request to take it up at the conclusion of my argument to-morrow. I will not take more than half an hour in the morning, I believe.

Mr. CUMMINS. I could not agree to that arrangement. I am perfectly willing to take an adjournment this evening some time, whenever we do close this session, but I am not willing that the conference report shall be made the unfinished business. I am unwilling to give it precedence of the railroad bill.

Mr. McKELLAR and Mr. McLEAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. STANLEY. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. McLEAN. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] has just entered the Chamber, and I suggest that we proceed with the conference report for a short time, if the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] is willing that the railroad bill shall be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. STANLEY. I did not understand the suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. McLEAN. I say we might proceed with the conference report for an hour this evening.

Mr. STANLEY. I shall be delighted to yield for that purpose.

Mr. CUMMINS. I should like to ask the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] whether an arrangement of that sort is agreeable to him?

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I appreciate the courtesy which the Senate extended to me while I was absent in not taking up the conference report. Of course, I believe the conference report is of sufficient importance to take some time to consider it. I have no more responsibility in passing that legislation than any other Senator on the floor. I feel, however, that the party in power, the majority, will be held responsible for the legislation. For that reason I believe that the Senate can well afford to take at least sufficient time to carefully consider it. It is fully of as much importance as the railroad bill, I will say to the Senator from Iowa, if not more so.

I have just one vote. So far as I am concerned I shall not ask the Senate for any special privilege, but I do believe that we are entitled to have sufficient time to consider the conference report. I take it that there will be other Senators who wish to speak on the conference report. If not, I presume that it will not take a great deal of time. Still, I am not going to pledge myself to take only a few minutes; it may be that a few minutes will be sufficient, but I think that if we go into the merits of the conference report it will take a great deal more than an hour, I will say to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield to me?

Mr. GRONNA. I do not have the floor. The Senator from Iowa has the floor.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Kentucky has the floor.

Mr. STANLEY. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. EDGE. I desire merely to make a brief, short observation. The measure referred to by the Senator from Connecticut, it will be recalled, has passed the Senate and passed the House, and we are now confronted alone, as I understand the rules, by the question of concurring in the report of the conference committee. The report of the conference committee was made unanimously. It was reported to the House, and has there been concurred in. It is now before the Senate. While I suppose consideration of the conference report could reopen any phase of the bill that any Senator desires to discuss, still the question finally, as I understand the rule of the Senate, is whether the Senate will or will not agree to the conference report.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a letter, and the accompanying argument, from the National Hardwood Lumber Association, of Chicago, Ill., on the railroad question.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE NATIONAL HARDWOOD LUMBER ASSOCIATION,
Chicago, Ill., December 13, 1919.

Hon. KENNETH MCKELLAR,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: This association desires to commend you for your firm stand in opposition to the adoption of the so-called Cummins bill (Senate file 3288), proposing certain legislation for the regulation and control of railroads.

We desire particularly to call your attention to two sections of the bill, and hereto attached is a memorandum setting forth some of the reasons why we think these two sections are particularly objectionable.

We employ the railroads in the distributing end of our business, and the freight rate is as much a part of our total cost of operation as the cost of raw material, labor, or any other item of expense. We are perfectly willing to pay a reasonable charge to the railroads, but we believe, in all fairness, that we are entitled to have some nonpolitical, unprejudiced governmental agency to determine what that reasonable charge ought to be.

We are very strongly of the opinion that the same agency should exercise all the powers of regulation and control over common carriers which Congress delegates to any body; and, further, that this power should be centralized in one body and not in two or more.

The matter of car supply, distribution, and movement when loaded is so intimately connected with the determination of a reasonable rate that it seems to us, at least, perfectly absurd to delegate power to one body over the question of car supply, adequacy of transportation facilities, and the efficiency of service, and to another body the determination of what we shall pay for those services, each body being independent of the other, and the rate-making body being required to accept the findings and conclusions of the other body as prima facie true, as a matter of evidence.

To our minds this is an experiment that will prove a failure in operation should this bill become a law and the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission be divided with the so-called transportation board.

Jealousies between these two coordinate powers are sure to arise and the efficiency of the law will be practically destroyed. We can not find any sound argument by which the man who pays the freight should be required to go to one body to have fixed and determined a rule of reasonable service and another body to determine what rate should be paid for such reasonable service, since those two matters are so intimately interrelated that the determination of the reasonable rate must necessarily be based upon the reasonable service, which the rate-making body, as a matter of common sense, should be empowered to determine.

The whole bill, it seems to us, is not drawn in the interests of the public, but rather in the interests of owners of railway securities. It is impractical, visionary, and unworkable, and we trust that you will persist in your position and insist that the Esch bill, so called (H. R. No. 10453), now before the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, be reported out, so that the Members of the Senate may have an opportunity to study the provisions of that bill. On the whole, we think that bill is the best that has been offered in the interests of both the public and the railroads.

Very truly, yours,

NATIONAL HARDWOOD LUMBER ASSOCIATION.
FRANK F. FISH, Secretary-Treasurer.

"The National Hardwood Lumber Association is opposed to certain features of the so-called Cummins bill, Senate bill 3285, for reasons set forth below.

THE SO-CALLED RULE OF RATE MAKING.

"Section 4 of the rule provides:

"(a) For dividing the country railroads into rate-making groups.

"(b) The reasonable rates shall be such as will give to the railroads within the group 5½ per cent net operating income on the aggregate value of the railroads within such group. (Sec. 6.)

"(c) The Interstate Commerce Commission shall value the railroads in each group as a basis to fix rates that will yield a net return of 5½ per cent on such valuation. (Sec. 6.)

"(d) The rates shall yield so far as practicable a net operating income that shall bear the same relation to the value of each railroad in the group. (Sec. 6.)

"(e) If any railroad within the group shall earn more than 6 per cent a certain part of such excess shall be taken away from it and expended by a board or loaned to some other railroad.

"(f) The shipper paying this excess can not recover it.

"Let us consider this rule of rate making.

"(a) How can the railroads be divided into districts without overlapping of the same system onto two or more groups, so the same railroad might be a debit line in one group and a credit line in another group and would lose in both groups, because its surplus would be taken away in one case and no credit allowed in the other case?

"(b) If the reasonable rates shall be such as to yield 5½ per cent on the value of all the railroads in each group, then any amount in excess of that return is unreasonable and unlawful for the group of railroads as a whole.

"(c) How is the commission going to fix the valuations so as to determine the rates that shall yield this return of 5½ per cent net? They have been working on this valuation matter for some five years now and the value of no single railroad of any consequence has yet been announced.

"If the provision means that the stocks and bonds shall be taken as the value of the railroads in any or all groups, this can mean only a very great advance in rates, and we protest against it.

"(d) How is it possible to fix rates so the yield shall bear the same or anywhere near the same relation to the value of each property? Two railroads in the same group might have the same physical value, but the earning value of each vastly different. The commission is given an impossible task to thus equalize these varying conditions.

"(e) If any line in a given group earns more than 6 per cent net, a certain part of such excess is taken away; if it earns 7 per cent, still more is taken away from it; so the rule of rate making seems to mean that a railroad in a particular group might earn and retain a net return of one-fourth of any amount in excess of 7 per cent. Thus if any line earned 13 per cent net it might retain 7 per cent plus one-fourth of the excess 6 per cent, or a total of 8½ per cent.

"(f) If under this rule of rate making the railroads by groups or individually have received a net return in excess of such reasonable rates, then such excess belongs not to the Government but to the parties who paid such excess; the shipper can not recover it, and the Government simply proposes to appropriate this money to be expended as directed. Under what guise of law may this be done?

"Certainly the shipper should not be required to pay an excessive rate so that a fund can be accumulated to loan to some railroads who may be in need of money.

"We might better provide for Government loans to railroads upon approved securities, as is provided in sections 208–209 of the House bill now before the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate.

"So far as I can see section 7 is unworkable at all until the valuation of railroads has been completed, and even then it would seem to penalize the more efficient roads without benefiting the weaker ones.

"It does not seem to provide anything in the interest of the public in the way of adequate transportation facilities, efficient service, and reasonable rates.

"Section 7 proposes to create a transportation board of five members and section 10 defines its duties, among which are to prepare a plan under which the railroads of the country can voluntarily consolidate into 20 or 25 systems, which is made compulsory after seven years. (Sec. 13.)

"(b) How and where extensions of lines may be made.

"(c) Look out for the credit and revenues of the carriers and what new capital may be required, and its findings shall be accepted by the commission as prima facie evidence concerning these matters.

"(d) And make report to Congress of the adequacy of transportation facilities.

"(e) And perform practically every other function now performed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, leaving to that body only the power to fix and determine a reasonable rate.

"We are opposed to the creation of a transportation board or any other body having jurisdiction and control over the railroads except the Interstate Commerce Commission, because we believe the law of regulation and control will be operated with greater efficiency through one body with complete power and control than is possible with any number of bodies with divided jurisdiction and power.

"We have had our experience with these different authorities under Federal administration. We have the inferior and superior rate committees and finally the administration at Washington, and by the time we have finished our round we find ourselves at the point of the circle where we started.

"The shippers never have had an opportunity to voice their objections to this bill, as the committee never had any hearings for the shippers, at least.

"Various measures were before the House committee that proposed a divided jurisdiction with the Interstate Commerce Commission and were unanimously opposed by the shippers and shippers' organizations.

"The commerce of the country should not be hampered by being required to go to one body for cars and facilities and the determination of reasonable and efficient services and then to another body to secure reasonable charges for services that the rate-making body knows nothing about.

"Under private operation of railroads the shipper does not go to one department for empty cars and to another to expedite the movement of cars when loaded and to still another for a rate. He does all his business with the railroad, with the traffic department.

"So the Interstate Commerce Commission should be given exclusive jurisdiction of regulation and control as exercised by Congress over all the activities of the railroads.

"Thus the shipper will then have one body to whom it may look for the proper enforcement of the law. It can not be doubted but that the commission will organize itself as to fulfill all of the duties imposed on it."

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, in view of the conflicting desires, I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Mr. HARRISON. I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Harris	Moses	Stanley
Brandegee	Harrison	New	Sutherland
Calder	Henderson	Nugent	Thomas
Cummins	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Trammell
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Phipps	Walsh, Mass.
Dial	Kellogg	Poindexter	Warren
Edge	Keyes	Pomerene	Watson
Gay	Kirby	Sheppard	Wolcott
Gronna	Lenroot	Smith, S. C.
Hale	McKellar	Smoot
Harding	McLean	Spencer

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-one Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of the absent Senators.

Mr. HARRISON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Will the Senator withhold that motion for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no quorum present, there is only one motion which is in order, and that is the motion to adjourn. The question is on that motion.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken.

Mr. THOMAS (after having voted in the negative). I voted forgetting for the moment that I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (after having voted in the negative). I voted inadvertently. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. HENDERSON. Has the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have a general pair with that Senator. When I voted I thought he was present. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. KELLOGG (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and let my vote stand.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] and let my vote stand.

Mr. JONES of Washington (after having voted in the negative). I voted inadvertently. I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], who is necessarily absent on account of illness in his family. I promised to pair with him during his absence, and, therefore, withdraw my vote; but I ask to be recorded as present.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I have a general pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. HARDING (after having voted in the negative). I note the absence of the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], with whom I have a general pair. I transfer that pair to the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I find I can transfer my pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER]. I therefore make that transfer and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. KENDRICK (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. KENDRICK. I have a pair with the Senator from New Mexico, which I transfer to the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and let my vote stand.

Mr. MCKELLAR. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM], and the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] are detained on public business.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON];

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN];

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED];

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]; and

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE].

Mr. WARREN (after having voted in the negative). My regular pair, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] I now notice is absent. I transfer my pair so that the Senator from North Carolina will stand paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] and allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 10, nays 39, as follows:

YEAS—10.

Gay	King	Sheppard	Walsh, Mass.
Harrison	Kirby	Smith, S. C.
Kendrick	McKellar	Stanley

NAYS—39.

Ball	Frelinghuysen	Lenroot	Smoot
Brandegee	Gronna	McLean	Spencer
Calder	Hale	McNary	Sterling
Colt	Harding	Moses	Sutherland
Cummins	Harris	New	Thomas
Curtis	Jones, N. Mex.	Nugent	Trammell
Dial	Jones, Wash.	Phipps	Warren
Edge	Kellogg	Poindexter	Watson
Fletcher	Kenyon	Pomerene	Wolcott
France	Keyes	Ransdell

NOT VOTING—46.

Ashurst	Capper	Elkins	Gore
Bankhead	Chamberlain	Fall	Hitchcock
Beckham	Culberson	Fernald	Johnson, Calif.
Borah	Dillingham	Gerry	Johnson, S. Dak.

Knox	Norris	Robinson	Thomas
La Follette	Overman	Sherman	Townsend
Lodge	Owen	Shields	Underwood
McCormick	Page	Simmons	Wadsworth
McCumber	Penrose	Smith, Ariz.	Walsh, Mont.
Myers	Phelan	Smith, Ga.	Williams
Nelson	Pittman	Smith, Md.
Newberry	Reed	Swanson

So the motion to adjourn was rejected.

Mr. CUMMINS. I withdraw my motion for a recess.

Mr. McLEAN. I ask unanimous consent that the pending measure be temporarily laid aside for the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on Senate bill 2472, to amend the Federal reserve act.

Mr. CUMMINS. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY].

Mr. STANLEY. I withdraw the amendment, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 96, after line 5, it is proposed to insert a new section, to be known as section 48½, as follows:

SEC. 48½. That this act shall not be construed to affect, diminish, or interfere with the power or jurisdiction of the United States Shipping Board over water transportation or otherwise.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WATSON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 22, lines 10 and 11, strike out the words "That street railways and interurban railways whose chief business is the transportation of passengers," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That street, suburban, and interurban electric railways which are not operated as a part or parts of a general steam railroad system of transportation."

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I desire to say that there has been a good deal of controversy with regard to the proper way in which to express the idea the committee had, and so far as I am concerned I am quite as well satisfied with the form used in the amendment as with the form used in the bill itself. I have no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN in the chair). The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, there are two other amendments which I desire to offer to make the other sections of the bill conform to the section which was just amended. I send the first of them to the desk and ask to have it stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 76, line 3, strike out the words "street car and electric interurban lines," and insert after the word "State," on line 4, a comma and the following: "or street, suburban, and interurban electric railways which are not operated as a part or parts of a general steam railroad system of transportation."

Mr. CUMMINS. The same observation applies to that amendment. It makes the bill uniform in that respect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WATSON. I also offer the further amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 96, strike out lines 3, 4, and 5 and insert the following: "which are not operated as a part or parts of a general steam railroad system of transportation."

Mr. CUMMINS. The two former amendments having been adopted, this one ought to be, in order to keep the bill in harmony.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend section 10, as follows: On page 27, in line 11, before the word "waterways," insert the word "inland."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Secretary state how the paragraph would read as amended?

The SECRETARY. So that, if amended, it will read, "different classes of inland waterways."

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator from Washington explain that amendment, if he will. So far as I am concerned, I think the bill ought to remain as it is, although there are reasons which can be suggested by the Senator from Washington for the adoption of the amendment. I want the Senate to take a fair view of the matter and decide it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the only purpose I have is this: I do not want the bill to trench upon the jurisdiction of the United States Shipping Board. I think the amendment we adopted a few moments ago really protects that phase of the situation, but I do not want Congress to enact any legislation that would give the Interstate Commerce Commission control over the rates on any of the waterways of the country at the present time. I do not want to give the Interstate Commerce Commission power to regulate the rates of water carriers on the inland waterways. They ought to be perfectly free.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me a moment, the bill does not give the Interstate Commerce Commission any further authority than it now has over the rates for any kind of water transportation. The part of the bill to which his amendment applies gives the transportation board authority to investigate only. There is no authority to direct or control any transportation on waterways or any other commerce.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; but I have quite a number of amendments along the same line, and I was making a general statement with reference to the matter. This particular amendment, of course, relates only to the provision that the board shall investigate the appropriate types of boats for different classes of waterways. I take it that it is not the intention of this provision to give the board authority to investigate the types of boats for any waterways, at any rate, that are subject to the United States Shipping Board.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, that is one of the amendments which I suggested to the Senator from Washington a few days ago should receive the attention of the distinguished Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL]. The provision was inserted at his suggestion. If he does not care to oppose the amendment, I do not.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do; yes.

Mr. RANSDELL. I stated in response to the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa that I had gone into that matter very carefully with the Senator from Washington; and I see no objection to the term "inland waterways." It is about all that this transportation board could examine into very well, anyhow, without trenching on the authority of the Shipping Board, which, as I understand, has the right to look into all waterways that are not inland. It seems to me that inland transportation by water, which is the kind in which I am especially interested, will be entirely covered and provided for if the term "inland" be used, and the use of the term "inland" will prevent any possible conflict with the Shipping Board, and I assume that that is what the Senator from Washington had in view. May I ask if it was not?

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is the sole purpose.

Mr. RANSDELL. And I will state that I have no objection. I have looked into it carefully.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. KING. In view of the statement just submitted by the Senator from Louisiana that the Shipping Board takes cognizance of this subject, why devolve upon the Interstate Commerce Commission a duty which is now performed by the Shipping Board?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; the Shipping Board has not, under the law, jurisdiction over the inland waterways. All that it has jurisdiction over is the Great Lakes and port-to-port transportation.

Mr. KING. I understand; but what I had in mind more particularly was the style of boats that were to be employed.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course, the Shipping Board has not anything to do with the style of boats, even upon inland waterways. Its sole jurisdiction is defined by the Shipping Board act; and all that I want, as the Senator from Louisiana has said, is to make it clear that the board and the agencies created under this act shall not trench upon the jurisdiction of the Shipping Board.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Would the Senator accept this amendment, inviting attention to line 9, "shall investigate," and then drop down to line 11, "the subject of water terminals," striking out the words "the appropriate types of boats suitable for different classes of waterways"?

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield, and to whom?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I just want to suggest to the Senator that I have another amendment here in line 12—also the subject of water terminals both "for inland waterways traffic and for through traffic by inland water and rail."

I have other amendments so as to make it clear what that relates to, also. I do not want this board to investigate the matter of terminals for waterways that are subject to the jurisdiction of the Shipping Board.

I yield now to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Washington is entirely right. There ought to be some investigation of the style of boats and coordination of railroads and inland transportation. No one pays any attention to the inland waterways now, except an informal convention that looks after them. We have no Government official looking after that subject; and this board ought to study that subject, and also that is provided for in the first part of the section, the subject of coordination of waterways generally with railroads, because now a shipper who lives in the interior of the country and wants to ship outside of this country can not find out anything about whether he can ship to Brazil or anywhere else.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think that is correct.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I move, as an amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington, the following: Strike out, beginning with line 10, the words "the appropriate types of boats suitable for different classes," and also the words in line 11 "of waterways, also," so that it will read:

Shall investigate the subject of water terminals both for water traffic and for through traffic by water and rail.

If this amendment prevails I shall move to strike out some of the succeeding words to which I have just referred.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I hope the amendment of the Senator from Utah will not be adopted. I think this is a very excellent provision of the bill, providing this power is limited to inland waterways. I agree with the Senator from Washington and the Senator from Louisiana. The jurisdiction over inland waterways was expressly excluded from the Shipping Board in the act of 1916; but there ought to be this coordination between the inland waterways and the railway lines in order to give the public the best service and afford the best facilities for transportation, and I think it is an important function to investigate and study the different types of boats that might be used to advantage on these inland waterways. That is one trouble we have had in the past. Something of that sort has been done by the Chief of Engineers of the War Department, particularly with reference to barges on the Mississippi River; but that power ought to be continued here, and that work ought to go on, so that we may have expert opinions and conclusions as to the best types of boats suitable for the different classes of inland waterways.

I hope that the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah will be defeated, and that the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington will be agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Who is to construct the boats in regard to which this commission is to advise?

Mr. FLETCHER. They merely recommend, as I understand.

Mr. KING. Recommend to whom?

Mr. FLETCHER. They recommend to all persons who are interested in the subject of transportation on the inland waterways.

Mr. KING. By that the Senator means that the commission is to make recommendations to private individuals who know a great deal more about the subject of boats, boat building, or types of boats than the Interstate Commerce Commission knows or can know?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not quite agree with the Senator there, because the commission will know what type of boats will best facilitate the movement of traffic on the waterways, and can be best made to coordinate with the railway lines and the terminals.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, just a word in regard to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah. Perhaps he may know more about how to build boats than the people from all over the world, but I do not think the ordinary private individual can ascertain the best types of boats and the best things that have been done by every people on earth. Such a commission as this can examine the whole subject, can learn everything the world knows on the subject of these boats, and can get together that information and give to the people who desire to build boats the benefit of the accumulated wisdom of all the world.

If I were going to build boats I would like to have the knowledge which all the people of all the world have, and I as an individual could not get it. This governmental board could get it and give me the benefit of it. That is the sole purpose of it.

I, living in Louisiana, as I do, would not even know what they were doing on the western coast or what they were doing in Maine or in Florida. I, as an individual, would have no means of ascertaining all these things in this great country of ours. But the Government can get together all that information.

The provision is a most wise one. I am entirely in accord with the amendment suggested by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], as I previously stated, and I sincerely hope the substitute of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] will be voted down.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Louisiana, of course, is so wise that he is familiar with this subject, and his rebuke to those of us who do not know anything about it is doubtless merited. We all know the assiduity with which the Senator from Louisiana for years, in this Chamber and out of the Chamber, has sought for appropriations for waterways, and for the improvement of brooks and streams that exist throughout the length and breadth of the land, particularly in some of the Southern States. So I can appreciate, of course, the great zeal that he exhibits in respect to the appropriation which will be involved in this measure.

Mr. President, it is absurd, and I say it with all due respect to the Senator from Louisiana, to require the Government of the United States to go out upon a fishing excursion to obtain information for every businessman in the United States. The men who are engaged in the construction of boats and in the manufacturing plants throughout the country, the shipping plants and the steel plants and the various factories, know infinitely more about those concerns than the officials whom the Government may employ. This is simply an attempt to create another division or bureau or agency in the Interstate Commerce Commission which will call for the appropriation not of thousands but perhaps of millions of dollars. The men who want to build boats will build boats, and they will not ask the Government of the United States to get the information or the data to enable them to build boats. That data is available. Anybody who desires may obtain information as to every type of boat there is in the world, and obtain the information within a few hours, if he goes to the appropriate libraries. If the libraries here do not furnish him the information he can very easily obtain it by communicating with the shipping interests in other parts of the world.

This is simply a plan to get more money out of the Treasury of the United States to provide for additional employees, to create more bureaus and more instrumentalities, more and more to extend the paternalistic hand of the Government of the United States to private agencies and private activities.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, this is an important matter, and I think we ought to have a quorum. I therefore make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Gronna	McKellar	Spencer
Brandegee	Hale	McLean	Stanley
Calder	Harding	Moses	Sterling
Colt	Harris	New	Sutherland
Cummins	Henderson	Nugent	Thomas
Curtis	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Trammell
Dial	Jones, Wash.	Phipps	Walsh, Mass.
Edge	Kellogg	Poindexter	Warren
Fernald	Kendrick	Pomerene	Watson
Fletcher	Kenyon	Ransdell	Wolcott
France	Keyes	Sheppard
Frelinghuysen	King	Smith, S. C.
Gay	Lenroot	Smoot

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-nine Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I have just a word to add to what I said before. The remarks about brooks and little streams have been made in the Senate so often that I do not care to discuss the matter. I think the Senate understands generally my position in regard to river and harbor improvements. There is no new board proposed to be created by this amendment. It is the transportation board that, along with its other duties, is asked to make some intelligent investigation in regard to waterways to see whether the waterways of the country may not be coordinated with the railroads and induced to cooperate their business, so as to give as much advantage to the transportation interests of the country as possible.

I can not see how there could be any additional bureaus or any great expense. It may involve a few thousand dollars to conduct this investigation along with the other ordinary and proper duties of the transportation board. So there is absolutely nothing in that argument. I care not to say anything more on the subject. I ask for a vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the substitute of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] for the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

SEVERAL SENATORS. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the substitute.

The SECRETARY. On page 27, in lines 10 and 11, strike out the words "the appropriate types of boats suitable for different classes of waterways, also."

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is now on the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] moves the same amendment on page 27, in line 11, before the word "waterways," to insert the word "inland."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington moves, in line 24, before the word "waterways," to insert the word "inland."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington moves, on page 28, in line 4, before the word "water," to insert the word "inland."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington moves, in line 5, to strike out the words "joint and" and insert the words "from railroads."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington moves in line 8, before the word "water," to insert the word "inland."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington moves in line 12 to strike out the word "water" and insert the words "inland waterways"; and in line 15 to strike out the word "water" and insert the words "such inland waterways."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCER. I offer the following amendment, which I ask the Secretary to read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the proposed amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 89, line 2, after the word "established," insert the following:

Provided, however, That this restriction shall not operate to hinder or prevent the commission establishing or maintaining a through route where one of the carriers is a water line: And provided further—

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, the amendment is the result of the consensus of opinion of the waterways convention which recently met here. The situation is that at the present time every station in Minnesota, Wisconsin, Illinois, Iowa, and Missouri, on the Missouri River and north of it, has a joint rate that is actually in operation upon all the traffic originating in those States and destined for New Orleans. The joint rate is composed of the railroad short haul and the river haul from East St. Louis, Ill., down to New Orleans. There is a saving on that joint rate of 22½ cents a hundred on all first-class freight, according to the southern classification. There is a saving of 3 cents a hundred on flour and grain and grain products which equals from $18 to $20 a car. That is the situation as we have it to-day.

The bill provides that after this act goes into effect no railroad shall be required to make any joint rate, unless the whole line of the railroad is used, except in cases when the use of said whole line would be so circuitous as to be unreasonable.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri is mistaken in that. The bill makes no change in the law in that respect, as I recall it. I am entirely in sympathy with the proposition of the Senator from Missouri, but the bill does not change the present law with regard to the authority of the commission in making other routings.

Mr. SPENCER. May I ask of the Senator from Iowa for information if the bill does not provide, on page 89, that without the consent of a railroad there can not be a joint traffic unless the entire length of the railroad is used, except in case where the route would be so circuitous as to be unreasonable?

Mr. CUMMINS. That is quite true, but that is in the present law. It is an exact reproduction of the terms of the present law, as I remember it.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator is right, that under the present law—under Government operation—the railroads are required to short haul from Iowa to East St. Louis and then to have the river take the rest of the haul to New Orleans. When the roads go back to private ownership will not that arrangement cease at once and the joint rate be canceled and the advantage be destroyed?

Mr. CUMMINS. It is quite probable that it will, but the Senator from Missouri, as I understood him, was of the opinion that the bill imposes that limitation upon the establishment of through routes and joint rates. It is not the bill that does it; it is so provided in the present act to regulate commerce.

Mr. SPENCER. I think the Senator from Iowa is quite right, and if I said anything to the contrary I was mistaken.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not care to have the bill bear any more burdens than are being put upon it from the one side and the other.

Mr. SPENCER. If the Senator is satisfied as to the fairness of the amendment, perhaps I am taking up time unnecessarily. Unless there is some question about it, I do not want to consume any further time.

Mr. CUMMINS. So far as I am concerned, the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri is a proposed change in the act to regulate commerce.

Mr. SPENCER. That is true.

Mr. CUMMINS. The provisions which he seeks to modify have been in force since 1910. I opposed the limitation in the Senate when the act to regulate commerce was amended in that year, and I am opposed to the limitation now, but I want the Senate to understand that this is not an amendment to the pending bill, except as that section is reproduced in the bill. It is an amendment to the interstate commerce act.

I see no reason why the limitation should not be eliminated. There is an amendment printed, proposed by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], and, as I understand it, proposed also by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON], which if agreed to directly eliminates that limitation from the interstate commerce act.

Mr. SPENCER. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. SPENCER. Am I correct in my understanding that so far as the present amendment goes it is an amendment which the Senator thinks is desirable in the interest of the public service?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have always believed that commerce should seek the most economical route. I have always believed that we ought to avoid all waste in transportation and that a shipper has a right to route his freight, assuming the route chosen is an economical one, and that the requirement that the road which receives the freight in the first instance ought to be permitted to carry it over its entire length could not very well be sustained upon the ground of economy. But in the committee we did not attempt to change the interstate-commerce act in that respect.

I am expressing merely my individual opinion with regard to the merits of the controversy.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not think in the unqualified statement which the Senator makes that he entirely realizes what he says. If a road is a short line and a complete line between two points, is there any reason why it should be compelled at the end of 10 or 20 or 100 miles to give up the traffic to another line simply because the Interstate Commerce Commission says so when it is no shorter and no more economical?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly not, and I did not intend to say anything of that kind. I said the Interstate Commerce Commission has the right or ought to have the authority to establish a through route and a joint rate where it is more economical and would save waste.

Mr. KELLOGG. I quite agree with that. What is sought, not by the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] but by some of the amendments offered, is to enable the Interstate Commerce Commission to force traffic off from a good economical through route to some side line that is not worth anything in order to support it. That is the object of some of the amendments. That is not the object of the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FERNALD in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota, who is familiar with the subject—and I confess that I am not—whether the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri would not indirectly affect short lines or the routing of freight over short lines?

Mr. KELLOGG. I think the amendment of the Senator from Missouri simply provides connections with water lines.

Mr. SPENCER. That is all.

Mr. KELLOGG. It does not cover the entire subject, and as I see it, I do not know that I have any objection to it. The committee had many requests to allow the Interstate Commerce Commission to make joint routes or new routes solely for the purpose of taking care of lines of road that could not earn a living in any other way, although the line from which the traffic was diverted was the short line and an economical line. As I now understand the remarks of the chairman, I do not dissent from his position.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator another question. As I understood the Senator from Iowa, the question involved in the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri received consideration years ago, when the present law was written, and upon due consideration the project which the Senator from Iowa then suggested, which was the same as that now offered by the Senator from Missouri, was defeated and the law written as we now find it.

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not know whether an amendment like the one now offered by the Senator from Missouri received any consideration at that time or not. I think the main principle involved in the old interstate-commerce act creating through routes was principally as between railways, and of course the Interstate Commerce Commission ought to have the power to create through routes and fix through tariffs. There is no doubt about that. The limitation should be maintained so that the through route shall, when it is practical, as I recollect it, embrace substantially the greater part of the main line; but I do not think the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri does away with it. It is really intended, of course, to cover water routes.

Mr. KING. I should be very glad to have the Senator from Missouri specifically point out and declare the fact, if it be the fact, that his amendment will not have the effect remotely, directly or indirectly, to permit the routing of freight in aid of some broken-down or inefficient or poverty-stricken railway at the expense of some well-managed and efficient railroad?

Mr. SPENCER. I can make that statement with all the emphasis that the Senator from Utah desires.

May I say one thing more? The proposed amendment is permissive in its character to the Interstate Commerce Commission and does nothing more than allow them to continue precisely what is now done and has been done during Government operation, but what it is feared may, in the interest of railroads and against the interest of the shipper, be denied when the railroads go back to private ownership. I can not see that there is any objection to it. If the Senator desires, I shall be glad to give a concrete illustration of the way it works that is, to my mind, absolutely convincing.

Mr. McKELLAR. May I interrupt the Senator just a moment? I desire to say that I hope the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] will not insist upon taking out of the amendment of the Senator from Missouri any purpose to help the broken-down railroads at the expense of the good ones. If he insists upon any such principle as that, he will insist upon defeating the whole bill, because the whole bill is intended for that purpose.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I did not hear the reading of the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, and I want to ask whether it gives the Interstate Commerce Commission the right to establish a joint through rate over railroads and waterways?

Mr. SPENCER. Under certain conditions it does, precisely as is now in operation. I can give the Senator an illustration——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I could give several instances where that power has been used to the detriment of the waterways. So far as I am concerned I want to give to the Interstate Commerce Commission control over the inland waterways just as little as possible, because the Interstate Commerce Commission very naturally looks after the interests of the railroads, and if it is going to sacrifice anybody it is going to sacrifice the waterways, and I do not want to have them sacrificed.

Mr. SPENCER. Then the Senator from Washington will be in favor of the amendment which I have offered, because the amendment was the result of the careful deliberations of the waterway delegates who recently met in the city of Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Do they know?

Mr. SPENCER. I presume they know.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Where you give the Interstate Commerce Commission control over joint rates it can then regulate the tariff rates of the waterways, and it will regulate them in the interest of the railroads.

Mr. SPENCER. That is one of the things they discussed, and as a result the amendment was proposed. The amendment did not originate with me, however. I cordially indorse it, and I believe it is absolutely essential, as will be seen by any man who is interested in the waterways.

Mr. JONES of Washington. They may have misunderstood what the effect would be. That is what I am afraid of.

Mr. SPENCER. I do not think they did, and I am sure if the Senator understood the amendment——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am just asking the Senator whether it gives the Interstate Commerce Commission control and authority to fix a joint rate over railroads and waterways?

Mr. SPENCER. Under certain conditions.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If it does that, it will be used to the injury of the waterways.

Mr. SPENCER. It can not be.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Interstate Commerce Commission has that authority now.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; and it uses it to the detriment of the waterways.

Mr. CUMMINS. It has had it for a long time, however.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I should like to get it away from them.

Mr. CUMMINS. The amendment does not increase the authority of the Interstate Commerce Commission in that respect.

Mr. SPENCER. It does not give to the Interstate Commerce Commission any more power, but does prevent the absolute disregard of a joint waterway and railroad route for merchandise. May I say——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I take the Senator's word for it. I want to accomplish what he apparently wants to accomplish, and all I was afraid of was that it gives them the right to do just exactly what he does not want to have them do.

Mr. SPENCER. I do not want to take up any further time if the Senator is satisfied.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I was not sure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The further amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 89, line 2, strike out the word "Provided" and insert the words "And provided further."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, I ask that the following amendment, proposed by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], who is now absent, be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada in behalf of the Senator from California.

The SECRETARY. On page 77, line 7, after the word "charges" and before the word "between," insert the words "or in the division of rates, fares, and charges."

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the amendment proposes a change in the act to regulate commerce as it has been in existence for a great many years. In my opinion it does not change the law at all. It is intended simply to clarify the statute. Recently the Interstate Commerce Commission decided that the law as it is means precisely what the proposed amendment would make it mean. But there was a division among the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission upon that question, and I assume that the amendment has been brought forward in order to make perfectly certain what to some of the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission seemed uncertain.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is correct. The amendment is in the interest of clarity. As the Senator from Iowa says, the purpose is to clarify the situation, in view of the difference of opinion that seemed to exist among the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] introduced the amendment, and in his absence I promised to bring it up.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GAY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 66, after line 21, it is proposed to insert the following as a new section:

SEC. 31½. The provisions of this act relating to the grouping or consolidation of carriers by rail, the adjustment of rates, fares, and charges in rate districts to yield the returns prescribed herein, and the disposition of the excess earnings of carriers by rail shall not be construed to apply to or affect any carrier by rail, including belt-line railroads and terminal facilities, owned exclusively and operated and controlled by any State or political subdivision thereof. In prescribing or reviewing rates, fares, or charges exacted or to be exacted by any such carrier by rail the commission shall take into consideration, in addition to other proper charges and expenses, all legitimate development costs and the par value of bonds which have been or may be issued by any such State or political subdivision thereof for the purpose of financing the construction of any bridges, tunnels, or other improvements or betterments used or necessary in connection with such carrier by rail, and owned exclusively by such State or political subdivision thereof.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I should like to hear an explanation of this amendment. If it applies merely to belt-line roads, which are really local services, or at least have no connection with general transportation, I have no objection to it; but if it is to apply to the general transportation of the country, then I would be very much opposed to it.

Mr. GAY. The Senator from Iowa has stated the object of the amendment in the first part of his sentence. I called the Senator's attention to this matter to-day. The amendment can not be construed to apply generally to the transportation of the country; it is intended to apply to belt railroads or terminal facilities which are municipally owned and which can not be construed as being a part of the railway system of this country. I understand from a number of members of the committee that the amendment conforms to the policy of the committee, and I think it clearly states its intention.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is, the Senator feels that a railway which is operated by a State or which is owned by a State should not become a part of the national system of transportation?

Mr. GAY. That is correct.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no objection to the belt line part of the amendment which is proposed by the Senator from Louisiana, as I told him to-day. I did not, however, observe at that moment that he was endeavoring to except all Government or State owned roads. I thought he had in mind simply those municipal conveniences which the State or the city may own. If he goes further than that—and I fear his amendment does go further—I could not agree to it.

For instance, the Georgia Central Railroad is owned by the State of Georgia. I am not willing to exclude that railroad from the benefits or advantages which I hope may accrue to railways and to people through legislation of this character. The road would be of little value to the State and of no value to the stockholders if it were excluded from its connection with the general system.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator from Iowa permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. I desire to say that the State of North Carolina also owns a railroad, which is leased to the Southern Railroad for 99 years at 7 per cent. Would this bill in any way affect that lease?

Mr. CUMMINS. No; this bill does not propose to invalidate contracts; on the contrary, the bill recognizes contracts.

Mr. OVERMAN. It will not affect the lease to which I refer at all?

Mr. CUMMINS. Not in the least; not in any way.

Mr. KING and Mr. DIAL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think the bill would affect such a lease in this way: If there were no voluntary grouping or consolidation of corporations which would include the road, if the State of Georgia refused voluntarily to permit it to be assimilated by some other road, at the end of seven years under this proposed law, the State could be forced to part with its title.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think the State could be forced to part with its title; that is quite right. The system of consolidation provided for here would apply to such a railroad as well as to any other; but the State would receive the full value of its property if any such consolidation should take place; and, so long as the title remains as it is, of course, the contract between the two railroad companies would not only be respected but it would have to be respected.

Mr. OVERMAN. Would the consolidation plan which is here proposed for railroads nullify the lease to which I have referred, covering, we will say, 180 miles of the main line of the Southern Railroad between here and Atlanta? The Southern Railway has taken that lease for 99 years. Under this bill could the road which is owned by the State be forced into a consolidation with the other road and thereby bring about a cancellation of the lease?

Mr. KING. Yes; certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. No. I think the owners of the property would have a right to their rental for the time for which it was rented. It would seem to me that any purchaser of the property must take it burdened with the lease. I can not imagine any other sort of procedure. If there should be a condemnation of the property, then, of course, the purchaser would acquire it subject to the lease, unless there was a condemnation of the leasehold interest. In other words, there can not be any disturbance of contractual rights and no diminution of the value of the property.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should hope not; I do not think we could do that; but I merely desired to know whether the measure would affect the road at all.

Mr. CUMMINS. No, it is not intended to do so, and, in my judgment, it is not going to do so in any way.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I am glad we have reached this stage. This is the point which I have been desirous of reaching for some time. As I understand, it is desired in this bill to consolidate the railroads. For the first seven years it is voluntary, and after that time it is compulsory on the part of the railroads to consolidate. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee where he finds any law under the Constitution to authorize that feature of the bill? According to what process would he proceed? Upon what authority may we provide that the roads have to consolidate? I know of no constitutional law at all which will allow the taking of private property for private use, and I know of no law which will allow the taking of private property for public use except under the theory of eminent domain. How, therefore, can it be said in this instance that one railroad shall absorb another railroad? It does seem to me that that is fundamentally unconstitutional. The only way I know whereby that could be brought about would be for the road to go into the hands of a receiver and have the property sold and then bought up.

I know, Mr. President, at least that we have great trouble in getting the different security holders even in one corporation to exchange their securities, much less to secure the consent of the security holders in two different corporations to such a transaction. The thing seems to me to be absolutely impossible. I do not understand which corporation would absorb the other, and I certainly do not know of any part of the Constitution authorizing it. If this matter has been discussed during the debate, I will be glad to have some Senator refer me to the debate, for I want enlightenment on that point.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am very glad to give the Senator what little light I have upon that point. It may be that we differ fundamentally, as he says, with regard to the Constitution; but I think the Government of the United States can acquire every railroad in the United States which carries commerce between the States.

Mr. DIAL. Very probably it can.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Government can do that under the power of the Constitution, which gives Congress the authority to regulate commerce among the States and with foreign nations.

Mr. DIAL. It might be necessary to amend the Constitution.

Mr. CUMMINS. If Congress believes that the acquisition of all the railway property in the United States is necessary in order properly to regulate commerce among the States, I have no question at all that these properties can be acquired. They can be acquired under the power to establish post offices and post roads, and that power is supplemented, of course, by the war power. Germany acquired her railroads because she believed it to be necessary to protect her in time of war; and, while I am not founding this bill upon any authority of that kind, it deserves consideration.

I return to the constitutional provision for the regulation of commerce among the States and with foreign nations. It has been held that Congress under that power could incorporate a railroad company for the purpose not only of carrying commerce among the States but carrying local commerce as well.

Mr. DIAL. If the chairman of the committee will allow me, the point is not with reference to what the Government can do toward acquiring roads but how can the Government let one road acquire another?

Mr. CUMMINS. I am about to come to that; one has to develop his subject from the beginning. If Congress can acquire all of the railway properties in the United States and operate them because it believes it can better regulate commerce in that way, if Congress can create a corporation which shall acquire railways and operate them because it believes that the commerce among the States can be best regulated in that manner, Congress can give to a company which it creates the power to condemn the power of eminent domain over any property, it matters not what that property may be or what that property may be used for at the given time. If we believe that the proper regulation of commerce requires the consolidation of all of the railways of the country into one corporation, I have no doubt that we can give that company the right to acquire these properties, because that is our opinion and our judgment in regard to the best way to regulate commerce. That, I think, answers the question of the Senator from South Carolina. He and I differ, undoubtedly, with regard to the constitutionality of the authority in that respect.

Mr. DIAL. How would the holdings of the stockholders and bondholders of the companies to be acquired be secured? Would they be paid for in cash?

Mr. CUMMINS. In my judgment, the Government can deal either with the physical property or it can deal with the stocks and bonds. If it elects to pursue the method of taking the physical property, it can do so. It must pay for it. It pays for it to the corporation that owns it. It is the duty of that corporation then to distribute the value of that property, as determined in the proceedings subjecting it to the public use, in accordance with the rights of the bondholders and stockholders. On the other hand, if the Government desires to acquire the property through stock ownership, it has the right to condemn the capital stock, the shares of stock, in so far as they are evidences of property. Whatever may be said of the wisdom of doing so, there is no limit to the power of Congress in that respect, except that whatever it does must be a regulation of commerce, it must be done for the purpose of regulating commerce among the States, and it must not take property without due process of law. Those are the only limitations upon the power of Congress in regulating commerce.

Mr. DIAL. I desire to thank the Senator very much for his explanation, but I do not agree with him yet. We remember that in the case of the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co., a good many years ago, the owners of the outstanding preferred stock, when they were allowed to consolidate with some of the other large companies, would not go in and surrender the stock, and there was no way to make them, so far as I know. I am merely anxious that we shall pass a bill that will be a constitutional bill, and it certainly seems to me to be divesting vested rights to adopt a procedure whereby the courts would require one road to acquire another road.

I thank the Senator very much.

Mr. CUMMINS. Returning to the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY], from which we have departed rather widely, I again say that so far as I am concerned I would have no objection at all to withdrawing from the operation of any part of the bill the belt line or municipal line which the Senator from Louisiana has pointed out, a line passing around the docks in the city of New Orleans; but I am not willing to make any other exception.

Mr. GAY. Mr. President, in view of what the Senator from Iowa has just said, I suggest that this amendment be amended in line 8 by striking out the words, "State or political subdivision thereof," and substituting "political subdivision of a State," which I think would cover the objection that the Senator has, and that the same thing be done on the second page, line 7, by striking out the words "State or," which would then read, "and owned exclusively by such political subdivision thereof."

I think that would meet the objections which the Senator has indicated.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the author of the amendment how it would affect the State road which runs from Chattanooga to Savannah, the road owned by the State of Georgia? It is leased by the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis, which in turn is controlled by the Louisville & Nashville Railroad. The Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis is building an independent line from Tennessee to Atlanta; and I should like to know how this amendment would affect the State road while it is under lease, and also if it should be operated by the State at the end of the lease?

Mr. GAY. I do not think it would affect it at all.

Mr. HARRIS. I did not hear the amendment read.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, it seems to me that the suggested amendment of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY] does not at all meet the objection made by the Senator from Iowa. The only difference that it would make in the law with his amendment is as to ownership; but in the case of a railroad generally engaged in interstate commerce, the same as any other railroad corporation, it still would be included in the bill with the suggested amendment, and if we have here a railroad doing the same business as an ordinary railroad corporation is performing I can not see why it should not be subject to the provisions of this bill, whatever the provisions may be.

Mr. GAY. I will say, if the Senator will pardon me, that this railroad is merely a switching terminal—part of the dock facilities of the city.

Mr. LENROOT. That may be what the Senator from Louisiana has in mind; but the language of the amendment would cover any railroad owned by any political subdivision, and it might be a thousand miles in length. In fact, we have, or did have, the Cincinnati, Dayton & Ohio road, that was owned by the city of Cincinnati; I do not know but that it is still owned by the city of Cincinnati. It would take that road out of the operation of this law.

Mr. GAY. This applies to a belt railroad.

Mr. LENROOT. No; it is only "including belt-line railroads." It reads "any carrier by rail, including belt-line railroads."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator believe, with the information which he possesses, in view of the statement made by the Senator, that that particular road ought to come within the operation of the bill?

Mr. LENROOT. If it were limited to belt-line railroads, for instance, I would have no objection to that portion of the amendment.

Mr. KING. Of course, I am entirely in sympathy with the Senator from Louisiana, and if I had my way I would go a great deal further. I think this bill goes too far in destroying municipal roads, and roads that are purely intrastate, and can possibly have no relation to interstate roads.

Mr. LENROOT. That might be; but this amendment would cover any road, of any length, doing exactly the same character of business that a railroad is doing that is covered by the bill; and the mere fact of ownership ought not to deprive the public—which is the purpose of this legislation—of the regulation in the public interest of that kind of a railroad, as well as any other.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. He has very well expressed my view. It is the character of the service which the railroad renders which must except it from the operation of the law, rather than the ownership. Now, I think the belt line is already excepted, certainly from the consolidation plan, and I have no objection to that; but I am not willing to go into the question of ownership at all.

Mr. LENROOT. Now, Mr. President, as to the second portion of the amendment, certainly it does not seem to me that the Senate should adopt that. It reads:

> In prescribing or reviewing rates, fares, or charges exacted or to be exacted by any such carrier by rail the commission shall take into consideration, in addition to other proper charges and expenses, all legitimate development costs and the par value of bonds which have been or may be issued by any such State or political subdivision—

And so forth. It lays down an absolutely unique rule of valuation, and one that has been consistently discarded by the courts. No court has ever even suggested that in making a valuation for the purpose of fixing rates the par value of securities shall be taken into consideration. The farthest the courts have ever gone is the suggestion that the market value of securities might be one of the elements to be considered; and certainly the Senate and the Congress ought not to fix one rule of valuation for State or municipally owned properties and a different rule of valuation for privately owned properties.

It is the public, I say again, that is interested in having reasonable rates, and if a municipal corporation or any subdivision of a State has issued securities for double the valuation of the property, the mere fact that it is done by a State or subdivision thereof should not cause the public to be charged with exorbitant rates. That is exactly the proposition of watered stock in railroads, nothing different; and this amendment in its effect would legalize any water there may have been in the issue of bonds. Of course, I can not conceive that the chairman of the committee or the Senate would accept such a discrimination in favor of publicly owned utilities.

Mr. GAY. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin has called attention to a feature of this amendment which certainly was not the intention of the Senator from Louisiana in presenting it to the Senate. He feels deeply interested in seeing the municipal belt railroads—for instance, one such as exists now in the city of New Orleans—exempted from the provisions of this bill. I do not believe the bill was ever intended to take in a railroad of this description, but it might be so construed. I would suggest, if the Senator from Wisconsin agrees, that this matter could be afterwards amended, perhaps, in conference.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I would suggest that he withdraw his amendment, and he can perfect it to-morrow so as to cover the identical thing he has in mind.

Mr. GAY. Does that meet with the approval of the chairman of the committee?

Mr. CUMMINS. That is quite satisfactory.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. GAY. Then I ask permission to withdraw the amendment, with the idea of further perfecting it later.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn. The Senator from Georgia is recognized.

Mr. HARRIS. I merely wanted to ask that the amendment be withdrawn until to-morrow, on account of its importance to my State.

Mr. CUMMINS. I move that when the Senate adjourns, it adjourn until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CALDER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of page 95 it is proposed to add the following new section:

SEC. 47½. That the third proviso of the eleventh paragraph of section 20 of the act to regulate commerce, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Provided further, That it shall be unlawful for any such common carrier to provide by rule, contract, regulation, or otherwise a shorter period for giving notice of claims than 90 days, for the filing of claims than 4 months, and for the institution of suits than 2 years, such period for institution of suits to be computed from the day when notice in writing is given by the carrier to the claimant that the carrier has disallowed the claim or any part or parts thereof specified in the notice."

Mr. CUMMINS. That is a provision which was found in the House bill. I think it is a very just and wise one. While I have no authority to accept it I shall be very glad indeed to have the Senate make it a part of this bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I am going to offer an amendment simply to clear up any doubt there may be with reference to the language on page 28, in line 18. I do not think myself that there is any doubt about what the word "carrier" refers to in that line, but it has been suggested to me by some that they do have some doubt about it. So I offer the following amendment. After the word "carrier," on page 28, line 18, I move to insert the words "by railroad."

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no objection to that, because I understand the section to be limited to that sort of a carrier now.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I offer amendments to the pending bill, which I do not suppose can be disposed of to-night, and I ask that they be printed in the RECORD and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is so ordered.

The amendments are as follows:

On page 14, after the word "secured," insert the following words: "also the requirements for additional capital in order to encourage the construction of railroads in parts of the United States lacking adequate transportation facilities, and the conditions under which the same can be secured."

On page 18, after line 8, insert the following new section:

"SEC. 6a. The commission may, in its discretion, exempt any corporation organized after the passage of this act, which shall construct, maintain, and operate any new line of railroad in any part of the United States lacking adequate transportation facilities, from any or all of the provisions of this act relating to the adjustment of rates, fares, and charges to yield the designated return in the various rate districts, the disposition of excess railway operating income, or the consolidation or Federal incorporation of carriers, but only with respect to such new line or lines of railroad, in so far as such corporation shall request such exemption, and in so far as the commission shall, after hearing and under such procedure as it may prescribe, determine that such exemption is consistent with the public welfare, but not for a period exceeding 10 years after the building of the railroad. The property, rates, and railway operating income of any such carrier, in so far as it is so exempted, shall not be taken into consideration during the continuation of such exemption, in determining the aggregate value of the railroad property in any rate district, the rates, fares, and charges to be exacted by the other carriers therein to yield the designated return, or the disposition of the excess railway operation income of such other carriers, under the provisions of this act.

"The commission may, in its discretion, so adjust the rates, fares, and charges of such an exempted carrier, and may, by order promulgated in advance, after notice and hearing and under such procedure as it may prescribe, adjust the rates, fares, and charges of such carrier with respect to any line of railroad under construction or to be constructed by it that such rates, fares, and charges will yield a net railway operating income for such carrier, with respect to such new line or lines of railroad, not exceeding 10 per cent of the actual value of its property used for transportation purposes, if and in so far as the commission shall determine that such rates, fares, and charges are necessary in order to encourage the construction of any new line of railroad in any part of the United States lacking adequate transportation facilities: Provided, That every rate, fare, or charge of any such exempted carrier shall at all times be fair and reasonable as compared with those charged for similar services under like conditions by other railroads in the same rate district; and that such carrier, its directors, officers, agents, and employees shall, except as herein otherwise provided, be subject in all respects to the provisions of the act to regulate commerce and of this act. The commission may at any time alter or amend any order, regulation, rate, fare, or charge prescribed or permitted under the provisions of this section, and may exempt any such carrier or continue such exemption under such conditions as it may by order prescribe."

On page 74, after line 4, insert the following new paragraph:

"It shall be the duty of the board, in exercising this authority, to encourage the construction, by corporations organized after the passage of this act, of new lines of railroad in parts of the United States lacking adequate transportation facilities."

On page 17, after the word "carriers," in line 9, insert the following words: "including loans to corporations organized for the purpose of constructing, maintaining, and operating railroads in parts of the United States lacking adequate transportation facilities."

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment relating to the liability of common carriers, about which I have spoken to the chairman of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. Amend by adding, after the word "State," on page 76, line 4, the following proviso:

Provided, That nothing contained in this section or in this act is intended to change, alter, modify, or limit present liability of common carriers, and their liability shall be and remain as it now exists under the common law and by statute.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, there is nothing in the section to which the amendment refers that by any possible construction or interpretation could be held to modify or change the liability of common carriers. But I am very desirous that everybody will understand that that is so, and inasmuch as I know that this amendment has been suggested by a distinguished lawyer and a highly respected citizen, I do not oppose the amendment, and hope it will be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, on page 52, line 4, I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the proposed amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 52, line 4, after the word "railway," strike out the words "or water."

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, that, of course, raises the old question. It is the section which relates to the supervision by the Interstate Commerce Commission over the issuance of securities. There are only a certain class of carriers subject to this act, as the Senator from Washington knows, and I can not see why the commission should not have authority over the issuance of securities by the carriers which are subject to the act or within the act. The Senator from Washington does not desire, I am sure, to take away from the Interstate Commerce Commission the jurisdiction which it now has; at least, he has not proposed to do that. Why, therefore, should not the commission have the authority to regulate the issuance of securities with respect to the very carriers whose rates it must regulate or supervise?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, it has been suggested to me that the character of the business, and the manner of doing it, of the water carrier is very much different from that of the rail carrier, and it was suggested that if this provision were adopted, for instance, if a vessel were wrecked and it were necessary to salvage it, no indebtedness could be incurred, no notes issued, or anything of that sort, without first getting the consent of the commission, if it exceeded 5 per cent; that that takes time; that the condition is entirely different from what it would be in connection with a railroad, and that therefore this provision ought not to apply. The company may be small; it may be a small boat that is wrecked; and yet it would have to wait on the board before it could issue a note or other evidence of indebtedness.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not so construe the section.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is the way it has been construed by those who have looked into it pretty carefully. I have not had time to examine it as carefully as I would like.

Mr. CUMMINS. The section, section 24, begins:

From and after 90 days after approval hereof it shall be unlawful for any railway or water common carrier subject to this act to issue any share of capital stock or any bond or other evidence of interest in or indebtedness of the carrier, herein collectively termed "securities," or to assume any obligation or liability as lessor. * * *

Unless it be for some lawful object within its corporate purposes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. And on page 55 it provides that—

The foregoing provisions of this section shall not apply to notes to be issued by any said carrier maturing not more than two years after the date thereof and aggregating not more than 5 per cent at any time of the par value of the securities of said carrier then outstanding.

A great many of these water carriers are comparatively small institutions, and it was feared that the provision might work quite a hardship on them.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, that presents a question upon which there are differences of opinion. It is in the House bill, and I am quite willing, if the Senator from Washington desires it, to take it into conference.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I would like to have that done so that it may be considered in conference.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the proposed amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 35, line 10, after the word "writing," insert the words "the properties or securities so acquired," and in line 12 strike out the words "so acquired."

Mr. KING. Let the language be read as proposed to be amended.

The SECRETARY. So that it will read:

The board shall have the power, and it shall be its duty, to transfer, by proper instruments in writing, the properties or securities so acquired to the corporation—

And so forth.

And in line 12 strike out the words "so acquired."

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, not only am I willing to accept this amendment, but I am very greatly obliged to the Senator from Wisconsin for calling it to my attention, and for offering it. There is a plain omission in the text of the bill, brought about by failure of either a clerk or the Printing Office to make the text complete.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I offer an amendment on page 77, line 22. I move to strike out, beginning with the words "Provided, however," all of that paragraph, extending to line 17 on the following page. That is the long-and-short-haul provision.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Washington knows very well that his views and mine concur with respect to this amendment, but I feel that it is a subject of such great importance that it ought to be discussed and determined when there are more Senators here. I ask the Senator from Washington whether he wants to have the matter disposed of at this time. I feel quite certain that it would lead to some discussion.

Mr. KING and Mr. POINDEXTER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator from Iowa directed a question to me, if the Senator from Utah will allow me to answer it.

Mr. KING. If the Senator would just permit me, I would like to state that I have made a promise to certain Senators that if this and other very important amendments should be called up to-night, I would ask for a quorum, or beg the chairman of the committee to allow them to go over until to-morrow; and I make the request now, with respect to this matter, that it be permitted to go over until to-morrow.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am very much in favor of a rigid long-and-short-haul clause, as the Senator from Washington knows; but I do not think it would be quite fair to dispose of it at this time.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think the Senator from Iowa is entirely right about that, and my purpose in moving it this evening was to give notice and get the matter before the Senate. I have no objection to passing over the amendment for the time being.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry? Some of the Senators who are very much interested in this question are not here, and I am sure if the Senator would make a brief statement as to the effect of it, so that it would appear in the RECORD and they could read it before coming to the Senate in the morning, it would enable some of us to vote a little more intelligently.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, it would be impossible to state this case in the offhand way that the Senator from Utah suggests and do justice to it at all. I will state the parliamentary effect of the amendment. It is to strike out the proviso of the long-and-short-haul rule in the fourth section of the interstate-commerce act. The result of striking out the proviso would be to leave the long-and-short-haul section of the bill unqualified. It would be to leave the rule without exception, that no greater charge could be made for the transportation of passengers or property for a short haul over the same line and in the same direction than is made for a long haul. I think that is a sufficient statement of the object and effect of the amendment.

I may say just one word in addition. Under the present system a practice has grown up by which the terminals of the railroads are favored at the expense of the entire interior country, one of the worst sufferers being the State of Utah, so well represented by the distinguished Senator. Goods are hauled over the Union Pacific and the Central Pacific, from Chicago and from New York, through the State of Utah, to the city of San Francisco, across great mountain ranges, at great expense, difficult transportation, at a lower rate than if those same goods were deposited in transit at an intermediate point in the State of Utah. The purpose, of course, is to throttle and retard the development of the State of Utah. It is with the object of removing such discrimination that I offer this amendment. The question is quite familiar to many Senators, and to-morrow when the matter comes up, if necessary, I will make some further statement in regard to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the amendment will go over.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, on behalf of my colleague [Mr. KENYON] I present the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read it.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 14, after the word "repeal," insert the following paragraph:

All complaints heretofore or hereafter filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, arising out of the maintenance or enforcement of unjust, unreasonable, unjustly discriminatory, or unduly prejudicial rates, fares, rules, regulations, or practices during the period of Federal control, shall proceed to a conclusion. If reparation shall be awarded by the commission in any such case by reason of the collection or enforcement of rates, fares, rules, regulations, or practices during the period of Federal control, including rates, fares, rules, regulations, or practices applicable to interstate, foreign, and intrastate traffic initiated by the President, which the commission shall find to have been unjust, unreasonable, unjustly discriminatory, unduly prejudicial, or otherwise, in violation of law, the amount of reparation so awarded shall be paid forthwith out of unexpended balances in the revolving fund created by the Federal control act, out of moneys appropriated by the act entitled "An act to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for carrying out the act entitled 'An act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes,' approved March 21, 1918," approved June 30, 1919, out of moneys derived from the operation of the carriers, or otherwise, arising out of Federal control, out of moneys that have been or may be received in payment of the indebtedness of any carrier to the United States arising out of Federal control, or out of other moneys appropriated by this or other acts for such purpose. All complaints praying for reparation by reason of the collection or enforcement of unjust, unreasonable, unjustly discriminatory, or unduly prejudicial rates, fares, rules, regulations, or practices, during the period of Federal control, shall be filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission within one year after the termination of Federal control, as herein provided, and not otherwise. All complaints hereafter filed praying for reparation by reason of collection or enforcement of unjust, unreasonable, unjustly discriminatory, or unduly prejudicial rates, fares, rules, regulations, or practices, during the period of Federal control, shall be brought against the United States of America, and service shall be made upon the Attorney General of the United States, and in all such proceedings heretofore filed and pending and undetermined at the time of the expiration of the period of Federal control, as in this act provided, the United States of America shall be substituted for the Director General of Railroads as defendant, and all notices and orders in such proceedings shall thereafter be served upon the United States Attorney General.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the amendment just read does not, in my opinion, enlarge the scope of the bill except in one respect, namely, a limitation upon filing claims for reparation. The whole purpose of the amendment is to make it clear that the claims for reparation and for unjust and unreasonable charges during Federal control shall be filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, and that the commission shall continue to have the same jurisdiction which it has had heretofore in that respect. I offer no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I wish to call the chairman's attention to a change on page 64 which I think should be made. In line 20 I move to strike out the words "said commission" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the committee of wages and working conditions, the regional board of adjustment, or the board, as the case may be." The words I seek to insert appear in lines 8, 9, and 10, which will enable the Secretary to follow it.

Mr. CUMMINS. There is no objection to the amendment. It is a clerical correction.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POMERENE. Also, on page 65, in line 5, after the word "committee," I move to insert the words "a regional board of adjustment."

Mr. CUMMINS. There can be no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POMERENE. On the same page, 65, in line 12, after the words "by the board," I move to amend by inserting the words "or by said regional board of adjustment." I submit the amendment just as stated. There is a little difference between the chairman of the committee and myself as to just where it should go in, but it can be called up to-morrow if desired.

Mr. CUMMINS. There is no objection to the amendment, but a hasty survey of it seems to me to make it appropriate at another place. However, that can be adjusted hereafter.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, some difficulty has arisen over section 20 of the interstate commerce act with reference to the liability of water carriers for loss, damage, or injury to property while in its custody. To make that clear, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the proposed amendment.

The SECRETARY. After the words "United States," in line 25, page 95, insert a new section, to be known as section 47½, to read as follows:

SEC. 47½. The eleventh paragraph of section 20 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended by inserting immediately before the first proviso thereof the following: "Provided, That if the loss, damage, or injury occurs while the property is in the custody of a carrier by water, the liability of such carrier shall be determined by and under the laws and regulations applicable to transportation by water, and the liability of the initial carrier shall be the same as that of such carrier by water."

Mr. JONES of Washington. The amendment which I propose I understand—I have not had time to look it up—was recommended by Commissioner Clark, of the Interstate Commerce Commission. At any rate, it was made a part of the House bill in section 435.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have not seen the proposed amendment. I ask the Senator from Washington whether he has examined it and thinks it is right.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have done so as fully as I have had the time, and I am convinced that it is a proper amendment. The rules of liability by water carriers growing out of the nature of the way they do business are a little different from those of rail carriers.

Mr. CUMMINS. I quite agree with that.

Mr. JONES of Washington. This is to make the liability for damage done while in the custody of the water carriers to be governed by the rules governing the liability of water carriers.

Mr. CUMMINS. What led me to make the inquiry is the language—

Provided, That if the loss, damage, or injury occurs while the property is in the custody of a carrier by water—

The section to which this relates concerns carriage by land as well as by water—while the property is in the custody of a carrier by water, the liability of such carrier shall be determined by and under the laws and regulations applicable to transportation by water—

That is all right—

and the liability of the initial carrier—

That may be the railroad—

shall be the same as that of such carrier by water.

I am sure the Senator from Washington does not want to destroy or modify the liability of carriers by land and reduce that liability to the standard that we all recognize as proper for carriers by water.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It seems to me that if the damage occurs while the property is being carried by water, if it is a damage for which the railroad is liable, its liability ought not to be greater than the liability of the water carrier.

Mr. CUMMINS. How can that be true when it says if the injury occurs while the property is in the custody of the carrier by water?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator is more familiar with the various phases of the liability of the different carriers, railroad and water, than I am.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am rather familiar with them.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If he thinks that last clause is not necessary or should not be there, I am willing to strike it out, because I can not speak definitely, as I do not know anything about the details of the matter.

Mr. CUMMINS. Assume, now, the instance of a shipment partly by land and partly by water. The land carrier brings it up to the ocean side and then the water carrier takes it. If the injury occurs while it is on the water, then I agree with the proposed amendment entirely.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is the sole provision—if the damage occurs while the property is in the custody of the water carrier.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think I perceive now the full meaning of the amendment, and I do not think there is any objection to it. I submit that to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. I have been looking at another matter and have not followed it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I was in error with regard to my reading of the amendment. I have no objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I wish to direct the chairman's attention to page 3, line 9. The matter was called to my attention by the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD]. Should not the word "county" be "court"?

Mr. CUMMINS. That is plainly a misprint. I think it should be corrected.

Mr. POMERENE. I move to amend by striking out the word "county," in line 9, page 7, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "court."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POMERENE. On page 55, line 12, I move to strike out the word "than," before "outstanding," and insert in lieu thereof the word "then." It is evidently just a misspelling.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is a typographical error that ought to be corrected.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POMERENE. I also wish to direct the chairman's attention to page 94, line 20. This is evidently an amendment of section 16 of the act to regulate commerce. Line 20 reads as follows:

Made under the provisions of sections 3, 13, or 15 of this act.

It would seem to indicate sections 3, 13, or 15 of the pending bill. I think it means sections 3, 13, or 15 of the act to regulate commerce.

Mr. CUMMINS. Obviously it does.

Mr. POMERENE. I move, therefore, to strike out the word "this" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the act to regulate commerce as amended," so that it will read "sections 3, 13, or 15 of the act to regulate commerce as amended."

Mr. CUMMINS. There is no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 10, line 3, after the word "carrier," it is proposed to insert the following:

Accepting in writing the provisions of this section and.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am glad to accept the amendment. It makes certain what I believe to be the real intent of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, on page 82, after line 13, I offer a new section to be known probably as section 41½. I do not think the Senator from Iowa will have any objection to the amendment. It is a provision that is found in section 412 of the House bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 82, after line 13, it is proposed to insert a new section, to be known as section 41½, as follows:

SEC. 41½. Section 6 of the act to regulate commerce is hereby further amended to read as follows: "(e) The absorption out of its port to port water rates or out of its proportional through rates by water carrier of the switching, terminal, lighterage, car rental, trackage, handling, or other charges by a rail carrier for services within the switching, drayage, lighterage, or corporate limits of a port terminal or district, shall not be held to constitute an arrangement for a continuous carriage or shipment within the meaning of the act to regulate commerce and shall not subject such water carrier to the provisions of such act."

Mr. CUMMINS. As I understand, that is a provision which is recommended by the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; I so understand.

Mr. CUMMINS. I shall make no objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRANCE. I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk, adding certain new sections to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. —. That hereafter it shall be unlawful for any owner, operator, manager, trustee, receiver, or lessee of any transportation system or systems, by land or water routes within the territorial boundaries of the United States of America and engaged in or soliciting interstate commerce under a common control, management, or arrangement, or any servant, employee, or agent of such owner, manager, trustee, receiver, operator, or lessee, or any other person having connection therewith, to deny or to refuse to furnish, by any device or method whatsoever, equal and identical rights, accommodations, and privileges to any person who shall pay, or offer to pay, the uniform charge made for such equal and identical rights, accommodations, and privileges in interstate transportation, when such refusal is on account of the race, color, or previous condition of servitude of the person so applying.

And it shall hereafter be further unlawful for any owner, operator, manager, lessee, trustee, or receiver of any system or systems of transportation within the territorial boundaries of the United States of America and engaged in or soliciting interstate commerce, or any servant, employee, or agent of such owner, operator, manager, trustee, receiver, or lessee, or any other person connected therewith, to operate upon any part of their transportation system or systems any car, vessel, train of cars, or other conveyance in and upon which any person being transported to a final destination beyond the boundaries of any State or Territory of the United States of America, or beyond the boundaries of the District of Columbia, and paying, or offering to pay, the uniform charge made for transportation in interstate transportation, shall, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, be separated from any other passenger, or be denied equal and identical rights, accommodations, and privileges accorded any other passenger paying or offering to pay such uniform charge for interstate transportation, or be permitted to be assaulted, molested, or in any other way injured or oppressed by reason of the exercise of any right herein granted or protected.

SEC. —. That any owner, manager, lessee, operator, trustee, or receiver of any system of transportation as set forth in section 1 of this act who shall violate or connive at the violation of any of the provisions of section 1 shall for each such violation or connivance forfeit not less than the full sum of $5,000, to be recovered in a proper United States court, in an action on the case, to the use of each person aggrieved by such violation, together with costs and reasonable counsel fees, to be fixed by the trial justice; and all other persons guilty of such violation or participation therein shall, upon conviction in a proper United States court, be fined $1,000 or imprisoned in a Federal prison for one year, or both.

SEC. —. That the provisions of this act shall apply to the interstate operation of transportation systems under Federal control, with like penalties and punishments for its violation.

SEC. —. That all acts, parts of acts, statutes, regulations, and orders not in conformity herewith are hereby amended, altered, or repealed.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I shall not discuss this amendment at this time, but on some future occasion I shall discuss the various important questions involved in the amendment. I, however, have offered the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, my purpose this evening was, so far as possible, to dispose of all amendments concerning which there was no serious dispute. I recognize that there are certain amendments, among them the one offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY], which he withdrew a few hours ago, and many others that will excite considerable debate. I do not want to enter upon the consideration of those amendments this evening; but if the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] has other amendments——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I was going to say that I desire to offer an amendment. After it is read the Senator from Iowa, I think, is probably sufficiently acquainted with the situation to decide whether or not it is proper. I have a little memorandum in regard to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 92, after the word "case," in line 2, it is proposed to strike out the quotation marks, the period, and insert a comma and the following:

Provided, however, That the carrier to which property may have been so diverted shall not be liable hereunder unless it had actual notice by bill of lading, way bill, or otherwise of such routing instructions, in which event the revenue received or receivable for such freight shall be recoverable only from the carrier which diverted the property contrary to routing instructions in the bill of lading.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, there is no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask that the bill be reprinted showing in italics the amendments adopted up to this time, so that all Members of the Senate may be apprised of what has been done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. HENDERSON. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to an amendment proposed by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], which proposes to strike out, on page 88, line 17, beginning with the sentence "And in establishing such through route" and ending on page 89, in line 6, with the words "desirable in the public interest." Does the Senator from Iowa think that that proposed amendment if offered at this time would provoke debate?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the amendment raises the question presented by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] a little while ago, and which was incidentally brought before us by the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER].

The amendment just referred to by the Senator from Nevada would strike out the limitation in the present law with regard to the establishment of through routes and would leave the Interstate Commmerce Commission at liberty to establish a through route under such circumstances as might deprive the initial carrier of a haul over its line in the same direction. I am not prepared to accept the amendment, although if it were properly guarded the authority of the commission could very well be enlarged in that respect; but I am sure the Senator from Minnesota opposes the amendment as it is, and I would not care to take it up to-night, because it might provoke debate and could not be disposed of without a roll call. If the Senator from Nevada is willing to have the amendment disposed of without a roll call I am perfectly willing to have it submitted.

Mr. HENDERSON. I merely desired to call the proposed amendment to the attention of the Senator from Iowa. If it is going to lead to debate I shall not present it at this time, as I understood the Senator from Iowa to say that only amendments that would not lead to debate would be brought up this evening.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I submit amendments to the pending bill, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendments are as follows:

On page 1, line 7, after the word "repealed," insert the following: "So far as it affects railway corporations, common carriers, or systems of transportation, accepting the terms and provisions of this act, but otherwise shall continue in full force and effect until the end of the calendar year 1924: Provided, however, That the regulation of intrastate rates shall after the repeal, both with respect to carriers electing to remain under the provisions of the Federal control act and with respect to all other carriers, be revested in the several States and the agencies established by law therein."

Also, on page 2, line 1, after the word "any," insert "such," and in line 10 strike out "all" and insert "such."

Also, on page 60, strike out the entire section 26 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 26. The wages and salaries paid to classified employees, including sleeping-car employees, by common carriers accepting the terms and conditions of this act, and the wages and salaries paid to such classified employees of transportation systems remaining under Federal control, together with the hours of labor and all other conditions of employment of such classified employees, shall be at least as favorable to such employees as those paid and accorded for similar services rendered under similar conditions in other industries, taking into account the hardships, hazards, and responsibilities of the employment, the training and skill required, the steadiness and tenure of service, and any provisions for participation in pensions or other benefits. The purchasing power of such wages and salaries shall be stabilized as follows: The scales of such wages and salaries in force on July 1, 1915, shall be considered the basic scales of such salaries and wages. The Bureau of Labor Statistics shall compile and publish on the 1st days of February, May, August, and November of each year tables showing the current average cost at retail, in the principal industrial and commercial centers, of such supplies of food, clothing, housing facilities, fuel and lights, furniture, and other necessaries in the proportionate amounts reasonably sufficient for the support of a family of two adults and three minor children therein, together with the cost of the same group of necessaries in December, 1914; and the wage or salary paid at each pay day to each such classified employee whose basic rate is less than $3,000 a year shall be at such basic rate for the corresponding service performed in July, 1915, plus the percentage by which the cost of the group of necessaries before mentioned at the industrial or commercial center nearest his place of residence, as shown by the tables of the bureau last published, exceeds the cost of the same group of necessaries in December, 1914: Provided, however, That nothing in this section shall operate to reduce the amount of wages or salary of any employees below the amount to which such employee was entitled in December, 1919: And provided further, That the board shall have power, upon the petition of the representatives of any group of such employees, to readjust the basic scale of wages and salaries whenever it shall determine, after such notice and hearing as it shall prescribe, that the actual compensation received by any such employee or employees is less than that paid in other industries for similar services rendered under similar conditions, or is inadequate for any other reason."

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. CUMMINS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. EDGE. If the Senator will allow me, is the motion of the Senator to adjourn to 11 o'clock to-morrow morning?

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senate has already adopted an order that when it adjourns to-day it shall adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 8 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned, the adjournment being under the order previously entered until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 16, 1919, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 15, 1919.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou great Father Soul, ever working in and through Thy children, we realize that:

Art is long, and Time is fleeting,
And our hearts, though stout and brave,
Still, like muffled drums, are beating
Funeral marches to the grave.

Inspire us with clear perceptions, high ideals, worthy endeavors, with always a noble purpose in view, that we may work out our own salvation with fear and trembling: For it is God which worketh in us both to will and to do of his good pleasure.

Let us, then, be up and doing,
With a heart for any fate;
Still achieving, still pursuing,
Learn to labor and to wait.

After the similitude of the Master. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, December 13, 1919, was read.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I think we ought to have a quorum present, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman withhold that for a moment? I should like to submit a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. BLANTON. I think the gentleman would rather make it with a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. It is clear that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MONDELL. I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming moves a call of the House.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 41, noes 11.

Accordingly a call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Anderson	Ellsworth	LaGuardia	Rowan
Andrews, Md.	Fairfield	Lehlbach	Rowe
Anthony	Ferris	Lesher	Sabath
Aswell	Fess	McCulloch	Sanders, Ind.
Bacharach	Gallivan	McKeown	Sanders, La.
Baer	Garland	McLane	Sanders, N. Y.
Bee	Goodall	Madden	Sanford
Bell	Graham, Pa.	Mann, Ill.	Schall
Blackmon	Hadley	Miller	Scully
Bland, Mo.	Hamill	Moon	Sears
Booher	Hamilton	Moore, Ohio	Smith, Ill.
Bowers	Hardy, Colo.	Moore, Pa.	Smith, N. Y.
Brand	Harreld	Moore, Va.	Steele
Britten	Heflin	Mott	Steenerson
Brooks, Pa.	Hoch	Mudd	Sullivan
Burdick	Hudspeth	Neely	Sumners, Tex.
Burke	Hulings	Nicholls, S. C.	Tague
Clark, Fla.	Humphreys	Nichols, Mich.	Taylor, Ark.
Cleary	Husted	Nolan	Thompson
Connally	Hutchinson	O'Connor	Tillman
Cooper	Igoe	Osborne	Vaile
Copley	Johnson, Ky.	Paige	Venable
Costello	Johnson, S. Dak.	Pell	Watson, Va.
Davey	Johnston, N. Y.	Pou	Webster
Denison	Jones, Tex.	Ramseyer	Wheeler
Dewalt	Kahn	Randall, Calif.	Williams
Donovan	Kearns	Reavis	Wilson, Ill.
Dooling	Kelley, Mich.	Riddick	Wilson, La.
Dunbar	Kendall	Riordan	Wise
Dunn	Kennedy, R. I.	Robinson, N. C.	Young, Tex.
Eagan	Kettner	Robsion, Ky.
Eagle	King	Rodenberg
Edmonds	Kreider	Romjue

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 303 Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming moves to dispense with further proceedings under the call. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. BLANTON. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming moves to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The question being taken,

Mr. BLANTON. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House proceeded to divide.

Pending the division,

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, on this question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demands the yeas and nays. All those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Forty-five Members rising, not a sufficient number.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask for the other side.

The SPEAKER. There is no other side.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. The Constitution provides that the yeas and nays may be ordered by one-fifth of those present.

The SPEAKER. But there is no other side. The question is whether the demand is seconded by one-fifth of the Members present.

Mr. BLANTON. Then I ask the Chair to count.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the way to determine whether one-fifth of those present second the demand is to take the vote of the other side.

The SPEAKER. No; the Chair can arrive at it by counting the Members.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes; and the way to determine that is to count the other side.

The SPEAKER. No; the Chair suggests that it does not follow that all Members present would vote. It very frequently happens that Members do not rise.

Mr. DYER. We have just had a roll call, Mr. Speaker, on the point of no quorum, which showed how many Members were present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. What is the question before the House?

The SPEAKER. The question is whether one-fifth of the Members present rose to second the demand for the yeas and nays.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, but the Chair had previously counted within two or three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair had not completed the count. There was a roll call.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The roll call disclosed how many were present.

Mr. CANNON. I make the point of order that the point raised by the gentleman from Texas is dilatory. Nobody has any doubt about it. It is patent to the Chair; and it being dilatory, it seems to me that the Chair ought to proceed with the public business.

Mr. DYER. And further, Mr. Speaker, a call was just had on the point of no quorum, and the number who answered to their names on that roll call are known to the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he ought to count; it will take but a moment. [After counting.] Two hundred and thirty-one Members present. Not a sufficient number rising in support of the demand for the yeas and nays, the yeas and nays are refused. The doors will be opened. Is there objection to the approval of the Journal? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

RESIGNATION OF REPRESENTATIVE ALEXANDER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., December 13, 1919.

Hon. FREDERICK H. GILLETT,
Speaker House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: This is to inform you that I have tendered to the governor of Missouri my resignation as Representative in this Congress from the third Missouri district, to be effective on Monday, the 15th day of December, 1919.

I am, with great respect,
Cordially, yours, JOSHUA W. ALEXANDER.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 1199. An act to prohibit the purchase, sale, or possession for the purpose of sale of certain wild birds in the District of Columbia.

RATIFICATION OF CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the governor of North Dakota, announcing the ratification by the legislature of that State of the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending the right of suffrage to women.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The following leave of absence was granted:

To Mr. ROMJUE, for four days, on account of sickness.

To Mr. GALLIVAN, for five days, on account of important business.

To Mr. JONES of Texas, for one week, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. SUMNERS of Texas, for the balance of the week, on account of sickness in his family.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to express the sincere regret which I am sure is felt by all Members of the House on both sides at the resignation and departure from our midst of Judge ALEXANDER, of Missouri. [Applause.] I am sure we all realize that he will discharge the duties of the high office to which he has been called in a way that will reflect credit on himself and serve the best interests of his country. We wish him well in his new duties. [Applause.]

AMENDMENT TO THE ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the debate under the rule now before the House, the business which, except for that rule, would be in order to-day, shall be in order either to-day or to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman asking to transfer Monday to Tuesday?

Mr. MONDELL. I am asking that at the conclusion of the debate under the rule——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. You have not got through with that debate yet.

Mr. MONDELL. I realize that we have not, but I ask that at the conclusion of the debate, whether that be to-day or to-morrow, the business that would otherwise be in order shall be in order either to-day or to-morrow.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I want to find out just what the gentleman asks. If we get through the debate to-day is the fragment of to-day that is left what he refers to, or is it to-morrow?

Mr. MONDELL. I imagine that the business before the House will under the rule take the greater part of the day. I hope it will be disposed of to-day, in which event I should expect that suspension of the rules and unanimous-consent matters might be taken up to-morrow.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is what the gentleman is asking.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the debate, under the rule now pending before the House, on either to-day or to-morrow the business in order to-day shall be in order. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. MONDELL. And if we conclude debate to-day early enough to take up unanimous-consent matters for a short time, and if the time is so short that we can not get very far, that we shall have to-morrow also.

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, does not the gentleman think that he had better make his request for that calendar to be considered to-morrow? It is manifest that there will be no time to-day.

Mr. MONDELL. My request is that at the conclusion of the business under the rule, the Unanimous Consent Calendar and suspension matters shall be in order to-day and include to-morrow.

Mr. GARD. The gentleman makes it apply to a part of to-day.

Mr. MONDELL. If there shall be any time to-day.

Mr. GARD. It is manifest that there will be no time to-day, or, at least, a very small amount of time. Why does not the gentleman make the request for to-morrow?

Mr. MONDELL. Because if we dispose of the matters before the House I know of no reason why for the remainder of the day we should not go on to the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. BARKLEY. That does not require unanimous consent. That would follow anyway to-day.

Mr. MONDELL. Perhaps it would to-day, but my purpose is to ask unanimous consent that suspension matters may follow the debate under this rule and that it shall extend over to-morrow.

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Wyoming is assuming the fact that the rule brought in on Saturday has the right of way to-day?

Mr. MONDELL. I am.

Mr. BLANTON. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact——

Mr. MONDELL. That is not a matter that the gentleman should discuss with me, because it is not for me to decide.

Mr. BLANTON. If that should be decided by the Chair, the gentleman from Wyoming considers the resolution which at the end of four hours' debate calls for no vote and calls for no approval by the House and means nothing to the country to be of more importance than the proposed legislation now awaiting action on the calendar under the rules of the House. [Cries of "Regular order!"] Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas rose.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I do not yield, Mr. Speaker; I was recognized before the point of order.

The SPEAKER. Any Member of the House has a right to make a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, under the rules of the House to-day is designated as one of the legislative days for suspension of the rules and for the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will make his point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. The point of order I make is this: The resolution brought before the House on Saturday last by the Committee on Rules did not make it a continuing order, and while it is something which the Chair could recognize anyone to call up, yet the rules of the House make to-day a special legislative day, and I submit to the Chair that it is a matter which the Chair should consider as of more importance than the resolution which was brought in by the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has not yet stated any point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I submit to the Chair that the resolution is out of order, and that to-day should be devoted to the Calendar for Unanimous Consent under the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I call up the privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules, which was pending at the time the House adjourned on Saturday.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, on that I raise the question of consideration.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the question of consideration can not be raised on a report from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. BLANTON. It is a matter which the House can control.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the question of consideration can not be raised upon a report from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. BLANTON. The rule merely makes it in order to be called up.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I submit the gentleman from Texas is out of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay that appeal on the table.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman's appeal from the decision of the Chair is dilatory.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not wish to say that an appeal from the decision of the Chair is dilatory.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the appeal on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas appeals from the decision of the Chair that the question of consideration can not be raised upon a report from the Committee on Rules. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to lay that appeal on the table. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts to lay the appeal on the table.

The question was taken, and Mr. BLANTON demanded a division.

The House proceeded to divide.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, on this I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demands the yeas and nays. Those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Thirty-four Members have risen, not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused. The ayes have it, and the motion is agreed to.

So the motion to lay on the table the appeal from the decision of the Chair was agreed to.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I now call up the rule that was pending on Saturday at the time the House adjourned.

The SPEAKER. The question before the House is the resolution from the Committee on Rules. The gentleman from Kansas has yet 13 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CANTRILL] has 13 minutes remaining.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Kentucky to use the remainder of his time now.

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Speaker, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, this is the first time in the history of the House that the Committee on Rules has brought in for the consideration of this body a rule that provides for four hours political debate and for the consideration of a report which recommends no affirmative action by this body. The minority of this House has cooperated, and will cooperate, with the Committee on Rules for the consideration of every legislative measure that is brought in by that committee, but this rule provides for a filibuster against the legitimate business of this House. Last spring the Republican Party clamored for an extra session of Congress in order that you might consider reconstruction legislation. What reconstruction legislation has been considered? I call attention to the calendar which came into your office this morning. Looking at page 29 you will see a list of the House bills which have become laws, a list of the legislative achievements of the Republican Party in this House. Take from that list the appropriation bills, which were framed by a Democratic House and which were filibustered to death by the Republicans at the other end of the Capitol, and you have left nothing but bills providing for the payment of private claims and bills authorizing the construction of bridges across the streams of this country. Read it. In this history of your reconstruction measures we find H. R. 240, a bill to build a bridge across the Susquehanna River; H. R. 241, a Susquehanna River bridge; H. R. 242, a Susquehanna River bridge; H. R. 530, a St. Johns River bridge; H. R. 4630, a Sulphur River bridge; H. R. 5528, a Mississippi River bridge; H. R. 5648, a Rainy River bridge. Reconstruction measures! Then we have a Snake River bridge, a White River bridge, and a Red River bridge. Gentlemen of the House, it is quite evident that the Republicans, instead of having a program of reconstruction, have a program of bridge construction.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I can not at this time. Is it that they have nothing to do? No! Look at the calendar. Over 10,000 bills have been introduced, and among them are bills promoting the safety and prosperity of the people of America, bills on the immigration question and on the activities of the reds in this country. While boys of the American Legion are being shot down by reds in the streets of America and the Attorney General asks for legislation, you come here and ask for four hours of political debate in order that you may criticize the Army that fought for the safety of America! [Applause on the Democratic side.] On the calendar you have legislation providing relief for soldiers, asked for by the American Legion, and instead of the Committee on Rules bringing in a rule which would enable this Congress to consider that kind of legislation, you bring in this rule, which seeks to criticize them. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] says it is not so. He says this rule makes in order criticism of those who conducted the business of the Army and not the officers and soldiers in the field. Who conducted the business of the Army? No one but the officers of the Army—officers selected in a more democratic manner than the officers of any army in the history of the world.

They came from Republican homes; they came from Democratic homes. But they came in every instance from American homes, and reflected credit upon this country. The gentleman from Kansas says they do not criticize the men in the field. They do criticize the men in the field. You sent one of your subcommittees abroad—I think you sent nearly all of them abroad—and I am glad to see the members of this select committee, as a result of their trips, in better health to-day than I have ever seen them before during my service here. I like them. I am glad they had these trips. But when the gentleman from Kansas says you are not criticizing the men and officers in the field, I call attention to a statement issued by one member of the subcommittee which made an attempt to hold up Gen. Pershing as he was leaving France. They insisted that it was essential to this investigation that he be brought before them immediately. America will never forget the attempt you made to embarrass the commander of the American forces as he was about to leave France. He told you he would not appear. Then you said he treated you with contempt, and yet you have never had the nerve to come into this House and complain that Pershing had treated your committee with contempt. Possibly he ignored your committee because he knew he was sent for in bad faith, and the best proof of the bad faith lies in the fact that he has been in this country since September and to this hour you have never seen fit to call him before your committee. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Oh, I like the members of this committee. But, my friends, they do come high. I saw a statement the other day from the War Department that it cost the War Department more than $100,000 to gather the information asked for by this committee. In addition to this, the records of the Accounts Committee will show that up to this date they have paid bills of $61,000 from the contingent fund of the House, and the bills have not begun to come in. You plead for economy, and yet you fritter away the money of the taxpayers of this country in order to conduct these so-called investigations. And what is the result of your investigations? Look at this report. Have you read it? Nine thousand five hundred and fifty-three cases investigated by this committee.

It is a mere matter of judgment whether or not the officers who represent the War Department have wisely settled those cases. But of 9,553 cases only 8 are brought in question in this report—8 out of 9,553. What is said of these 8? Listen to it: "In all these cases, except the last two named, the salvage values were fixed by Government agents, which, in the opinion of the committee, were insufficient and unjust to the Government." That is, in the opinion of this committee—of this select committee. Then they go on to say, "In some of the cases cited they seemed to have been obviously tainted with fraud." The committee only says, "They seem to have been obviously tainted with fraud." Seem to who? To the members of this committee who were engaged in an effort to aid the Republican Party by criticizing the American Army. If they were obviously tainted with fraud, why not say so? Why say that they seem to have been? Reading this report, I say that the judgment of this committee "seems to have been obviously tainted" with politics and political prejudice. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No; I can not. But, my friends, this committee says that it seems to have been obviously tainted with fraud. Who was guilty of fraud? The contractors or the officers? If officers were, why not name them instead of making this unfair blanket charge against all of them. They go on and say "constructive fraud." They report to us that constructive fraud has occurred in contracts with the United States Government. There may have been actual fraud. Some company may have been, it is conceivable, guilty of fraud. An officer may have been guilty of fraud, but how in the name of high heaven there could be constructive fraud is more than I or any other man can ever understand. "Constructive fraud"——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, your party in this House has left undone those things which it ought to have done and has done those things which it ought not to have done, and there is no health in it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the other side on the leadership they have been following for the past several days. I know how some of them feel about it, but they are following that leadership notwithstanding their views of that leadership. They are put in this position, Mr. Speaker, that while they are claiming there is nothing to investigate relative to war expenditures, nothing to report, nothing subject to criticism in the conduct of the war by their administration, they engage in a perfectly disgraceful filibuster to prevent a debate upon and discussion of the matters that have been investigated. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. If there is nothing you gentlemen are afraid of, why do not you let the House of Representatives do business and proceed to a discussion of these matters? If you think there is no statement that can be made that will reflect discredit upon your administration, why do not you allow statements to be made and not permit roll call after roll call in order to prevent a presentation of the facts to the country? [Applause on the Republican side.] The country will get the facts, the roll calls notwithstanding; and I suggest to the gentlemen on the other side of the House who do not believe in and have no patience with this filibuster against the presentation of facts that they so announce and assert themselves against the filibustering methods which their side are pursuing.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Does the gentleman from Kentucky desire to use the balance of his time?

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, that there has been extravagance in expenditures during the war no sane man will deny. [Applause on the Republican side.] That there have been dishonest scoundrels in this country who have taken advantage of their Government during the war time and have filched money out of the Treasury no sane man will deny. And if your committee would come in here with some kind of proposed measure to put those infamous devils in the penitentiary you would find every Democrat on this side of the isle aiding and assisting you [cries of "Oh!" on the Republican side], but when, under the report of the committee, which means nothing but a waste of time, you seek to take up four hours of the time of this House in useless debate, and when at the end no affirmative action is asked for on behalf of the House, I say to the country it looks ridiculous.

You do not ask for any action on the part of the House. We have leadership here under the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] and the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK]. You have had some slight leadership here during the last few days, but since the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is not here, God knows where your leadership is now. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I do not blame you gentlemen who have written out your speeches in your offices and on last Saturday gave them to the press to have them published broadcast. I do not blame you for wanting to give a basis for the publication of those infamous documents. But you can not have them published until you speak them here on the floor and they get into the RECORD. And what I have been trying to do is to keep you from getting them where you can frank them out for political purposes from one side of this land to the other. Are you asking us to give you a chance to vote on something? No. After you have your four hours of debate, what becomes of the resolution? What becomes of the report? Will there be a vote? No. There is no question here for determination before this House. Why do you not bring into this House for consideration by this Congress some matter of reconstruction—legislation which the people of this country are now clamoring for and which you promised time and time again you would bring on the floor of the House?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CANTRILL] has two minutes remaining and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] ten.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Does the gentleman from Kentucky desire to use the remainder of his time?

Mr. CANTRILL. I have but two minutes remaining.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I do not insist on it, but there will be only one more speech on this side, and I desire to close. If the gentleman wants to use it at all, he must use it now.

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Speaker, just in conclusion in the minute I have left, in answer to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], I desire to say that it has been the attitude all the time of this side of the House that we are ready and willing as members of the Committee on Rules and as the membership on this side to cooperate with the majority in passing any constructive legislation for the welfare of the country. The membership in the minority on the Rules Committee voted against this rule, and I think justly voted against it. We have conducted no filibuster as the gentleman charges. The responsibility to maintain a quorum and transact the business of the country is on the majority side, and in the six or seven months that they have had control of this body they have shown to the country their absolute inability to fulfill their ante-election promises and to conduct the business of this House.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANTRILL. I have not the time.

We opposed the rule, and I hope that not only this side but that the patriotic Members and the business Members of the other side will vote against it. It fritters away a whole legislative day in idle discussion and idle talk. We are ready to vote with you for any affirmative action to help the business of the country, but I hope that the membership of this House will vote against this rule and put an end to the practice of the Rules Committee bringing in such foolish rules for consideration by this House. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] is recognized. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, "the galled jade doth wince"——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman speaks, I think we should have a quorum, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Again I repeat, "the galled jade doth wince."

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and one gentlemen are present; not a quorum.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas calls for a division.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask for tellers on that.

Tellers were ordered, and Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas and Mr. BLANTON took their places as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 102, noes 32.

So a call of the House was ordered.

The roll was called, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Alexander	Ferris	Lesher	Sabath
Andrews, Md.	Fess	McCulloch	Sanders, Ind.
Aswell	Gallivan	McKeown	Sanders, La.
Bacharach	Goodall	McLane	Sanders, N. Y.
Booher	Graham, Pa.	McLaughlin, Mich.	Schall
Bowers	Griffin	McLaughlin, Nebr.	Scully
Brand	Hamill	Madden	Sears
Britten	Hamilton	Mann, Ill.	Sims
Brooks, Pa.	Hardy, Colo.	Miller	Smith, Ill.
Brumbaugh	Harrison	Moore, Ohio	Smith, N. Y.
Burke	Heflin	Moore, Pa.	Steele
Cleary	Huddleston	Moore, Va.	Steenerson
Connally	Hudspeth	Mudd	Sullivan
Cooper	Hulings	Neely	Sumners, Tex.
Copley	Humphreys	Nicholls, S. C.	Tague
Costello	Husted	Nichols, Mich.	Taylor, Ark.
Davey	Hutchinson	Nolan	Thompson
Davis, Minn.	Igoe	O'Connor	Vare
Denison	Johnson, Ky.	Osborne	Venable
Dewalt	Johnston, N. Y.	Parker	Ward
Donovan	Jones, Tex.	Pell	Watson, Va.
Dooling	Kahn	Pou	Webster
Doremus	Kearns	Rainey, H. T.	Wheeler
Dunn	Kelley, Mich.	Riordan	Williams
Eagan	Kendall	Robinson, N. C.	Wilson, Ill.
Eagle	Kennedy, R. I.	Rodenberg	Wilson, La.
Edmonds	King	Romjue	Wise
Ellsworth	Kreider	Rowan	Wood, Ind.
Fairfield	Lehlbach	Rowe	Young, Tex.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LANGLEY). On this call 319 Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas moves that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demands a division.

The House proceeded to divide.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, on this I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demands the yeas and nays.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that that is dilatory.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order. As many as favor taking this vote by the yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Eleven gentleman have risen—not a sufficient number. The yeas and nays are refused. The ayes have it. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, this disgraceful filibuster is conducted by the Democratic minority of this House for the purpose of concealing from the country the incompetency and the fraud and the graft of the War Department during the conduct of the war. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Billions of dollars were taken from the people of this country by taxation and loans, from washerwomen and from the poor, that were turned over to such men as R. H. Long, of Massachusetts, a Democratic politician and a favorite with the War Department, who got more than a million dollars in clear graft, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] and those who are aiding him in this filibuster are attempting to conceal from the people of this country the facts out of which that graft grew.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I will not.

Mr. BLANTON. I did not think he would.

Mr. WELTY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kansas yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I do not yield. I do not yield to anybody. [Laughter.]

Mr. WELTY. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. This fraud has been perpetrated upon the American people during the war. They were not permitted to discuss it on this floor, in the press, from the platform, or anywhere. The lips of every man in this country were sealed. The Democratic Party controlled every avenue of publicity. Nothing was permitted to go to the country.

Now it has been disclosed. Volumes of testimony have been taken, and the country has the right to know what has been done. I submit a sample—a further sample—of the manner in which a Democratic politician, a favorite with the War Department, got some of the money that the washerwomen, the poor people of this country, gave to the Government to buy necessary material to supply the armies in the field. Instead of going to the armies in the field it went into the pocket or the bank account of R. H. Long, a Democratic politician of Massachusetts.

Mr. WELTY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I do not yield.

Mr. WELTY. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that is dilatory.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think the point is dilatory. The Chair thinks that the point of no quorum can not be held as dilatory.

Mr. LONGWORTH. No public business has elapsed since a quorum was disclosed, except part of a speech, but it is not to be regarded as public business under the rules of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that where it is clear that there is no quorum present it can not be dilatory.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman has the right to make the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and seventy-nine Members are present—not a quorum.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas moves a call of the House. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a division.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demands a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 109, noes 6.

So a call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Alexander	Fairfield	Johnston, N. Y.	Mudd
Aswell	Ferris	Jones, Tex.	Neely
Bacharach	Fess	Kahn	Nicholls, S. C.
Booher	Flood	Kearns	Nichols, Mich.
Bowers	Gallivan	Kelley, Mich.	Nolan
Brand	Glynn	Kendall	O'Connor
Britten	Good	Kennedy, Iowa	Osborne
Brooks, Pa.	Goodall	Kennedy, R. I.	Pell
Burke	Graham, Pa.	King	Pou
Connally	Griffin	Kreider	Rainey, H. T.
Cooper	Hamill	Lehlbach	Randall, Calif.
Costello	Hamilton	Lesher	Riordan
Davey	Hardy, Colo.	McCulloch	Robinson, N. C.
Davis, Minn.	Hayden	McKenzie	Romjue
Dempsey	Heflin	McKeown	Rowan
Denison	Hoch	McLane	Rowe
Dewalt	Hudspeth	McLaughlin, Mich.	Sabath
Donovan	Hulings	Madden	Sanders, Ind.
Dooling	Humphreys	Mason	Sanders, La.
Dunn	Husted	Miller	Schall
Eagan	Hutchinson	Moore, Ohio	Scully
Eagle	Igoe	Moore, Pa.	Small
Edmonds	James	Moore, Va.	Smith, N. Y.
Ellsworth	Johnson, Ky.	Mott	Steele
Steenerson	Taylor, Ark.	Venable	Wilson, La.
Sullivan	Taylor, Colo.	Watson, Va.	Wise
Sumners, Tex.	Thompson	Weaver	Young, Tex.
Tague	Vare	Wheeler

The SPEAKER. On this call 321 members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas moves to dispense with further proceedings under the call. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas has six minutes remaining.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, during the six minutes remaining I want to call attention to where some of the money went that the coal miners, the blacksmiths, the farmers, the washerwomen and others paid into the Treasury of the United States for the conduct of the war.

Here is where some of it went. Mr. R. H. Long, of Massachusetts, had a contract for 10,000 pack saddles. This contract was made on May 11, 1918. Nothing was done. The amount of the contract was $455,000; amount canceled for the same.

Long received for canceling the contract $167,281.56.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the resolution.

Mr. BLANTON. A point of order, Mr. Speaker. I submit that the gentleman from Kansas is merely repeating the remarks he made last Saturday.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a division.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demands a division.

Mr. CANTRILL. On the adoption of the resolution I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 177, nays 125, answered "present" 2, not voting 129, as follows:

YEAS—177.

Ackerman	Freeman	Luhring	Shreve
Anderson	French	McArthur	Siegel
Andrews, Md.	Fuller, Ill.	McFadden	Sinclair
Andrews, Nebr.	Garland	McKinley	Sinnott
Anthony	Gould	McLaughlin, Mich.	Slemp
Baer	Graham, Ill.	McPherson	Smith, Ill.
Barbour	Green, Iowa	MacCrate	Smith, Mich.
Begg	Greene, Mass.	MacGregor	Snell
Benham	Greene, Vt.	Magee	Stephens, Ohio
Bland, Ind.	Griest	Mann, Ill.	Stiness
Boies	Hadley	Mapes	Strong, Kans.
Brooks, Ill.	Harreld	Mason	Strong, Pa.
Browne	Haskell	Merritt	Summers, Wash.
Browning	Haugen	Michener	Sweet
Burdick	Hawley	Monahan, Wis.	Swope
Burroughs	Hays	Mondell	Taylor, Tenn.
Campbell, Kans.	Hernandez	Moores, Ind.	Temple
Cannon	Hersey	Morgan	Tilson
Chindblom	Hickey	Murphy	Timberlake
Christopherson	Hicks	Nelson, Wis.	Tincher
Classon	Hill	Newton, Minn.	Tinkham
Cole	Houghton	Newton, Mo.	Towner
Copley	Hull, Iowa	Ogden	Treadway
Crago	Ireland	Paige	Vaile
Cramton	James	Parker	Vestal
Crowther	Jefferis	Peters	Voigt
Currie, Mich.	Johnson, S. Dak.	Platt	Volstead
Curry, Calif.	Johnson, Wash.	Porter	Walsh
Dale	Jones, Pa.	Purnell	Walters
Dallinger	Juul	Radcliffe	Ward
Darrow	Keller	Ramsey	Wason
Davis, Minn.	Kelly, Pa.	Randall, Wis.	Watson, Pa.
Dickinson, Iowa	Kiess	Reavis	Webster
Dowell	Kinkaid	Reber	White, Kans.
Dyer	Kleczka	Reed, N. Y.	White, Me.
Echols	Knutson	Reed, W. Va.	Williams
Elliott	Kraus	Ricketts	Wilson, Ill.
Elston	LaGuardia	Riddick	Winslow
Emerson	Lampert	Robsion, Ky.	Wood, Ind.
Esch	Langley	Rodenberg	Yates
Evans, Nebr.	Layton	Rogers	Young, N. Dak.
Focht	Little	Rose	Zihlman
Fordney	Longworth	Sanford
Foster	Luce	Scott
Frear	Lufkin	Sells

NAYS—125.

Almon	Box	Carss	Dickinson, Mo.
Ashbrook	Briggs	Carter	Dominick
Babka	Brinson	Casey	Doremus
Bankhead	Buchanan	Clark, Fla.	Doughton
Barkley	Byrnes, S. C.	Clark, Mo.	Drane
Bee	Byrns, Tenn.	Cleary	Dupré
Bell	Campbell, Pa.	Coady	Evans, Mont.
Benson	Candler	Collier	Evans, Nev.
Bland, Mo.	Cantrill	Crisp	Fields
Bland, Va.	Caraway	Cullen	Flood
Blanton	Carew	Davis, Tenn.	Gallagher

Gandy	Lea, Calif.	Oldfield	Stedman
Ganly	Lee, Ga.	Oliver	Stephens, Miss.
Gard	Linthicum	Olney	Stevenson
Garner	Lonergan	Overstreet	Stoll
Garrett	McAndrews	Padgett	Thomas
Godwin, N. C.	McClintic	Park	Tillman
Goodwin, Ark.	McDuffie	Parrish	Upshaw
Hardy, Tex.	McGlennon	Phelan	Vinson
Harrison	McKinley	Quin	Watkins
Hersman	Maher	Rainey, Ala.	Weaver
Holland	Major	Rainey, J. W.	Welling
Howard	Mann, S. C.	Raker	Welty
Huddleston	Mansfield	Rayburn	Whaley
Hull, Tenn.	Mays	Rouse	Wilson, La.
Jacoway	Mead	Rubey	Wilson, Pa.
Johnson, Miss.	Minahan, N. J.	Rucker	Wingo
Kincheloe	Montague	Saunders, Va.	Woods, Va.
Lanham	Moon	Sherwood	Wright
Lankford	Mooney	Sims
Larsen	Nelson, Mo.	Smithwick
Lazaro	O'Connell	Steagall

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—2.

Butler	Caldwell

NOT VOTING—129.

Alexander	Fisher	Kettner	Riordan
Aswell	Fuller, Mass.	King	Robinson, N. C.
Ayres	Gallivan	Kitchin	Romjue
Bacharach	Glynn	Kreider	Rowan
Black	Goldfogle	Lehlbach	Rowe
Blackmon	Good	Lesher	Sabath
Booher	Goodall	McCulloch	Sanders, Ind.
Bowers	Goodykoontz	McKenzie	Sanders, La.
Brand	Graham, Pa.	McKeown	Sanders, N. Y.
Britten	Griffin	McLane	Schall
Brooks, Pa.	Hamill	McLaughlin, Nebr.	Scully
Brumbaugh	Hamilton	Madden	Sears
Burke	Hardy, Colo.	Martin	Sisson
Connally	Hastings	Miller	Small
Cooper	Hayden	Moore, Ohio	Smith, Idaho
Costello	Heflin	Moore, Pa.	Smith, N. Y.
Davey	Hoch	Moore, Va.	Snyder
Dempsey	Hudspeth	Morin	Steele
Denison	Hulings	Mott	Steenerson
Dent	Humphreys	Mudd	Sullivan
Dewalt	Husted	Neely	Sumners, Tex.
Donovan	Hutchinson	Nicholls, S. C.	Tague
Dooling	Igoe	Nichols, Mich.	Taylor, Ark.
Dunbar	Johnson, Ky.	Nolan	Taylor, Colo.
Dunn	Johnston, N. Y.	O'Connor	Thompson
Eagan	Jones, Tex.	Osborne	Vare
Eagle	Kahn	Pell	Venable
Edmonds	Kearns	Pou	Watson, Va.
Ellsworth	Kelley, Mich.	Rainey, H. T.	Wheeler
Fairfield	Kendall	Ramseyer	Wise
Ferris	Kennedy, Iowa	Randall, Calif.	Woodyard
Fess	Kennedy, R. I.	Rhodes	Young, Tex.

So the resolution was adopted.

The following pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. FESS with Mr. PELL.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana with Mr. IGOE.

Mr. BOWERS with Mr. NEELY.

Mr. DENISON with Mr. BRINSON.

Mr. NOLAN with Mr. MCKEOWN.

Mr. BUTLER with Mr. STEELE.

Mr. OSBORNE with Mr. GALLIVAN.

Mr. MILLER with Mr. ROMJUE.

Mr. KAHN with Mr. DENT.

Mr. HULINGS with Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina.

Mr. GOOD with Mr. SEARS.

Mr. MADDEN with Mr. HEFLIN.

Mr. ROWE with Mr. KETTNER.

Mr. KREIDER with Mr. JOHNSTON of New York.

Mr. COSTELLO with Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas.

Mr. RAMSEYER with Mr. MCLANE.

Mr. LEHLBACH with Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky.

Mr. DEMPSEY with Mr. TAGUE.

Mr. FAIRFIELD with Mr. BOOHER.

Mr. NICHOLS of Michigan with Mr. GRIFFIN.

Mr. GOODALL with Mr. SCULLY.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ with Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana.

Mr. WHEELER with Mr. BRUMBAUGH.

Mr. MCCULLOCH with Mr. JACOWAY.

Mr. MOTT with Mr. GOLDFOGLE.

Mr. MUDD with Mr. FERRIS.

Mr. THOMPSON with Mr. AYRES.

Mr. RAMSEY with Mr. EAGLE.

Mr. BACHARACH with Mr. YOUNG of Texas.

Mr. RHODES with Mr. EAGAN.

Mr. BRITTEN with Mr. WISE.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan with Mr. MOORE of Virginia.

Mr. KENDALL with Mr. MARTIN.

Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island with Mr. LESHER.

Mr. SANDERS of New York with Mr. DOOLING.

Mr. WOODYARD with Mr. BRAND.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania with Mr. WATSON of Virginia.

Mr. SCHALL with Mr. DONOVAN.

Mr. BURKE with Mr. VENABLE.

Mr. COOPER with Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado.

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa with Mr. KITCHIN.

Mr. KING with Mr. JONES of Texas.

Mr. KEARNS with Mr. DAVEY.

Mr. HUSTED with Mr. POU.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho with Mr. DEWALT.

Mr. SNYDER with Mr. CONNALLY.

Mr. HUTCHINSON with Mr. O'CONNOR.

Mr. ELLSWORTH with Mr. SMALL.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania with Mr. SABATH.

Mr. MCKENZIE with Mr. HUMPHREYS.

Mr. DUNBAR with Mr. SUMNERS of Texas.

Mr. HARDY of Colorado with Mr. ROBINSON of North Carolina.

Mr. DUNN with Mr. SULLIVAN.

Mr. GLYNN with Mr. SISSON.

Mr. EDMONDS with Mr. SMITH of New York.

Mr. HAMILTON with Mr. ROWAN.

Mr. STEENERSON with Mr. BLACKMON.

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Nebraska with Mr. HUDSPETH.

Mr. HILL with Mr. RIORDAN.

Mr. HOCH with Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY.

Mr. MOORE of Ohio with Mr. HASTINGS.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania with Mr. HAMILL.

Mr. VARE with Mr. ASWELL.

On this vote:

Mr. FULLER of Massachusetts (for) with Mr. CALDWELL (against).

Mr. MORIN (for) with Mr. FISHER (against).

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I have a general pair with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. STEELE. I feel that I ought to withdraw my vote of "aye" and answer "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I regret, but I must object.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the House takes up the House Report 487, which the Clerk will report, together with the views of the minority.

The Clerk read as follows:

Report No. 487, on the act of March 2, 1919, commonly known as the Dent Act.

The act of March 2, 1919, commonly known as the Dent Act, provided, in part, as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to adjust, pay, or discharge any agreement, express or implied, upon a fair and equitable basis that has been entered into, in good faith, during the present emergency and prior to November 12, 1918, by any officer or agent acting under his authority, direction, or instruction, or that of the President, with any person, firm, or corporation for the acquisition of lands, or the use thereof, or for damages resulting from notice by the Government of its intention to acquire or use said lands, or for the production, manufacture, sale, acquisition, or control of equipment, materials or supplies, or for services, or for facilities, or other purposes connected with the prosecution of the war, when such agreement has been performed in whole or in part, or expenditures have been made or obligations incurred upon the faith of the same by any such person, firm, or corporation prior to November 12, 1918, and such agreement has not been executed in the manner prescribed by law: Provided, That in no case shall any award, either by the Secretary of War or the Court of Claims, include prospective or possible profits on any part of the contract beyond the goods and supplies delivered to and accepted by the United States and a reasonable remuneration for expenditures and obligations or liabilities necessarily incurred in performing or preparing to perform said contract or order: Provided further, That this act shall not authorize payment to be made of any claim presented before June 30, 1919: And provided further, That the Secretary of War shall report to Congress at the beginning of its next session following June 30, 1919, a detailed statement showing the nature, terms, and conditions of every such agreement and the payment or adjustment thereof: And provided further, That no settlement of any claim arising under any such agreement shall bar the United States Government, through any of its duly authorized agencies or any committee of Congress hereafter duly appointed, from the right of review of such settlement, nor the right of recovery of any money paid by the Government to any party under any settlement entered into or payment made under the provisions of this act if the Government has been defrauded, and the right of recovery in all such cases shall exist against the executors, administrators, heirs, successors, and assigns, of any party or parties: And provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to relieve any officer or any agent of the United States from criminal prosecution under the provisions of any statute of the United States for any fraud or criminal conduct."

By virtue of the provisions of this act, on December 1, at the convening of Congress, the Secretary of War filed his report in the House of Representatives, which report was thereupon referred to the Select Committee on Expenditures in the War Department. The report is very voluminous, consisting of the report proper and 3 large volumes and 11 file cases of exhibits.

From time to time Subcommittee No. 5 on Ordnance has had under consideration certain settlements made by the various claims boards with claimants under the above-cited act.

This investigation, as shown by the hearings of said subcommittee, has taken a wide range and has been incidental to its general investigation of war-ordnance expenditures. It has included an investigation of the rules that have been formulated by the War Department for the settlement of such claims and the machinery that has been devised. Because of the great expense, time, and labor incident to a complete examination of all of said claims, the subcommittee has been able to go into only a few of the great mass of claims that have been adjusted; all this is incorporated in about 500 printed pages of the committee hearings and is too voluminous to be even briefed in this report. According to the report of the Secretary of War, 4,668 claims have already been adjusted, 2,185 claims are pending, and 2,700 other claims are under consideration as to their legal standing.

The subcommittee, among other matters, has made a somewhat extensive investigation of the following settlements of war claims and contracts, to wit: American Can Co., contract for hard-bread cans; Stein-Burn Camp & Field Equipment Co., contract for fireless cookers, cooks' chests, and bread boxes; Henry Moss & Co., contract for branding irons; Briar Hill Steel Co., contract for corrugated-steel roofing; National Enameling & Stamping Co., contracts for boilers and kettles; Standard Steel Car Co., contract for nine hundred and sixty-four 240-millimeter howitzer carriages; Jones & Laughlin Co., contract for by-product coke ovens. In addition to this, the subcommittee has investigated the settlement with the United Metals Selling Co. on copper, which was a settlement not made under the act of March 2, 1919.

In all these cases except the last two named salvage values were fixed by Government agents and Army officers on special facilities furnished by the Government, sometimes buildings and sometimes machinery and equipment, which were, in the opinion of the committee, insufficient and unjust to the Government. In some of the cases cited they seem to have been obviously tainted with fraud. Part of the blame for this condition is due to the rules adopted for the settlement of such claims and partly due to the laxness and inefficiency of the Government representatives. In the last case cited, that of the United Metals Selling Co., immense profits were made by the producers of copper by virtue of a combination of the low-priced copper producers, which combination was aided and encouraged by the Government, although in violation of the law of the land.

In some of the cases cited the committee is of the opinion that constructive if not actual fraud occurred, vitiating the settlements. The committee is of the opinion that millions of dollars are involved in these settlements which the Government might have a right to recover if a proper review of such settlements were made.

The act of March 2, heretofore cited, has never been tested in the courts. It is manifest, however, that Congress had in consideration when the act was passed the probability, or at least possibility, that some board or body might desire to review them. The Select Committee on Expenditures has been created since the passage of that act, but there remains some doubt whether it is such a reviewing "committee of Congress" as is intended by the language of such act. If it is, it has no right to bring action to recover the moneys now owing the Government on said settlements, if any. That duty must necessarily devolve upon the War Department, which, in conjunction with the Department of Justice, can institute the proper proceedings.

In view of the filing of the aforesaid report by the Secretary of War and the evident intent of Congress to reserve to itself the right to review such settlements, this committee is of the opinion that the Congress should have promptly such facts as have been developed by this committee, together with its observations thereon, so that such action may be thereafter taken by Congress or by the proper department of the Government as may seem proper.

—

MINORITY VIEWS.

On November 11, 1919, House resolution 381 was reported by the majority of the Select Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, being accompanied by Report No. 463. The minority are informed that this resolution has been abandoned and that no effort is to be made to secure its consideration by the House, but, instead, the majority have determined simply to make a report and no action upon same by the House is to be requested.

This report is in the main a restatement of the majority views expressed in Report No. 463, and the minority views as expressed in part 2 of that report constitute the minority views upon this. The imputations of fraud against responsible and respectable business men and faithful officials of the War Department are not justified by the evidence taken before the committee, and it is gravely to be regretted that the majority have again determined to cast such sinister and unjust reflections in an official report.

As was pointed out in the minority views on House resolution 381, the matter of salvage values presents a question upon which the judgment of men will necessarily differ, and it must be remembered that in accordance with the policy announced to Congress while the Dent Act was being considered, and which policy was eminently sound and proper, settlements were expedited as rapidly as possible consistent with the proper protection of the Government's interests. The business world, those who had large sums of capital invested for the purpose of filling contracts made while the war was in progress, sought, and had a right to seek, prompt adjustments.

In hundreds of cases the character of the institutions and factories at which these contracts had been filled had been almost completely changed by reason of their war contracts. Commercial production had been abandoned and every energy and facility had been bent to supplying the war needs of the Republic. The livelihood of unnumbered thousands of laboring men was involved. It was of supremest importance to the public weal that these institutions might return to a peace basis and again enter commercial production, giving employment to labor and supplying the peace needs of the country at the earliest possible moment. All these elements must be taken into consideration in connection with these settlements, and it should be remembered that many of them were made in the winter and spring and that conditions have since changed. In fairness, these settlements must be judged as of the time they were made and not in the light of subsequent developments which it was not possible to forecast with accuracy; nor may it be reasonably expected that uniformity and exactitude has been attained in a task involving an almost infinite variety of commodities and calling for a wide range of knowledge and skill in estimating the values involved.

FINIS J. GARRETT.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, under the rule I desire to yield to my colleague from Nebraska [Mr. JEFFERIS] one hour.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield to me for a moment to make a request for unanimous consent?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes; I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the debate provided for by the rule, on to-morrow the business that would have been in order to-day, except for the business under the rule, shall be in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the debate under this rule the business which would have been in order to-day on the Unanimous Consent Calendar shall be in order to-morrow. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JEFFERIS. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, out in the central portion of the United States, where I have lived for some 25 years, no Republican, Democrat, or other citizen, no matter what his party might be, has up to this time ever opposed hearing a discussion of the truth concerning public officials in public life. [Applause.] I am sorry, indeed, that after I had become a Member of Congress I should have the experience of observing the minority party struggle against, fighting for a day and a half, to keep the majority party from discussing somewhat the truth as they have learned it from the investigation of one of the departments of the Government. If this Government is to continue, if the people are to be interested in the affairs of their Government, then necessarily the truth regarding the administration of the Government should be available to the people in order that they can take proper action for constructive statesmanship in the years to come. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The truth should hurt no honest man, it should hurt no political party, and I had thought when I came here and was honored by a position on this committee and heard the assertions from Members on the Democratic side, that there was a unanimous thought in this House that all matters pertaining to the conduct of the war should be investigated fairly, firmly, and with impartiality. With that idea in mind, although a Republican, I went upon this committee at the Speaker's appointment with the desire and purpose to so conduct myself as a part of the committee that no finger of suspicion could be directed against me or the charge truthfully made that I was conducting an investigation from a political standpoint. My whole object so far has been to do what was in my power, impartially and from a nonpartisan standpoint, to ascertain the truth regarding some of the expenditures that have been made of the people's money.

In doing that I had not thought that any party or any Member of this Congress could think that this committee was engaged in an investigation that would throw any aspersion or cast any suspicion of disloyalty or failure to perform duty upon the part of the men who wore the uniform of the United States and fought this country's battles so successfully for the rights of the world and the rights of this Nation. The people know what the men who put on the uniform did. We need no investigation to ascertain the part that they played in this war. They gave an account of their stewardship on the battle fields of France—at the Argonne Forest, at Chateau-Thierry, and at St. Mihiel. No one wants to investigate or to cast any suspicion on any of their acts, no one can fail to know the truth as to what they did. Theirs were the open acts of patriotic Americans, well performed. Likewise, no one doubts what the great body of Congress did during the war. This great patriotic body, made up of representatives of both political parties, under the Constitution of the United States, performed their part well and nobly. They appropriated vast sums of money in accordance with the powers granted them in the Constitution, and called upon the American people to produce that money in the form of taxes and loans. The people of the country stood behind the Congress in furnishing those vast sums of money for the purpose of carrying on the war. The people were behind the Congress and the people saw what Congress was doing and responded to it, and the people did their part. They raised those vast sums of money and turned them into the Treasury of the United States, into the administrative department, if you please, of our Government, with the expectation that the funds thus raised would be expended in a wise and conservative manner, that that money would be so expended that no one would ever question the right of the American people to know how and in what manner it was expended.

I am sorry that the Democratic Party in Congress, which for two days has made an unsuccessful effort under the leadership of the gentleman from the great State of Texas, should attempt to keep the truth from being known in this House and to keep it from being known throughout the country. If that is to be the policy of the old Democratic Party, then it must have reached the place when it fears to have the searchlight of truth spread upon the acts of the administrative departments of the Government, and, indeed, something must be there of which Democratic Members are afraid. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The American people now know that they are confronted with high taxes and high prices. That is the condition that confronts them. It is not a theory. Whence did it come in this great land of plenty? Can you say that Congress is to blame, or do you say that the conduct of the War Department and of the administrative departments during that war are the ones to whom we can point the finger and raise the question of incompetency? Let us see what was done. As an introduction to these war expenditures we find that in August, 1916, Congress enacted a law which provided for a Council of National Defense and a commission of seven members. From August, 1916, on to December of that year we hear nothing of them, and the country was unprepared. In December, 1916, we hear of the first meeting of this Council of National Defense, six Cabinet members, and the seven commissioners. What followed? We see then as they go on to February 13, 1917, with a council of 13 men meeting, and what did they do? What was the great act that they performed at that time? Do the American people know?

Did their act at that time have anything to do with or has it had anything to do with the present conditions that confront the American people. It is an honest question, and it is a question open for discussion. They enacted a resolution unanimously that the Secretary of War should call a meeting of all of the men of the different lines of industry of the United States, and that they should be asked to organize themselves so that they could deal with the Government through a committee of one or not to exceed three men. What did that indicate? What was that to the American people? It meant that the Sherman antitrust law and every other act that the Congress in its wisdom in years passed had enacted to preserve competition among the people was to be abrogated and trampled under foot by the Council of National Defense and the advisory commission, the members of the Cabinet of the present administration. Those meetings were held. Those meetings gave opportunity for all of the great lines of industry and of labor—because they were there on this commission—to start in a propaganda or an effort for the lines of business to raise prices and for labor to raise wages, in order that they might advance to some extent their own personal fortunes. What next followed? On the 12th of April, 1917, or six days after war was declared, the Secretary of War looked over the statute books of the United States and saw section 3907 of the statutes, which had been enacted by the Congress for the purpose of having competitive bidding, after advertising, for the supplies necessary to the support of and to be utilized by the War Department, and what did he do with that statute? He declared that an emergency existed, and that hereafter no advertising was necessary. By that time, by the 12th of April, 1917, the result was this: All of the lines of industry had been asked to organize that they might be really in a combination, and labor was observing the same proposition.

Mr. MOONEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JEFFERIS. No; I can not, because it might be another filibuster.

Mr. MOONEY. I wanted to ask the gentleman whether he agreed with the Secretary of War that an emergency did exist?

Mr. JEFFERIS. If it did, it was the creation of the administration in doing nothing from August, 1916, even after Congress had enacted a law that enabled the administration to take some steps to preserve and get this country into a position to defend itself, and to make its power and influence felt throughout the world. A condition then had come about whereby the business interests and labor were working together through the commission and the Council of National Defense, and were ready to climb, first one and then another, up the pole of high prices for every commodity that was necessary for the use of the Government. The War Department then began to buy goods. It bought this, that, and the other all over the country. The prices necessarily went up, and every individual, other than the United States, was of necessity compelled to pay the same high prices. Now, if the department had only bought that which was necessary, if it had only bought those things which were reasonably necessary for the support of the Army and to carry on the war, if it had purchased with some judgment on that line, why, no one could criticize them for having gone into the market to purchase what was necessary. But how did the War Department act? What does the evidence show? The Secretary of War was the head. The President was above him; Congress had appropriated money, it was in the Treasury, and it was a trust which devolved upon the Secretary of War to expend it. It was his duty and responsibility to see that he had an organization that would expend the people's funds with care and with fidelity in the public interest. What does Gen. Burr say as to the manner and method of conducting business down in the War Department? Take his testimony, found on page 1224 of the hearings. He said, in answer to a question by myself:

And yet, as I understand you, General, really all of the different departments of the War Department were issuing these orders for supplies, etc.

Gen. BURR. I think that is generally known. I think it is a matter of common knowledge that there were many people in Washington in the various bureaus who were purchasing commodities for the Government and who were issuing orders in the name of the Government. Just how much authorization they had I do not know, but I must assume, however, they were down there in Government offices, and the citizen who wanted to do business with the Government came in there and some one sent him to this military man of this division, who was installed in a Government office and who was sitting there with the knowledge of everybody and who was presumed to do business, and I must assume that that citizen thought that man was authorized to do business with him. You would naturally suppose so. That is the way the most of the work was done. And the legal question comes up, was that particular captain or lieutenant authorized by the President or the Secretary of War to obligate the Government for that particular thing? The question never would, perhaps, come up if the war had not ended practically or actually on November 11. If the war had gone on for three or four months none of these questions would have come up; they would have all been settled.

Yes; all of that sort of business settled without the knowledge of Congress, without the knowledge of the public as to how and in what manner it had been conducted. But the situation got so strong afterwards, when the Comptroller of the Currency held that the war orders were illegal and great sums of money had been expended in that way, that it was necessary to secure through Congress the passage of a law known as the Dent Act, of March 2, 1919, in the hopes of settling up the whole mess, which was nothing more than a mess of confusion. But go on and read some more of the general's description:

Gen. BURR. Yes; I will give you a case that now came up. As I said a while ago, I was fortunately out of the country, but it came to my knowledge along about the 1st of January. Some one was sent to me, and his story was something like this: That he was called in along in the early part of 1918 and told that the Government needed certain munitions, and that he had a factory, and they wanted him to enlarge that factory and get busy, and I think arrangements were made by which he was to get a credit of half a million dollars, or something like that, to help him finance this thing. He went down to one of these offices, went in there, and he saw some one—it may have been a man wearing soldier straps, it may have been a civilian—as I say, who was sitting behind a roll-top desk and who had all the air of authority, and they made these negotiations, and he said, "Now, this is urgent. The success of the war depends upon your getting this plant in operation. Get busy." The poor man went down to Tennessee and put capital into this plant and also got his war credit. Along about August or September they decided they wanted changes made in the plant, and these changes necessitated a change in the contract, and so he was called to Washington. He had not been to Washington in the meantime. The agents of the Government had been down there looking after the business, and he was called to Washington to negotiate for these additional facilities, and he went in and saw the same man; he arranged for the additional facilities and the basis on which they were to be provided; and the fellow said he was told to get back and "get busy right away"; and he got on the first train and went back and started in again. The man in Washington turned around and started to look up these supplemental agreements, and he got along to a certain point, and he wanted to refer to the original agreement, and there was not a shadow of writing under the original agreements. They had forgotten to write out the contract, and of course they had to get the original agreement drawn up before they could make up the supplemental agreement. In the meantime the armistice came along and the comptroller's decision that all of these things were no good, and the occasion of the gentleman's visit to me was that he was threatened with bankruptcy. His bankers would not carry him any more. There is no question in my mind that that gentleman had a legitimate claim against the Government, and the only thing which bothered us was what were the nature of the terms and conditions of that agreement and how are you going to get at it.

Thus it was with the business of the country with these uncertain conditions. With those conditions of contracts unknown because of some one failing to exercise that supervision over his office, who would designate the men who would make purchases within some limitation and with some known precision. Gen. Burr goes on and says:

I think that the positions which the men occupied in general indicated whether or not they were authorized to enter into agreements or whether law and custom would give certain officers of the Government the authority to enter into the agreement for the necessary purposes for that department, bureau, or office. As the work increased these people appointed contracting officers to enter into the agreements for them. The contracting officers very probably attempted to delegate the authority to others. I do not know what the written evidence of such appointments and such authority may be, but there are unquestionably many of them in existence.

Then, again, take such an agency as the War Industries Board. I doubt very much if there is any direct authorization in the terms for some of those people to make contracts on behalf of the Government, and, as a matter of fact, they did not make contracts. They made only these implied agreements, which the comptroller says are not contracts. But I know the opinion that the good faith on the part of the Government will require our living up to a great many of them.

We see that confusion reigned there to begin with. How did it function as to quantity? Let us take, for instance, the subject of leather, and let us see what occurred and how the War Department, under the wise management of Mr. Baker, handled the leather situation of this country. Let us take the testimony as given by Col. Goetz:

Mr. GRAHAM. Well, did you have the passing upon them, so that you could say whether requisitions should be filed or the order issued?

You know, they had a requirements division and then they had a procurements division, and Col. Goetz was on the procurements division. He said:

Well, we had no such authority, but sometimes we exercised it.

Mr. GRAHAM. Well, what about requisitions for leather goods that came in there? Did you issue purchase orders for all of them?

Col. GOETZ. No, sir.

Mr. GRAHAM. Were they excessive, in your judgment?

Col. GOETZ. Very excessive. We had requisitions for leather goods that would have required in their manufacture 300,000 more hides than the entire take-off in the United States for one year.

It goes on:

Mr. GRAHAM. What did you do with those requisitions when they came in there?

Col. GOETZ. Well, after a great deal of trouble we held them up. For instance, we had a requisition for $21,000,000 worth of ambulance-harness parts and we purchased about 10 per cent or 15 per cent of that.

Think of it. Think of a department of the Government—the War Department—in time of war, with 110,000,000 people in this country wearing leather shoes, going so far beyond the needs of the Army. Is it possible that any man of vision controlling the affairs of Government, as was the Secretary of War, would permit all the leather of this country to be purchased for the purposes of the Army to the exclusion of the people of the Nation?

What further follows? We asked him:

Mr. GRAHAM. In other words, what per cent of the hides of the country was the Army using for its contracts?

Col. GOETZ. Well, I should judge 75 per cent.

Again he was asked:

Mr. JEFFERIS. If you had gotten real active, as the procuring part of the Government in this respect, it would have taken all the hides in the United States and 300,000 more to fill these orders received from the requirements branch, would it?

Col. GOETZ. Yes.

* * * * * * *

Mr. JEFFERIS. What is an aperajo?

Col. GOETZ. That is a harness that is used on a mule that carries a pack.

Mr. JEFFERIS. Am I right, Colonel, that these orders for the procurement of these lines of harness that you have mentioned here and similar things would take 75 per cent of the hides of the United States?

Col. GOETZ. Taken in connection with shoes for the requirements of the Army.

Mr. JEFFERIS. Do you know how many saddles, in a general way, were ordered?

Col. GOETZ. About 900,000 McClellan saddles.

Mr. JEFFERIS. Any other kind?

Col. GOETZ. Well, there were some stock saddles, I think about 45,000 all told—or Wild West saddles—you had better use that term.

Mr. JEFFERIS. Any Artillery saddles?

Col. GOETZ. Well, the McClellan saddle is used by the Artillery.

Mr. JEFFERIS. You would think about 945,000 saddles, altogether?

Col. GOETZ. About that amount.

Mr. JEFFERIS. Do you know about what amount of harness was actually ordered or contracted for, all told?

Col. GOETZ. All told, I estimate about 1,000,000 sets.

Mr. JEFFERIS. All kinds of harness?

Col. GOETZ. Yes, sir.

Mr. JEFFERIS. That would be sets of harness as distinguished from what bridles, together with these saddles, or anything of that kind?

Col. GOETZ. Single sets. There were 500,000 sets of H. T. G. harness authorized.

Now, a million sets of harness, 945,000 saddles. How many horses were there in the United States Army to use 945,000 saddles and a million sets of harness? Why require $21,000,000 worth of ambulance harness? They must have expected the whole of the American forces to be wiped out, and they would have to haul them all to the hospitals. Well, we will see——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JEFFERIS. I have not the time.

Mr. KNUTSON. How many horses were there?

Mr. JEFFERIS. Let us see what Col. Goetz says:

Col. GOETZ. I have a statement here somewhere. In the United States and France they had 104,000 Cavalry horses, 146,000 Artillery horses, 123,000 draft mules, 18,000 pack mules. That is the total number of animals in the United States and France.

And yet, ordering 945,000 saddles, ordering a million sets of harness for the equipment of the Army, and the American people all over this country were being importuned by all patriotic Americans to put their money up for bonds and put their money up for taxes, that it might be turned over to the War Department for the expenditure. What for? For the support of the Army and the support of our soldier boys.

Mr. BABKA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JEFFERIS. I decline.

Mr. BABKA. You have an hour.

Mr. JEFFERIS. I was not in this House during the war. It happens that I was one of those out among the people, and it happened that as the calls came for money and the calls came for men we put forth every effort to see that all of the quotas and the demands of the Government, as made from time to time, were met by the patriotic people. I remember one day, down at one of the storage houses of the city, of one of the express companies, arguing to a crowd of men during the noon hour, when they had about 15 minutes, in the hope that we could get them to subscribe for bonds for the support of the war, and after we had talked to them and we had gone out among them and asked them to subscribe and to take at least one bond, we came up against an old colored man that was sitting there eating his dinner, with a little bit of coffee and some rye bread, and we asked him if he would not take at least a $50 bond. His answer was, "I know better how to spend my money than I believe they do down at Washington." He says, "What do they care about my $50 down there? They will just spend it and will not get anything for it, anyhow." After we had talked with him for a long time the old man finally said that he would take a $50 bond, and he did, and he contributed out of his wages for weeks to pay for it.

And yet with such expenditures as these, made by the War Department for saddles and harness, how could anyone go back to that city and really look that colored man in the face and say to him that he did not really tell the truth when we undertook to sell him the bonds? [Applause.]

Saddles! What was the result of this? Why are shoes high? Why is everything high in this country? Because the Government bought; it fixed these prices. The War Industries Board went and fixed the prices. How did they do that? Did they take the average cost of the different articles? Not at all. They undertook to stimulate production, so they say, and they investigated to find out the cost of production in the different lines of industry, but they would say, "Here is a man whose cost of production is high; here is a man or an institution where the cost of production is low." How did they deal with them? They dealt with them simply as one organization, so to speak, just in accordance with the program enunciated on February 13, 1917, and the result was that the Government never was in a position to avail itself of the opportunity of purchasing commodities from those institutions that produced them at a low cost, but everything was purchased on the theory of stimulating production, so that the firms or the institutions that produced commodities at a high cost were the ones that determined the price at which the products were sold to the Government. And when they were sold to the Government are you surprised that the result was that the people sitting around in their homes, sitting beside their own firesides at night, found that they were paying for everything that they bought for the support of their families, for their clothing and everything that was necessary, at rates that were fixed at the highest cost of production in the various lines, through governmental action, rather than having the benefit of any low cost from any low producer?

The result is that leather footwear—the cost of leather and shoes and everything made of leather—is high. Why would it not be high under these conditions? The Government had 1,800,000 pounds of black harness leather on hand when the war was over. Black harness leather can not be utilized for the making of shoes. The Government had all these saddles and all this harness on hand and 1,800,000 pounds of black harness leather stored away. When asked whether or not it would be possible to take that harness leather and use it for the making of shoes, so that the American people might have some benefit of it, even at this time, we are told by Col. Goetz, who is a leather manufacturer from West Virginia and has given his entire life to that business, that it is altogether impossible to take harness leather that has been prepared for the making of harness and so transform it that it may be utilized for the making of shoes. So the American people, it seems to me, in so far as shoes are concerned, have the right to know something of the truth regarding the leather conditions of this country, to the end that they can look the future fairly in the face and know when they pay the high prices for shoes, to some extent at least, who is responsible, what department of the Government is responsible for the condition that confronts them. It is for that reason, it seems to me, that this discussion, even though it may not call for anything in the way of affirmative action, should be had, in order that the people may know something of these things, and in order that this Congress should know it, so that the matter might thereby be understood.

Let us take up something else. When it came before Congress that a lot of these agreements had been entered into by the War Department, Congress wanted to do the just and fair thing, I take it, and Congress enacted the Dent law. I am not here to complain about that, because I believe that a man who honestly and in good faith went up and made an arrangement in good faith with somebody who would rather incur the dangers of getting behind a roller-top desk than going to France—an individual who got a contract from some one up there and utilized his plant and energy in good faith for that purpose would certainly be treated fairly by the Government. But I do believe that when Congress enacted the Dent Act, in March, 1919, it was the purpose of this body and it was the belief of this body that all of those contracts would be brought to a speedy termination and that they would be settled, and that they would not permit contractors to go on for months and months filling orders and producing a lot of material that this country does not need and will never need.

Let us take, for instance, as an illustration, one of these orders or contracts entered into with the Standard Steel Car Co. for 964 howitzer carriages. That order was given in November, 1917. That order called for the delivery of those howitzer carriages commencing the 1st of May. It had a penalty in it if they could not produce them and deliver them from time to time as the order required. It also provided that they were to have 10 per cent on the cost. The cost of these carriages, after a great deal of correspondence, and so forth, was fixed at $40,000, fixed by Col. Hughes, who afterwards turns out to be the man that has very much to do with the settlement of this contract.

These carriages were made at Hammond, Ind., in the place of business of the Standard Steel Car Co. The result was that they went on working on that order up to the time of the armistice, and by that time how many of these carriages at $40,000 apiece had been produced or manufactured? The war was over then and gun carriages were no longer needed. Up to that time they had succeeded in producing one. Instead of stopping that proposition along during that time, or even when the Dent Act was passed, they continued that contract in operation, with certain modifications, until the latter part of June of this year. By that time the company had made 200 of the gun carriages, and then the time for settlement came, and what do you think the Government had done for that company during that time? It had built them great buildings. One great building stands out there, made of brick and steel, 600 feet long, 280 feet wide. That company also was making, on another part of its premises, a great number of cars for the Railroad Administration. The War Department bought the equipment and machinery for it. The Government bought there, for that institution, materials, steel. If you walked through that building after the Government had taken for the arsenals over the country some machinery and parts, that which remained, according to the best information of the Government accountants whose testimony was taken, there was on hand material that had cost the Government $5,058,000, a pretty good sum of money raised from the people. In the settlement of that arrangement, whatever you call it, the company was permitted to retain that material that cost over $5,000,000 at the sum of $300,000.

The contention might be made, as it was made by that company in order to try to sustain its position, that this material could not be utilized for some other purpose. But for my part, as I looked over that great factory, that great building, and saw that material in its many and manifold forms, some of it in its original state, to say that that material, which cost the Government of the United States $5,000,000, should be given to the Standard Steel Car Co. at a salvage value of $300,000 was beyond my comprehension and beyond any idea of what I could consider as an honest deal with the Government of the United States.

And what further? That was done in face of the fact that a concern in Chicago had by letter, on the day this settlement was made, made a bid for that material which would have brought to the Government at least $750,000, plus the expense of transferring it away from that scene and the payment of the rental value to the Standard Steel Co. of from $20,000 to $25,000 for the time that it would be necessary to occupy their plant. Yet Col. Hughes for some reason wanted to turn all of this material over to the Standard Steel Co. at this value, and it was done. Yet in some ways I can not blame or censure Col. Hughes. It might not be fair to censure him for all of this. Why? Because the rules provided for the settlement of these contracts or these agreements by the War Department provided that all these materials and increased facilities and buildings and so forth should be retained if possible by the contractors in whose possession and on whose land they were. The result was that the negotiating officer under the Dent Act who went out there had one of only two alternatives open to him—either to make some kind of an arrangement with the contractor and get some little return for the materials and the increased facilities or else take and remove them and turn them over to a salvage department that perhaps never would sell them. God only knows. I do not.

But, anyhow, the negotiating officer had no chance to go out into the market in the different cities where these things are located and find a buyer there who could make a bid that would be accepted and have a delivery made, because of the rules and regulations adopted by the War Department for disposing of these materials and this equipment under the Dent Act.

And then we come to the settlement, after they had run this contract over until the last part of June and delivered only 200 of these war carriages.

What next have we? They filed first a claim against the United States for $6,000,000, including their profits. They were only entitled to a profit of $800,000, or $4,000 on each carriage. Yet they filed a claim for $6,000,000.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JEFFERIS. I can not yield now. They filed first a claim for $6,000,000. The next claim that they filed was for $3,000,000, and the accountants out there of the Government who had been working on the job during the entire time of the execution of that contract, who had the figures of the cost of everything, and who had been maintained there by the Government at great expense, were kicked aside when the settlement came to be made, and the knowledge that they had was apparently removed from all consideration and not considered in any way, shape, or form.

Finally that claim of over $3,000,000 was presented. They were entitled to $800,000 as their profit. That left $2,200,000. How did they undertake to make up that amount? On what basis did they claim or could they justly claim that the Government owed it to them? The Government accountants were there. Mr. Blakey related this thing some time ago to the Chicago Tribune. Afterwards the young man, born and raised over here in Maryland, came down to the office of this committee and told the committee something with reference to that claim and that settlement, and he testified before this committee regarding the different items that were utilized or set up in that claim and which were allowed by the Claims Board not only in Washington but in the Ordnance Department and in the city of Chicago. Those items were first $99,000, about which I will read.

Mr. BLAKEY. Instead of being for $3,000,000, it is for $2,200,000, as I explained; $800,000 has already been paid as profit. I have crossed the items here that should not apply in the claim.

The first one is under (a) 6, carrying charge during the period of nonproduction.

Mr. GRAHAM. Explain that.

Mr. BLAKEY. At $99,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. Explain that and tell what you think about it.

Mr. BLAKEY. The first time they set it up here—

That is the company—

they tried to call it interest on their investment, and in my letter dated September 15 I explained to them that depreciation had been paid and that interest on the investment is not a proper charge to the War Department contracts.

Then he goes on and explains that that was an unjust item, an improper item that was allowed in the settlement making up this total of $2,200,000.

Then he goes on to an item of $261,251.45 that was allowed by this Claims Board and permitted to be paid. He says:

I went to Butler, Pa., and audited their administrative expense, which covers their Butler office and their Pittsburgh office, and I have set up here their entire administrative expense from November, 1917, to June, 1919, inclusive, and the amount that was applicable to all Government contracts, whether it was the Hammond plant or whether it was their other plant, was $670,869.16. After arriving at that amount, which was agreed to by their treasurer, Mr. Gillispi, we began prorating to their four plants. They have two plants at Hammond, one at Butler, and one at New Castle, Pa., and we prorated that $670,000 to those four plants on an equitable basis.

Mr. GRAHAM. According to the business done?

Mr. BLAKEY. No, sir; according to productive labor; that is the method that is used by all accountants and agreed to by them. And in doing that the Government absorbed the figure that is mentioned here, $109,000 of the $670,000; and the treasurer of the company complimented me and said I had been very liberal, that that was a very liberal settlement, and they could not have asked for any more. And as a result of that conference we were invoiced; that is, the Government was rendered bills and we vouchered and paid to them $109,000, which was all that they claimed.

And yet, notwithstanding they had been paid $109,000 for all their administrative charges that could be justly charged against this contract on the part of the Government in the settlement made at Chicago, they were given a further sum of $261,251.45.

The next item was a 10 per cent profit on worked direct materials, labor, and overhead, $656,394.05. What have you to say about that? It is backed up by any number of Government accountants, who after they had rendered their accounts to the Government were pushed aside and a settlement made that would permit of the payment to them of $2,200,000 plus the $800,000 profits to which they were justly entitled.

Now, what about the item of $656,394.05:

Mr. GRAHAM. What have you to say about that?

Mr. BLAKEY. That is an item that would require approximately 90 days to audit, and in order to audit that correctly the contractor would have to be forced to furnish records which at the present time they are holding back; they will not give the Government accountants those records, and they are doing it in order to get that amount, while we have from our own records that we have built up since I have been there—my contention is that figure should not be over $250,000, and that is very conservative.

Mr. GRAHAM. In other words, you think there is about $400,000?

Mr. BLAKEY. About $406,394.05 that is allowed more than should be paid. In other words, if you take this $656,000 and add it to the $800,000 they had been paid it gives them $1,456,000. Now, based on the total cost for the work in process and the carriages completed, they should have $1,050,000. While I can verify it in that way by taking the total cost, when you go down to verify it in detail, then it would take a little longer.

And yet the figures of these accountants, Mr. May, Mr. Blakey, and Mr. Miller, all show these vast sums of money allowed in the settlement of that transaction. The Government's accountants were ignored, refused a hearing in fact, because nothing was asked of them in any way, shape, or form, although Mr. Blakey had written a letter exposing this condition.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JEFFERIS. No; I can not yield; I want to get these facts before the House. Now, this item for additional work, an item used to make up this sum of $2,200,000 out of the people's money that was paid to the companies. Here is what the evidence says about that:

Mr. BLAKEY (e). Additional cost of passenger-car work done in freight shop, $467,184.51. As a Government accountant I do not see how that applies to the war contract in any sense whatever. It was work that they did in their own plant on the other side of the fence and was not Government work and had no bearing and no relation to the Government contract.

Mr. GRAHAM. Did the Government take over their freight-car establishment?

Mr. BLAKEY. We took over their passenger-car work.

Mr. GRAHAM. And did you take their building that they used for making them?

Mr. BLAKEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. GRAHAM. And they are charging now for this sum for the inconvenience, or whatever it was, of doing this work in the freight building?

Mr. BLAKEY. Which they claim additional cost; in other words, they claim it costs more by having to move over in the other department and produce cars over there instead of producing them where they were originally.

Then the evidence goes on with the different items that make up $2,200,000 that they agreed to. In settlement the manufacturer turns over all this material and these increased facilities, that cost the Government about $8,000,000, to the company at a salvage of $900,000.

The testimony discloses that it was wholly improper and unjustified from any standpoint whatever. And yet that settlement was made on that basis by the Claims Board in Chicago, and then the representative of the company goes with Col. Hughes, the negotiating officer, to Washington, and having taken it up with the ordnance board, the ordnance board sends one representative to go out and look the field over. The War Claims Board sends one representative, and Col. Hughes goes on the railroad train with the representative of the company and they occupy a stateroom together. They ride out to Chicago that night, enjoy each other's company as they play cards, and so forth, on the railroad train, get out there the next morning, and these men walk through the plant and have a meeting in the afternoon. They talk the matter over informally and agree on a settlement of $3,000,000, notwithstanding the accountants undertook in the way that they considered proper to get their knowledge and information before the board. They apparently got no hearing, but the settlement went through. The check is issued and a representative of the company hops on the train and rushes to Washington to get the money.

Col. Hughes is the same Col. Hughes who early in July, 1919, under the name of Mr. Russell, who was then the head of the Claims Board, wrote a letter down here to Washington, Intelligence Division, telling them to call off the investigators of the War Department as to what was taking place; that if there was any more evidence of fraud out there than what had been discovered that the Claims Board that had been in charge for a long period of time was capable of finding it out. The president of the Standard Steel Car Co. was here during the war in the War Industries Board, under the direction of the War Department.

Whether the president of the company had influence or not, the fact remains that the company was able to put things over and get money, and get a plenty of it, and the result was that Col. Hughes, when he wrote the letter that he did not want any more war-intelligence officers out there, must have had a reason for it. It had been discovered that in a certain electrical contract for the construction of increased facilities by the Standard Electric Co.—I forget the exact name—an employee of that company had received a present of a chest of silver, and that an automobile was involved in another transaction.

Mr. WELTY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JEFFERIS. I can not.

Mr. WELTY. I only want to ask the gentleman if he will kindly give us the names.

Mr. JEFFERIS. Oh, it is all in the evidence. The evidence was taken under the direction of this Congress. Every Member has it available if he will look it through and feels that he has interest enough to read it and find the names and dates and everything else. I am not here to undertake to remember all the names or every iota of evidence when it is open to those who want the truth, and if they will seek for it they will find it. [Applause.] After this was done, it seems that the War Intelligence Board was hot on the trail of some of them and it was called off.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that order may be maintained on the other side of the aisle.

Mr. JEFFERIS. I know the truth hurts sometimes, and whenever the pig under the gate is found squealing it is because he has got wedged in fast and is being hurt. That is true with individuals, and likewise some of them do not want to have the truth told.

Take, for instance, the American Can Co., an institution of 55 factories throughout the United States, making tin cans. As a matter of fact, at that time the Government had a bill pending here in the United States courts to have that institution dissolved as a trust, but when a war came on it seemed that that was the one company to make tin cans. Contracts were given to that company, and in the latter part of the war, along from June to November, the War Department gave it seven contracts for some 89,000,000 cans at a price from 5¼ to 6½ cents apiece. Was that a just contract? It was the greatest can-making factory of the country. According to independent can makers of this country, and we called a number of them before the committee, they would have been glad to have had those contracts for those cans, and would have made them at a price of 4 to 5¼ cents apiece, and in doing so, according to their testimony, they would have made from 25 to 30 per cent profit. This American Can Co., however, after they had obtained these contracts, although the contract did not say to the effect that the company was entitled to any increased facilities or that any of the increased facilities that they might purchase were to be amortized in the contracts, went on in the performance of that contract and had furnished some 40,000,000 of these cans at the time of the armistice. A settlement was necessary. The American Can Co. was not in want. It was the largest manufacturing concern of its kind in the country, covering 55 cities, and one of those institutions that all Democrats out in our State seemed to denounce, because I have been living in a State where that peerless leader of Democracy, William J. Bryan, hails from, and where he has denounced time and time again everything that looks like a trust or combination as being contrary to the best interests of the American people. When it came to making a claim, this company rendered an account charging that they had purchased $867,733 worth of material to go into the making of these cans. Had that material fallen in price? According to the secretary of that company, and according to the evidence of other witnesses, this tin plate had not reduced in price except from $7.75 to $7 per hundredweight, a decrease of only 9 per cent, from the time the armistice was signed until the time of the settlement. Yet on what basis did we permit them to keep all of that tin? The Government made a settlement with them and permitted them to keep that tin at a salvage value of 68 per cent of its cost, or $591,061.15, or a loss to the Treasury of the United States of $276,588.94.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. JEFFERIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I regret, but I must object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, is it the desire of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] that I should proceed now?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. We will have but one more talk on our side, and I suggest that the gentleman use his time now.

Mr. GARRETT. I suggest this to the gentleman. Of course I have no knowledge of what ground he intends to cover in his remarks. I feel that I ought to reserve some time to follow the gentleman.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Under the rules of the House, as I understand it, I am entitled to close.

Mr. GARRETT. Certainly.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. And I expect to follow the report as it is filed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for two hours.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, it is among the traditions of the House of Representatives that one of the most distinguished Speakers who ever occupied the chair said upon one occasion, in speaking of a Member of the House, that he never raised his voice in speech that he did not subtract from the sum total of human wisdom. I do not mean to make any application of that——

Mr. CARAWAY. It is not necessary.

Mr. GARRETT. To the remarks of my frind of whom I am very fond, who has just preceded me, or to anticipate in any way that it would be applicable to the remarks of the gentleman who is to follow me; but I do undertake to say that by the presentation of such matters as are presented here to the House, the majority of this Committee on Expenditures illustrates in an even greater degree than I have seen it illustrated heretofore its inefficiency to deal with the things committed to its charge. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Complaint has been made that the minority opposed and sought to prevent this debate by voting against the rule which made it in order. I shall submit to the quiet, intelligent thought of those members who are accustomed to deal with serious matters in a serious way, whether or not the minority was justified. These matters involved in this report are technical in character. They are executive and judicial, not legislative, and this is a legislative body. The testimony which has been taken before this subcommittee covers two large volumes. That part dealing with the settlement of claims alone, to which this report only alludes, would cover probably more than 1,000 pages. Every case presents a purely legal question in itself. No man can pass just judgment upon any one of those cases without hearing or reading all of the testimony that has been taken. Do we object to the facts coming out? No! Do we object to a discussion? No! What we do object to is the opportunity of inferences to be cast out to the country, predicated alone upon only a part of the testimony that has been taken. [Applause on Democratic side.]

Eight business firms of this country are mentioned by name in the report filed by the majority of the committee, and it is followed with the statement that the settlement of these claims in some of these cases, without specifying—

Seem to have been obviously tainted with fraud.

Seem to be obviously tainted with fraud! In what respect are they tainted with fraud and with whose fraud? Fraud upon the part of the negotiators for the Government or fraud upon the part of the firms whose names are mentioned? I submit that it is an injustice of the gravest character for a great committee of this House to bring before this body in an official report allegations attacking the integrity of business firms, without specifying the firm that they would attack or the employees or representatives of the Government whom they charge, if they would dare charge, have been guilty of fraud.

I propose to follow as closely as I can the line of argument or the order of argument made by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. JEFFERIS], but before doing so I think it is only fair that some reference should be made to the remarks made by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] during discussion on the rule, wherein he referred to a list of contracts not mentioned in the report and assailed the integrity of a contractor. R. H. Long & Co. had contracts with the Government of the United States aggregating from $30,000,000 to $35,000,000. When the armistice was signed there were outstanding contracts aggregating more than $10,000,000, practically all of which were canceled.

Some of them were formal contracts, some of them were Dent Act cases. The matter of the settlement of those contracts arose. A representative of the War Department negotiated these settlements, and I shall tell you who he was presently. These contracts, terminated and canceled, aggregating more than $10,000,000, were settled at a little over 9 per cent of the amount of the liability which was outstanding, a most favorable settlement; probably, so far as the little evidence which has been taken upon this shows, the most favorable to the Government of any that have been made. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL]—and here is the vice of this procedure—the gentleman from Kansas read one or two pages of testimony of a single witness, and upon that predicated this sweeping charge of fraud and graft against R. H. Long, and in the conclusion of one of his speeches said or rather asked the question—I think it was of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WELTY]—"Do you not think that Long should be prosecuted and that the official who negotiated the settlement with him should be prosecuted?" and then "would not stay for an answer."

I will answer the gentleman. Upon this record, no. The gentleman read to the House certain testimony of one Mr. Bennett. I do not know whether the gentleman from Kansas has ever met with Mr. Bennett or not. I want to say this. I have met in my life a good many witnesses in the court room and before committees of the Congress, and according to my present recollection—and I have searched my memory with great care to try to be accurate—Mr. Bennett adds more to my ignorance of a proposition concerning which he attempts to testify than any witness I have ever seen in a court of justice or at a parliamentary inquisition. In saying that I do not mean to impugn in any way the integrity of Mr. Bennett. I do not cast imputations upon the integrity of men without justification; but he is quoted here, and I think the House should know his opportunity for learning the facts and his relation to the committee. When he first appeared before the committee and made an assault with apparent intent to try to give information, I became curious to know how we had accumulated him. I knew, of course, that various of these subcommittees had their attorney and their investigators and their expert accountants, and so I began to inquire in the hearing as to how Mr. Bennett came to us. It developed that he was employed down in the War Department, a civil-service employee; some unpleasantness arose down there and he sought another job; he came up and held converse with our honored chairman and told him certain things, and thereupon our chairman employed him and he became the official smeller for Subcommittee No. 5. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] I do not think Mr. Bennett is to be very severely criticized, because he has had to work with very great haste. The demand was urgent that something should be found, and so he went forth to hunt for the decayed stuff in Denmark with all the zeal and spirit of that knight of old who went forth in quest of the Holy Grail. The demand was very imperative upon the majority party: "You must find something; you must find carrion, or we will have to eat crow." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

And so a hasty search was made of these settlements, and Mr. Bennett came before the committee and testified. He furnished the chairman with information upon which he gave out an interview that caused two libel suits against newspapers in the State of Massachusetts. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] He shoots such facts as he assumes to lay before the committee through and through with inferences so that it is practically impossible to follow him. When Mr. Long came upon the stand and took the specific contracts and dealt with them item by item and explained these settlements, that testimony of Mr. Bennett was absolutely emasculated, and the majority did not include the Long settlements in their report.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Congress of the United States very promptly, after the signing of the armistice, realized the importance of conditions in this country being restored to normal as quickly as was humanly possible. More than 30,000 contracts, formal and informal, had been entered into during the period of the war. These contracts were for probably every form of raw and finished material of which the human mind can conceive. Every industry of the country had been bent to war purposes. Scarcely one which you can name, engaged in the manufacture of anything whatsoever, but whose forces had been called upon to respond to the military needs of the Republic. Many of those contracts were informal, or what has been designated as "illegal" contracts—namely, in the sense they were either proxy-signed contracts and, because of the decision of the comptroller, became informal or "illegal" contracts—or others that were based upon purchase orders issued from the department or by some officer of the department requisitioning vast war materials, and the Congress of the United States, in order to meet that condition, in order to relieve the strain, in order to render business as certain as it was possible to render it, proceeded as one of its first works when we met here in December, 1918, to formulate the legislation commonly known as the Dent Act, under which the claims growing out of those contracts might be settled. The rules of settlement are criticized in this report and have been referred to by the gentleman from Nebraska.

Every essential element that is contained in any rule that has been adopted for the settlement of those claims was laid before the Committees on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Senate, and before the House and the Senate, at the time we were considering the Dent Act, and, with the full knowledge of what those rules were to be and what processes had been developed, this House of Representatives, by a vote of 270 to 30, and the Senate by a practically unanimous vote, passed the legislation which put that machinery into operation. And the rules and regulations which were to be followed as then laid before this Congress have been scrupulously followed by the department in every adjustment and every settlement made, so far as it has been possible for this committee to determine. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. JEFFERIS] referred in the outset of his remarks in a critical way to the order the Secretary of War issued on the 17th of April, declaring that an emergency existed and stating that there might be a suspension (as he was authorized by law to do) in the matter of advertising for bids for war supplies. Would the gentleman from Nebraska have had it otherwise? We were entering an indescribable war, because there is nothing with which we can compare it. Speed was of the essence of our enterprise and endeavor. We were beginning or were shortly to begin to send the American youths across to foreign lands to do battle in a strange country. Would the gentleman from Nebraska have waited to advertise for bread or for clothes or for guns with which to equip them? So far as my recollection extends, at no time when this Nation has been at war has there been a failure to suspend the regulation providing for competitive bidding by advertising before entering into contracts for war necessities, and if unfortunately we should ever be engaged in war again it will be so again. The gentleman has referred to the requisition made for a certain class of leather goods. Oh, the gentleman's speech was ingenious and adroit. It is an appeal not to the intelligence of the country but to the psychology of the country, and it is not the purpose to discuss these matters upon the cold facts and all the facts developed in this record. It is the purpose to appeal to the dissatisfaction, to the spirit of suspicion and discontent.

What these gentlemen want is to find a thief. Why, their daily cry is, "Let us search the department for a thief. A thief, a thief, my kingdom for a thief!" [Applause on the Democratic side.] For what? To discredit the administration. "Should not the negotiator of the settlement with Mr. Long be prosecuted?" said the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL]. Does the gentleman from Kansas know who negotiated the settlement with Mr. Long? Maj. Byron negotiated every settlement of every contract of Mr. Long, save a few that were in the Chemical Warfare Service, upon which partial settlements were made, and some of which are still pending. If the gentleman from Kansas has not met Maj. Byron—and this committee has not taken his testimony, and he is one man outside of Long himself who knows all about it—if he has not met him, I suggest to him that he do so. He is an elegant gentleman, and the gentleman will find him a congenial political companion. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Col. Goetz, the gentleman who aided in the settlement of these claims, tells me that he is a good West Virginia Republican and, strange to say, he seems to be proud of it. [Laughter.]

Some gentleman said during the course of the debate on the rule, that you would prosecute under the next administration. Let me warn you that if there were any chance of conviction you would best wait until the next administration, because you would miss lots of these fellows in next November's election if you did not. [Laughter.] Gentlemen, there has not been politics in the selection of these men who have represented the Government in these negotiations and settlements. More than 30,000 men have had to do with the settlements of the contracts. Do you understand the system? Boards are created in the zones, ordnance boards, the quartermaster or purchase, storage and supply boards, and so forth.

Where a claim is made it is first dealt with by that zone board. I am not trying to use all the technical names, but to give you a rapid description of the system. After that board has made its award it comes to a bureau board here in Washington. The bureau board, with the aid of its technical advisors—and the local boards also have their technical advisors—pass upon the claim, and it then goes to the General War Claims Board for final adjustment. If they are unable to agree then the contractor can go into the Court of Claims; and that is his last resort. I am speaking now of the Dent Act cases. Not all of these cases mentioned in the report are Dent Act cases. Every settlement of the American Can Co., to which the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. JEFFERIS] made reference, and the settlement with Henry W. Moss & Co., to which the report makes reference, was the settlement of a formal contract, which the Government could only terminate by the sufferance of the contractor. The contractor had the right to proceed with the manufacture of those things that had been ordered from him, to lay down the supplies, and say, "Give me my money." Those contracts were terminated by agreement between the Government and the contractor, and any settlement made with the contractor for less than the amount of his contract was so much saved to the Government.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Certainly.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I ask for information, because I had understood that the formal contracts contained a stipulation.

Mr. GARRETT. You mean for termination?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. For termination.

Mr. GARRETT. Not in all cases. And if terminated, they had to be terminated upon terms satisfactory to the contractor.

Mr. GARNER. Does the gentleman mean to say that there were 30,000 people who represented the Government in the settlement of various contracts?

Mr. GARRETT. I mean to say it has been testified to before the committee that, first and last, in these claims boards, with their technical advisers and their investigators, there have been more than 30,000 different individuals engaged in the work and representing the Government. Why, this is a task!

This committee a few weeks ago reported House resolution 381, requesting the Secretary of War to at once review the settlement of every case that had been made under the Dent Act. It was understood the committee was to go to the Committee on Rules and ask for a special rule to consider and pass that resolution. But some wise men on the Republican side, evidently not willing to commit themselves to such a superb folly, persuaded the committee from making any such request, and it was abandoned; and so they compromised on just talk, talk, talk.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. RAKER. About what proportion of these 30,000 men, if the gentleman knows from his inquiry, were officers in the service?

Mr. GARRETT. I can not tell.

Mr. RAKER. I mean men who were in the service as officers in the Army?

Mr. GARRETT. I will say this, that there is scarcely a claims board—local, bureau, or general—upon which there is not one or more commissioned officers of the War Department; but the number, of course, I do not know, and I have no way of ascertaining.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman state about how many claims there have been passed upon?

Mr. GARRETT. Under the Dent Act?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. GARRETT. Under the Dent Act, according to the report submitted by the Secretary of War, under the terms of the Dent Act there have been adjusted 4,668 claims, 2,185 claims are pending, and 2,700 others are under consideration, to determine whether they fall within the classification of formal or informal contracts.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARRETT. I will.

Mr. RAKER. Could the gentleman tell us what was the method used in selecting the personnel of these various boards and commissions? How was that done? Does the record show?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes. In a general way, they were assigned, where it was Army officers who were assigned, in this way: Say an officer who was in a district subject to orders of the officer of that district, the general officer, the officer for that board would be assigned by such general officer. They were assigned, it may be said generally, under the authority of the General Staff.

Mr. RAKER. I want to inquire as to the civil members, those that were not in the military service. Were they under civil service or were they appointed outside?

Mr. GARRETT. I do not know. Some of them may have been under civil service, and some of them may have been selected otherwise. I do not know about that. I think that very few, if any, were under civil service. They were business men, in so far as the Government could obtain business men; men with the largest experience the Government could find who were willing to take the job.

Now, the gentleman from California and all gentlemen will bear in mind that the personnel of these boards has been and is constantly changing. Men do not care to remain in this service at a sacrifice to themselves, and hundreds—aye, thousands—of these men who were selected were, while they were serving, working at an actual sacrifice to themselves, because they could get out elsewhere and do better in private business.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the question of salvage values is raised here. The majority report says:

> In all these cases except the last two named salvage values were fixed by Government agents and Army officers on special facilities furnished by the Government, sometimes buildings and sometimes machinery and equipment, which were, in the opinion of the committee, insufficient and unjust to the Government.

Now, let us be reasonable about this matter and view it as a common-sense proposition; that is, if the House is in a frame of mind that renders it possible to do so. When these contracts were terminated many of the contractors had on hand large stocks of material in their factories—material bought especially for the contracts. In many instances the material had been especially cut. For instance, in the case of these hard-bread cans, that tin had been cut to a certain size, because it was required to prevent waste and it was necessary to make the can in accordance with the particular specifications required by the Government. In the case of tin the Government received in salvaging it $5.50 per base box. It was testified by some gentleman before the committee that according to the magazines the market price of this tin at that time was $7.35. And yet Col. Goetz told the committee—he was the salvage officer, it so happened, on certain of these contracts—that he sent out a representative who wrote or went to the various concerns which it was thought could use that character of material, and that he was unable to get any bid at all; and so, finally, they salvaged it at $5.50.

Now, it is a question of judgment. There was no fraud. The judgments of men upon business transactions differ. I sold some property recently and bought some, and I have been wondering ever since whether in one or the other, or both, of the transactions I did not get skinned. From what would they impute fraud?

Because they may differ as to whether the Government should take over what it had then and leave it there in the factories or move it to some storage place, paying in either event a tremendous rental for storage, and holding it as a speculation to see if there would be a better market or whether the price would rise.

Oh, we have had some resolutions from another subcommittee of this full committee before now, urging the Government to press in and sell the foodstuffs and break the market; to sell the automobiles at whatever it could get for them. The generous soul of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] would throw that stuff on the market at nothing, but the frugal soul of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] would have the Government hold vast warehouses of stuff in order to see if there might come a rising market. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Specific reference has been made by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. JEFFERIS] to the case of the Standard Steel Car Co. I do not wish to enter into a discussion of that case, and I am going to tell you why very frankly; and I am not going to enter into a discussion any more than I can avoid it and still do what seems to me a duty with respect to that feature of the report mentioned by the gentleman from Nebraska. It is a matter that, if anything can be done concerning it, must go to the courts, and it is neither fair nor proper that the rights of the Government or the rights of the contractor should in any way be prejudiced by anything that is said on the floor of this House, because it is a matter with which we have nothing to do. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I have some impressions in regard to that case; but, gentlemen, not a single member of the Standard Steel Car Co. has been heard before the committee. I do not think it was the duty of the committee to call them, and I am making no criticism of the committee for not doing so.

But their side of this proposition has never been presented, save only as it was presented through the Government officers that negotiated the settlement; and here is the further reason why I do not deem it proper to discuss it: It is known to this committee that this particular case is one in which the Secretary of War, immediately upon its coming to his attention and before this committee had taken a line of testimony upon it, directed that there should be a review of it, and there is just this that ought to be said: No inference may legitimately be drawn adverse to the head of the administration of the War Department concerning this claim because every word of testimony that this committee has had reflecting upon the claim is from officers of the War Department itself.

I leave the case there for the decision of the department and of the courts, if the department shall see proper, as it has the authority to do, to bring suit under the terms of the Dent Act.

Now, I trust that no gentleman will have the faintest suspicion that any political reason influences me in not discussing that case, because, so far as I have been able to learn, everybody connected with it in any direct way is a member of a different party from that to which I belong. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The report makes this statement:

In the last case cited, that of the United Metals Selling Co., immense profits were made by the producers of copper by virtue of a combination of the low-priced copper producers, which combination was aided and encouraged by the Government, although in violation of the law of the land.

Here, gentlemen, are the facts: The United Metals Selling Co. is a corporation, formerly, I believe, chartered by the State of New York, but now under the laws of Delaware. Its business is the sale of metals. It acts as agent for the producers of zinc and copper and steel and pig iron, if I remember correctly, and the various classes of metals, and sells to the consumer for the producer. It has been in existence—it or one of its predecessors has been in existence—for a quarter of a century or more. There are about 20 such companies in the United States, this being, I believe, the largest. Before we entered the war the demand for copper on the part of the nations of Europe was immense.

They were taking practically all of our supply, save such as we retained for domestic and peace time manufacture here. And, by the way, we were practically the sole source of supply for the nations with whom we subsequently became associated in the conflict.

When we entered into the war there was, of course, an immediate realization that the demand for copper for war purposes was to be tremendously increased, and there had to be certainty. There had to be uniformity. The Government of the United States, therefore, went to the people who knew something about copper and entered into negotiations with them to see what could be supplied. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. JEFFERIS] made reference to the Government entering into a contract with the American Can Co. for cans. Of course they did. The Government needed cans wherever they could get them. Would the gentleman from Nebraska go to a shoemaker's shop for a shave? Would the gentleman from Illinois go to a millinery store for a massage? The Government went where it had to go, to the men who knew how to obtain these things. And what happened? At the time we entered the war copper was selling at from 26 to 33 cents on the markets of the world. The first move that was made by this Government to obtain copper was made by Mr. Bernard M. Baruch. Even before we entered the war the Congress had appropriated for the purchase of a vast amount of copper. The Navy Department and the Army together needed 45,000,000 pounds of copper. Mr. Baruch went out to the copper men and brought about among them an agreement whereby different ones furnished to the Government of the United States 45,000,000 pounds of copper at 16⅔ cents a pound, being the average price extending over the previous 10 years of production, although the world price at that time was from 26 to 33 cents a pound. [Applause.]

After that, with the price of copper still continuing to rise, it was realized that something must be done to stabilize prices and—what was even more important—to insure production. Those gentlemen on the Military Affairs Committee, who knew of the need, will acquiesce in that as a matter of course.

And what occurred? In September, 1917, after negotiations on the part of representatives of the Government with various copper producers and the agencies that were selling copper, such as the Standard Co. and the United Metals Selling Co. in particular, a uniform price was agreed upon at which the Government was to obtain its copper; to wit, 23½ cents per pound. And in addition to that the laborers in the copper mines—who where they are unionized, have a contract, and have had for long years that they shall receive payment on the basis of the price at which the producer sells the copper, what is called a sliding scale—were protected, so that although the producer received only 23½ cents a pound they received the wages based on the price at which copper was then selling upon the market, to wit, from 26 cents up.

That was in September, 1917. In July, 1918, the price was raised to 26 cents a pound f. o. b. New York, which is the basis of all these prices. That, of course, was to meet the rising scale of prices due to the inflation which always comes with bond issues, and also to meet the increase in freight rates that went into effect on the first day of that month.

That, gentlemen, in brief, is the story of copper; and I undertake to say to you now that if it had not been for this arrangement and those agreements the price of copper would have been to us—with the demand all the time growing, and with us in competition with those countries with which we had become associated in the war—a sum which no man would now dare hazard a guess about, certainly not less than 35 or 40 cents a pound. And there was, in my opinion, no combination involved in that arrangement which in any way was in violation of the law of the land, but upon the contrary the Public Treasury was protected, and every legitimate interest of the Government was carefully guarded. [Applause.]

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee has consumed one hour.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I had it in mind to make a motion to adjourn, and inasmuch as the gentleman has consumed half his time and an hour remains on our side, if that is satisfactory to the gentleman, I will make the motion; but if the gentleman wants to conclude, I will withhold the motion.

Mr. GARRETT. I yield to the gentleman.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. MOORE of Ohio (at the request of Mr. RICKETTS), for 10 days, on account of serious illness in this family.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 54 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Tuesday, December 16, 1919, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting revision of certain items in the estimates for the office of the Comptroller of the Currency for the fiscal year 1921 (H. Doc. No. 511); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting supplemental estimate of appropriation required by the Bureau of the Census for compilation and publication of influenza statistics, fiscal year 1920 (H. Doc. No. 512); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriation required by the Division of Printing and Stationery (H. Doc. No. 513); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting supplemental estimate of appropriation required by the Department of Agriculture for "General expenses, Forest Service," fiscal year 1921 (H. Doc. No. 514); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

5. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting supplemental estimate of appropriation required for additional clerical force for the office of the Coast Guard during the last six months of the current fiscal year (H. Doc. No. 515); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

6. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a statement showing the documents received and distributed during the fiscal year 1919 (H. Doc. No. 516); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department and ordered to be printed.

7. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting condition of the appropriation "Pay of personnel and maintenance of hospitals, Public Health Service, 1920" (H. Doc. No. 517); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

8. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting report and estimates in connection with the acquisition of the Broadview Hospital, in Chicago, Ill. (H. Doc. No. 518); to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed.

9. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting supplemental estimate of appropriation required by the Public Health Service (H. Doc. No. 519); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 2476) to amend an act establishing the eastern district of Kentucky, reported the same with an amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 501), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Claims was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11170) for the relief of Elizabeth R. Nicholls and Joanna L. Nicholls, heirs of Joshua Nicholls, and the same was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. PORTER: A bill (H. R. 11195) providing for an appropriation for the purpose of making examinations, investigations, and surveys and preparing plans and estimates of cost for regulating the stream flow and controlling the flood waters of the Allegheny and Monongahela Rivers and their tributaries; to the Committee on Flood Control.

By Mr. PETERS: A bill (H. R. 11196) to dispose of a certain strip of public land in Waterville, Me.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 11197) for the reduction of postage on first-class mail matter; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. HARRISON: A bill (H. R. 11198) to provide for the erection of a post-office building at Luray, Va.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11199) to provide for the erection of a post-office building at Woodstock, Va.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11200) to make additions and extensions to post-office and courthouse building at Harrisonburg, Va.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11201) to make an additional appropriation for the construction of a post-office building at Front Royal, Va.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. WOODS of Virginia: A bill (H. R. 11202) increasing the limit of cost for a post-office building and site at Salem, Va.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. ROUSE: A bill (H. R. 11203) for the reduction of postage on first-class mail matter; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. DYER: A bill (H. R. 11204) authorizing the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a hospital at St. Louis, Mo.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. RAKER: A bill (H. R. 11205) providing for the exclusion, deportation, and expulsion from the United States of certain aliens, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. MORIN: A bill (H. R. 11206) to create a department of aeronautics, defining the powers and duties of the director thereof, providing for the development, production, operation, and maintenance of aircraft, and providing for the development of civil and commercial aviation; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. RAMSEY: Resolution (H. Res. 420) providing for an additional clerk to the Committee on Enrolled Bills; to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. WRIGHT: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 262) authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish material, forces, and help for the construction of a pontoon bridge for temporary use across the Chattahoochee River at West Point, Ga.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GOOD: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 263) extending the time for filing final report of the Joint Commission on Reclassification of Salaries, created by section 9, public, No. 314, Sixty-fifth Congress, approved March 1, 1919, to a date not later than March 12, 1920; to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

By Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts: Memorial from the Legislature of the State of Massachusetts, regarding the continuation of certain work at the Boston Navy Yard; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ASHBROOK: A bill (H. R. 11207) granting a pension to Harry M. Sutter; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BOOHER: A bill (H. R. 11208) granting an increase of pension to Albert Waller; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11209) granting a pension to Mary F. Cook; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FERRIS: A bill (H. R. 11210) granting an increase of pension to Michael Balenti; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FULLER of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 11211) granting an increase of pension to John Bounds; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HARRISON: A bill (H. R. 11212) for the relief of William J. Wagner; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KING: A bill (H. R. 11213) granting an increase of pension to Kate McLaughlin; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KNUTSON: A bill (H. R. 11214) for the relief of A. C. Goddard; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LEHLBACH: A bill (H. R. 11215) granting an increase of pension to William S. Stout; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MACGREGOR: A bill (H. R. 11216) for the relief of Cosmo Palermo; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McDUFFIE: A bill (H. R. 11217) granting a pension to Sadie L. Runyan; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McKINLEY: A bill (H. R. 11218) granting a pension to Martha A. Wade; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PARKER: A bill (H. R. 11219) granting an increase of pension to Christina Wylie; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SELLS: A bill (H. R. 11220) granting an increase of pension to Cynthia Martin; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11221) granting an increase of pension to Daniel K. Rowe; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WILSON of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 11222) for the relief of William A. O'Connor; to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

379. By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of Presbytery of Washington City, indorsing a three months' truce of strikes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

380. Also (by request), petition of sundry citizens of Springfield, Mass., opposing Esch and Cummins bills; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

381. Also (by request), petition of United Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way and Railway Shop Labor, of Harrisburg, Pa., presenting resolutions concerning recent miners' strike and for strikes called in the future; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

382. Also (by request), petition of sundry citizens of various States concerning the methods adopted by the Government in the recent strike crisis; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

383. By Mr. BABKA: Petition of Warren Lodge, No. 295, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, favoring deportation of undesirable aliens; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

384. Also, petition of Grand Hodge Post, No. 17, American Legion, pledging support to the Government in suppressing radical elements; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

385. By Mr. BEGG: Petition of Liberty Post, No. 46, American Legion, Bellevue, Ohio, urging that steps be taken to curb the activities of un-American individuals and organizations; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

386. By Mr. BURROUGHS: Petition of the Earl B. Clark Post, No. 42, of the New Hampshire Branch of the American Legion, indorsing and recommending for passage House bill 5545 to provide homes for soldiers, seamen, marines, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

387. Also, petition of Phil Sheridan Branch of the Friends of Irish Freedom, Somersworth, N. H., by Mrs. Hannah R. Wallace, secretary, advocating the enactment of House bill 3404; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

388. Also, petition of Padraic H. Pearse Branch, Friends of Irish Freedom, by Messrs. Patrick J. Connors, John Leary, and Thomas Loughlin, committee on resolutions, Portsmouth, N. H., urging that the Congress by resolution ask the President of the United States to recognize the republic of Ireland as a member of the nations of the world; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

389. By Mr. ELSTON: Petition of Oakland Lodge, No. 171, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, condemning promulgation of anarchist propaganda in the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

390. By Mr. EMERSON: Petition of East Cleveland Post, No. 363, American Legion, favoring the deportation of undesirable radicals; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

391. By Mr. ESCH: Petition of Cleary Post, No. 115, American Legion, Elroy, Wis., favoring deportation of all undesirable aliens; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

392. Also, petition of Merrill Lodge, No. 696, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, favoring legislation to rid country of radical elements; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

393. Also, petition of mass meeting assembled at La Crosse, Wis., opposing Cummins bill and favoring Plumb plan; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

394. By Mr. FULLER of Illinois: Petition of William Ennenbach, C. B. & Q. car inspector, of Mendota, Ill., opposing Cummins bill and favoring Sims bill regarding the railroads; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

395. Also, petition of the Illinois Agricultural Association, concerning the Federal land bank system and joint-stock land banks; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

396. Also, petition of Rev. B. N. Cleaver, of Streator, Ill., for repeal of the tax on Chautauqua tickets of admission; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

397. Also, petition of the Pioneer Creamery Co. and the National Sewing Machine Co., of Belvidere, Ill., favoring Madden bill for 1-cent postage; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

398. Also, petition of Chicago Sand & Gravel Producers' Association, concerning the return of the railroads to their owners; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

399. Also, petition of sundry citizens of Cedar Point, Ill., regarding constitutional rights; to the Committee on Labor.

400. By Mr. JOHNSTON of New York: Petition of St. Lawrence O'Toole Branch Friends of Irish Freedom, favoring House bill 3404; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

401. Also, petition of Joseph Conroy and others, of New York City, favoring six months' pay for soldiers and sailors; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

402. Also, petition of Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, Lodge No. 275, urging stringent legislation against Bolshevism and I. W. W.s in this country; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

403. Also, petition of Department of Labor, State Industrial Commission, New York State, protesting against House Document No. 284; to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

404. By Mr. LINTHICUM: Petition of William Warfield Cockey, of Baltimore, Md., regarding railroad legislation; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

405. Also, petition of Lewis J. Barnsburgh, of Baltimore, Md., concerning railroad legislation; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

406. Also, petition of Walter Wells, of Baltimore, Md., opposing Cummins bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

407. Also, petition of Herbert C. Jory, of Baltimore, Md., presenting recommendation for construction division to be included in reorganization of the Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

408. By Mr. LONERGAN: Petition of Hartford Lodge, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, condemning activities of I. W. W., Bolshevists, and syndicalists; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

409. Also, petition of Yankee Division Veterans, for just bonus to soldiers discharged from the service, based on length of service and compensation based on actual injuries; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

410. By Mr. McGLENNON: Petition of Kearny Lodge, No. 1050, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, favoring deportation of undesirable aliens; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

411. By Mr. MACGREGOR: Petition of department of labor, State of New York, opposing legislation which would place the Bureau of Mines in the control of the explosives industry; to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

412. Also, petition of Military Order of the Loyal Legion, favoring recognition of volunteer officers of the War of 1861–1865; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

413. Also, petition of Buffalo Trucking Association, favoring House bill 540 and Senate bill 7; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

414. By Mr. MOONEY: Petition of East Cleveland Post of the American Legion, pledging support to the Government in suppressing radical elements; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

415. Also, petition of Warren Lodge, No. 295, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, condemning activities of I. W. W. and Bolshevists; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

416. Also, petition of Local No. 1365, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, opposing antistrike provisions of Cummins bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

417. By Mr. O'CONNELL: Petition of the American Mining Congress, presenting resolutions adopted at its twenty-second annual convention; to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

418. By Mr. RAKER: Petition of Nevada County Development Association, of California, regarding the Japanese question and the need for prohibition for further immigration from that country; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

419. Also, petition of Lodge No. 289, Boiler Makers' of Dunsmuir, Calif., supporting House bill 10367; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

420. Also, petition of Red Bluff Chamber of Commerce, favoring plan for a system of national highways and appointment of a highway commission; to the Committee on Roads.

421. Also, petition of Grand Lodge No. 171, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, urging deportation of all undesirable aliens; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

422. Also, petition of Allied Council of the American Shoe and Leather Industries, opposing discrimination by Indian Government to tanners of the British Empire; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

423. By Mr. THOMPSON: Petition of Boiler Makers, Local No. 409, Van Wert, Ohio, opposing Cummins bill and supporting Sims bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

424. By Mr. YATES: Petition of Roger Casement Branch of Friends of Irish Freedom, by Thomas Bolger, secretary, McHenry, Ill., urging the support of the claims of the Irish republic to recognition by our Government; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

425. Also, petition of George N. Carlson, Waukegan, Ill., urging the early passage of House bill 4987, known as the Mason bill; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

426. Also, petition of Landis Lodge, No. 342, Brotherhood of Railway Clerks, Chicago, Ill., protesting against the Cummins bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

427. Also, petition of D. W. Williams, Chicago, Ill., urging the early passage of House bill 4987, the Mason bill; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, December 16, 1919.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we invoke Thy divine blessing upon us to-day as we come facing the responsibilities which press upon us, duties that are so far-reaching in their implications. We seek God's guidance and blessing that we may be qualified not only after the manner of men but men inspired by the spirit of God for these solemn responsibilities of life. Hear us and equip us for our duties to-day. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Friday, December 12, 1919, when, on request of Mr. JONES of Washington and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

Mr. GAY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Hale	McLean	Smith, Ga.
Bankhead	Harding	McNary	Smith, S. C.
Calder	Harris	Moses	Smoot
Capper	Harrison	Nelson	Spencer
Culberson	Henderson	New	Stanley
Cummins	Johnson, S. Dak.	Newberry	Sterling
Curtis	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Sutherland
Dial	Jones, Wash.	Nugent	Thomas
Dillingham	Kendrick	Overman	Townsend
Edge	Kenyon	Page	Trammell
Elkins	Keyes	Phipps	Walsh, Mont.
Fernald	King	Poindexter	Warren
Fletcher	Knox	Pomerene	Watson
France	La Follette	Ransdell	Wolcott
Frelinghuysen	Lenroot	Sheppard
Gay	McCormick	Sherman
Gronna	McKellar	Simmons

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I desire to announce that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] are absent on public business.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is detained by illness in his family.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] are absent on official business.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is detained from the Senate on public business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—TREATY OF PEACE.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the Washington Post of this morning contains an article in which reference is made to an alleged interview with myself on yesterday. The part to which I refer reads as follows:

> Senator WALSH of Montana, who was the chief reliance of the administration Senators throughout the heated debates on the treaty, said yesterday:
>
> "The Democratic Senators are inwardly seething over the position taken by the President. They are all wondering whether the statement was really written by the President or by some cheap politician assuming to speak the President's mind."

Referring to what purported to be a statement emanating from the White House a few days ago. Prominence is given to that part of the article by a reference to it in the large headlines of the article.

I acknowledge the high compliment paid me in the article by referring to me as "the chief reliance of the administration Senators" in connection with the treaty; but I desire to say that there is no foundation whatever for the assertion that I so expressed myself. I made no such statement to anybody, at any time, or at any place. Indeed, I did not even comment to anybody on the statement referred to, coming from the White House; and I will add that I know of no such sentiment or state of mind among my colleagues on this side of the Chamber.

I make this statement not so much in exoneration of myself as to apprise the public as to how reliable some of the reports in the press are.

DISTRIBUTION OF DOCUMENTS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmiting, pursuant to law, a statement showing the documents received and distributed by the Department of the Interior during the fiscal year 1919, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a certified copy of a joint resolution adopted by the Legislative Assembly of the State of North Dakota ratifying the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending the right of suffrage to women. The joint resolution will be printed in the RECORD and placed on the files of the Senate.

The joint resolution is as follows:

> Special session of the Sixteenth Legislative Assembly, State of North Dakota, begun and held at the capitol in the city of Bismarck, on Tuesday, the 25th day of November, 1919.
>
> S. B. No. 1. A joint resolution ratifying a proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States.
>
> Be it enacted by the Legislative Assembly of the State of North Dakota—
>
> Whereas the Sixty-sixth Congress of the United States of America, at the first session begun and held at the city of Washington on Monday, the 19th day of May, 1919, by a constitutional majority of two-thirds thereof, made and passed the following proposal to amend the Constitution of the United States of America in the following words, to wit: "Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution extending the right of suffrage to women."
>
> Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States.
>
> "Article —.
>
> "The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex.
>
> "Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation": Therefore be it
>
> Resolved by the Legislative Assembly of the State of North Dakota, duly convened, That the said foregoing proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America be, and the same is hereby, ratified by the Legislative Assembly of the State of North Dakota: And be it further
>
> Resolved, That certified copies of this joint resolution be forwarded by the governor of this State to the Secretary of State for the United States of America, at Washington, D. C., and to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the National Congress.
>
> Approved December 5, 5.45 p. m., 1919.
>
> LYNN J. FRAZIER,
> Governor.
> H. R. WOOD,
> President of the Senate.
> W. J. PRATER,
> Secretary of the Senate.
> L. L. STAN,
> Speaker of the House.
> GEO. A. TOTTEN, JR.,
> Chief Clerk of the House.

This certifies that the within bill originated in the Senate of the Sixteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of North Dakota, and is known on the records of that body as Senate bill No. 1.

W. J. FRATER, Secretary of the Senate.

Filed in this office at 2 o'clock p. m., this 8th day of December, 1919.

THOMAS HALL,
Secretary of State.
By MAURICE W. DUFFY,
Deputy.

Approved December 5, 5.45 p. m., 1919.

LYNN J. FRAZIER, Governor.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SIMMONS presented a petition of Local Lodge No. 1155, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of High Point, N. C., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the suppression of Bolshevism and the deportation of undesirable aliens; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the faculty of Mount Holyoke College, South Hadley, Mass., and of the Philomusian Club of Philadelphia, Pa., favoring the early ratification of the peace treaty, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a petition of the Mitts Branch of Women's Christian Temperance Union, of Port Huron, Mich., and a petition of the faculty of Adrian College, Adrian, Mich., praying for the immediate ratification of the peace treaty with certain reservations; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of William C. Stark Post No. 97, American Legion, of Adrian, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the protection of the country from undesirable aliens; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a petition of the Credit Men's Association of Grand Rapids, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for a budget system, which was referred to the special committee to devise a plan for a national budget system.

Mr. HARRISON presented a petition of Local Lodge No. 606, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of Biloxi, Miss., and a petition of Local Lodge No. 1120, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of Pascagoula, Miss., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the deportation of undesirable aliens; which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota presented petitions of sundry citizens of Spencer, Lake Preston, Lane, Cavour, Sisseton, and Wessington, and of the Young Men's Booster Association of Sioux Falls, all in the State of South Dakota, praying for the exemption of lyceum courses from the provisions of the so-called "luxury tax," which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the faculty of the Dakota Wesleyan University, Mitchell, S. Dak., praying for the early ratification of the treaty of peace with Germany, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAPPER presented petitions of sundry citizens of Enterprise, Peru, and Hill City, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the repeal of the so-called "luxury tax" on Chautauqua tickets, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of Local Union No. 356, Amalgamated Sheet Metal Workers International Alliance, of Parsons, Kans., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Esch railroad bill and favoring a two years' extension of Government operation of railroads, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of Local Lodge No. 1127, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of Great Bend, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the deportation of undesirable aliens, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. SUTHERLAND presented a petition of Local Lodge No. 282, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of Moundsville, W. Va., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the deportation of undesirable aliens, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask to have printed in the RECORD certain extracts, telegrams, resolutions, and letters which I have received relative to the ratification of the treaty of peace with Germany.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

METHODISTS ASK SENATE TO PASS PEACE TREATY.

LAKELAND, December 11.

Pursuant to previous announcements, the seventy-sixth session of the Florida annual conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South met in the Methodist Church here yesterday morning at 9 o'clock, Bishop Warren A. Candler, of Atlanta, Ga., presiding.

The following resolutions, offered by Edward F. Ley, D. B. Sweat, W. A. Myers, and C. Fred Blackburn, after many amendments were defeated and live speeches were made, were adopted:

"Whereas the Senate of the United States has given much time to the consideration of a treaty of peace prepared by the Hon. Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States, to the Senate for adoption; and

"Whereas the unsettled conditions of our own Nation, as well as the nations of the world in general, are in a measure due to the lack of the adoption of a treaty of peace by our Government; and

"Whereas the text of the treaty submitted by Mr. Wilson is as nearly complete and satisfactory as any that we believe is possible at this time: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That this conference, representing a constituency of 40,000 citizens of our Commonwealth, respectfully but urgently request the Senate of the United States to adopt, as early as possible, the peace treaty submitted by Mr. Wilson, without material amendments or reservations.

"Resolved, That the secretary of this conference wire immediately a copy of these resolutions to President Woodrow Wilson and Vice President, the Hon. THOMAS R. MARSHALL, President of the Senate, and to the two Senators from Florida, the Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER and Hon. PARK M. TRAMMELL."

—

[From the Tampa Morning Tribune.]

THE APPEAL FOR THE TREATY.

The case with regard to the treaty and the league of nations covenant is well put in a letter written by a Newport (R. I.) man in the form of an address to the United States Senate. He presents to the Senators certain facts which they appear to have overlooked in their desire to serve prejudice.

Here is what he has to say to them:

"There are 8,000,000 dead men watching you every moment and listening to your every word. Picture these men as ranged around you while you talk. Imagine the Senate Chamber to be surrounded by ascending tiers of seats in circles that ever rise until 8,000,000 dead young men are seated and watching you with their sightless eyes.

"There they are, gentlemen. You can not escape from them. There they are, all dead and all young. Eight million beautiful young men, the pick of the human race, and every one of them a corpse. Yet every one of these beings, with sunken eyes, is gazing at you, calling to you, raising his bony hands in appeal."

The idea of the new fellowship of peoples as contained in the league of nations is too fine a thing to be cast lightly aside. The votes on the league at the last session showed that two-thirds of the Senate, with a clear sentiment of the country behind them, are eager that the United States should accept the treaty and covenant. They realize that the peace of the world can not be preserved except by the mutual trust, cooperation, and good faith of America and Europe. They look upon the league as an effort to do what all sane peoples should desire and do desire. They should give it a fair and earnest trial.

—

NEW YORK, N. Y., December 15, 1919.

Senator DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Washington, D. C.:

To the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES AND TO THE MEMBERS OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

GENTLEMEN: The board of directors of the Merchants' Association of New York, believing that there is a moral and an economic obligation resting upon the United States of America promptly to act upon the treaty of peace, which has been under consideration for many months, presents this petition. With the utmost earnestness we respectfully appeal to you to make such mutual concessions as will permit an immediate ratification of the peace treaty, with such reservations as will, either now or later, permit our participation in a league of nations without impairing the safety or the sovereign powers of the United States. We therefore call on you, Mr. President, to resubmit the draft of the proposed treaty to the Senate, in order that its immediate further consideration may be imposed upon that body. We call upon you, gentlemen of the Senate, promptly to act on the peace treaty, with such reservations as will now or later permit our participation in a league of nations without surrender of the sovereign powers of the United States. No pride of opinion, no desire for partisan benefit, should prevent or further delay them until concessions, which apparently alone will bring formal ratification of peace, and thus permit the concentration of Congress and our people upon definite measures necessary to aid our own and European recovery from war conditions.

Respectfully submitted,

THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF THE MERCHANTS' ASSOCIATION OF NEW YORK,
By WILLIAM FELLOWS MORGAN, President.

—

AMERICAN SUPPLY & MACHINERY MANUFACTURERS' ASSOCIATION,
OFFICE OF SECRETARY TREASURER, 4106 WOOLWORTH BUILDING.
New York, December 12, 1919.

To the Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER.

Resolution unanimously passed by our officers, executive committee, and advisory board in special session at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, New York, December 9.

DEAR SIR: As the American Supply & Machinery Manufacturers' Association is purely a business association and avoids even the appearance of partisanship in politics, it is thought that an expression of judgment that includes the desires of both our Republican and Democratic members as to your current action upon the treaty with Germany and the league of nations will have your respectful and serious consideration.

Our industry, as you doubtless realize, is one of the key industries in the restoration of industrial life throughout the world. Its prosperity is not only essential to a quick return of industry to normal conditions, but in view of the loss of man power by warfare, machinery must multiply the efficiency of labor if mankind is to be properly fed, clothed, and sheltered.

We note with alarm the serious decrease in production and the tendency of the peoples of the world to live for and unto themselves. We note the arrogance of the rulers of Germany and, on the other hand, the pleadings of our recent allies and the weak nations for help and protection against policies that make for war.

It is the judgment of our people, and, we believe, all true Americans, that a treaty be signed without delay. We ask that among our statesmen in the Senate a spirit of concession prevail. We say to you in all seriousness that disaster will follow a further delay caused either by obstinacy of opinion or partisanship.

As the effects of signing are not unalterable, and as immediate action is necessary to save the industry of the country, we, the Republicans and Democrats in this great industry, hereby respectfully voice our demand for a signed treaty.

GEO. T. BAILEY, President.

Mr. FLETCHER. I also present resolutions adopted by St. Johns Post No. 37, American Legion, of St. Augustine, Fla., which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CITY OF ST. AUGUSTINE,
St. Augustine, Fla., December 11, 1919.

Senator D. U. FLETCHER,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Inclosed find copy of resolution No. 135 which is self-explanatory. The city administration of the city of St. Augustine, Fla., appreciates your supporting any legislation that will assist in upholding law and order of our land and suppress any unlawful act or acts that may be committed by those inclined to be un-American.

Very truly, yours,

EUGENE MASTERS,
City Manager.

Resolution 135. Introduced by Commissioner Lopez.

Whereas St. Johns Post, No. 37, the American Legion, has requested that the city of St. Augustine, Fla., express itself to our United States Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States relative to rigid legislation in reference to the un-American acts of the Industrial Workers of the World who have been disseminating propaganda of the most anarchistic type and who have counseled acts of violence and disregard for the law; and

Whereas the city commission of the city of St. Augustine, Fla., mindful of the history of our country and of the trials through which our Government has gone, and knowing full well that these United States can only exist upon principles founded upon the firm basis of loyalty, justice, and patriotism: Therefore be it

Resolved, That our honorable United States Senators and our honorable Representatives in the lower House of the Congress be, and they are hereby, urged and requested to vote for, support, and uphold their fellow statesmen in the battle for Americanism which is being now waged, and to make every effort to secure the passage of rigid laws for the suppression of crime, especially those grades of crime which are aimed at the very heart of free government, free institutions, and the enjoyment of liberty; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be mailed to each of our Representatives in the Congress, a copy to the local post of the American Legion, and a copy be handed the press of our city.

Passed in open session of the commission this 2d day of December, A. D. 1919.

H. W. DAVIS, Acting Mayor.

Attest:
C. G. OLDFATHER,
City Auditor and Clerk.

[Seal of the city of St. Augustine.]

FRANCIS S. PEABODY.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to present a telegram from 400 coal dealers in Chicago protesting against the appointment of Francis S. Peabody on the commission to settle the wage scale of soft-coal miners. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD but not read. It is very short.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., December 12, 1919.

Senator L. Y. SHERMAN,
The Northumberland, Washington, D. C.:

Four hundred independent coal dealers of Chicago protest against the appointment of Francis S. Peabody as a representative on the commission to be appointed by the President to settle the wage scale of the United Mine Workers, for the reason that we do not believe the public will get a fair deal, as George W. Reed, local fuel administrator appointed by Dr. Garfield as his representative, has discriminated against the independent coal companies in Chicago, he being vice president of the Peabody Coal Co. at Chicago and using his office to further the interests of coal companies dominated by the Peabody Coal Co.

WM. O'ROURKE,
Secretary Independent Coal Dealers' Organization Committee of Chicago.

REGULATION OF STREET TRAFFIC IN WASHINGTON CITY.

Mr. SHERMAN. I also ask unanimous consent to present for the 12th of December, the 24 hours ending at that time, the usual list of personal injuries to persons run over by automobiles in the city of Washington. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WOMAN IS FELLED BY AUTO AND KILLED—MARY JACKSON, COLORED, DIES AT HOSPITAL—BABY BARELY ESCAPES DEATH.

[From the Evening Star, Dec. 12.]

"A fatal traffic accident occurred at Twenty-fourth and L Streets last night about 7.45 o'clock, a colored woman about 55 years old, giving her name as Mary Jackson, being knocked down by an automobile and so badly injured that she died at Emergency Hospital at 3.15 o'clock this morning.

"Andrew J. Parker, 426 Eleventh Street NE., and Mrs. Maud Parker, his wife, were occupants of the automobile. It is stated that the automobile was going east on L Street, and that the colored woman, walking north on Twenty-fourth Street, stepped directly in front of the moving car, the driver being unable to bring the vehicle to a stop in time to prevent the accident.

MOTORIST GIVES FIRST AID.

"Quickly stopping his automobile, Mr. Parker rendered first aid and took the sufferer to Columbia Hospital. Later she was transferred to Emergency Hospital, where she died. She managed to tell hospital attendants that her name was Mary Jackson, but was unable to give her address before lapsing into unconsciousness.

"Death resulted from an injury to her head, police reported. Mr. Parker explained to the police the circumstances under which the accident occurred and will appear at an inquest at the morgue this afternoon.

BABY BARELY ESCAPES DEATH.

"Scores of pedestrians at Fourteenth and G Streets about 4.30 o'clock yesterday afternoon witnessed a traffic accident in which Francis R. Bell, jr., 2 years old, 1819 G Street, narrowly escaped death. The little fellow, accompanied by his parents, was being pushed in a perambulator, when an Army motor truck suddenly appeared and struck the outfit.

"The child, it was feared, had been crushed by the heavy vehicle, but parents and spectators quickly learned that he had only received slight bruises and was shocked. He was taken to Emergency Hospital. J. L. Morton, 811 Florida Avenue, was driver of the truck.

OTHER COLLISIONS.

"A collision between the automobiles of Donald Frenzel, Fairfax, Va., and Carl Bell, 1248 Twenty-seventh Street, occurred at Thirty-first and M Streets shortly after 2 o'clock this morning. The Virginian's car was badly damaged, but its occupant escaped injury.

"Harry Fowler, 14 years old, 314 Tenth Street SE., rode his bicycle against an automobile at Pennsylvania Avenue and Eighth Street SE. yesterday afternoon. His wheel was damaged, but he was not hurt.

"Automobiles of H. L. Rust, 912 Fifteenth Street, and L. E. Hutchinson, 1814 Fourteenth Street, collided at Fifteenth and T Streets yesterday afternoon and were badly damaged."

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 3422) authorizing the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to refund any amount imposed as a penalty for failure to pay income tax within a specified time, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Finance; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 683. An act for the relief of William E. Johnson (Rept. No. 330);

H. R. 1812. An act making an appropriation to compensate James M. Moore for damages sustained while in the service of the Government of the United States (Rept. No. 331);

H. R. 5348. An act for the relief of Mrs. Thomas McGovern (Rept. No. 332); and

H. R. 5665. An act for the relief of Carlow Avellina (Rept. No. 333).

GEORGE B. GATES.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Claims, reported the following resolution (S. Res. 262):

Resolved, That the bill (S. 2675) entitled "A bill to compensate George B. Gates for the infringement of his letters patent by the United States," now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911; and the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

SALARIES OF FIREMEN IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. CALDER. At the special session of Congress a bill was passed readjusting the pay of policemen in the city of Washington. There is a bill which goes with that, another measure readjusting the pay of the firemen of the city of Washington. I have been directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to report back favorably with an amendment the bill (H. R. 10137) to amend an act entitled "An act to classify the officers and members of the fire department of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1906, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 329) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President——

Mr. CALDER. I think it will not take more than two or three minutes. I will withdraw the consideration of the bill if it takes more than five minutes.

Mr. THOMAS. It was tacitly understood that the adjournment was had for the purpose of giving the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] an opportunity to call up the conference report on the banking bill, and I think we should observe that understanding. I therefore object to the consideration of this bill this morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

WHITE RIVER BRIDGE, ARKANSAS.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 3371) authorizing Gordon N. Peay, jr., his heirs and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge and approaches thereto across the White River, and I submit a report (No. 334) thereon. I direct the attention of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] to the measure.

Mr. KIRBY. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Gordon N. Peay, jr., his heirs and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge and approaches thereto across the White River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, within or near the limits of the town of Des Arc, in the county of Prairie, in the State of Arkansas, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred, as follows:

By Mr. KNOX:

A bill (S. 3556) for the relief of Frank Schoble, jr.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HARRISON:

A bill (S. 3557) granting a pension to Charles B. Crawford; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. OVERMAN:

A bill (S. 3558) authorizing the establishment of a forest experiment station at Asheville, N. C.; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry; and

A bill (S. 3559) for erecting a suitable memorial to Sir Walter Raleigh; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. FERNALD:

A bill (S. 3560) granting a pension to Russell S. Beckwith (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HARDING:

A bill (S. 3561) granting an increase of pension to John D. Halbert; and

A bill (S. 3562) granting an increase of pension to Harry Coyan; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. POINDEXTER:

A bill (S. 3563) extending the period of limitations for the commencement of actions for the punishment of violators of the draft act approved May 18, 1917, and amendments thereto; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMENDMENT TO RAILROAD CONTROL BILL.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3288) further to regulate commerce among the States and with foreign nations, and to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

LUDWIG C. A. K. MARTENS.

Mr. KENYON submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 263), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Whereas one Ludwig C. A. K. Martens claims to be an ambassador to the United States from the Russian Soviet Government; and

Whereas according to newspaper reports he refuses to answer certain questions before the Lusk Investigating Committee in the city of New York, a committee appointed to investigate propaganda against this Government, on the ground that he is such ambassador and entitled to diplomatic privileges; and

Whereas said Martens has headquarters in the city of New York and is alleged to be directing propaganda against this Government; and

Whereas according to this testimony before said Lusk committee he came to this country as a German citizen and is a member of the Communist Party, pledged to overthrow capitalistic systems of government the world over; and

Whereas said Martens, according to his said testimony, regards this Government as a capitalistic government: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations is hereby authorized and directed, through the full committee or through any subcommittee thereof, to investigate as speedily as possible the status of said Martens, what alleged government or power in Europe he represents; what, if any, recognition of any kind has been accorded him by this Government; whether or not he is an alien enemy; what propaganda, if any, he is carrying on for the overthrow of governments, and all facts and circumstances relating to his activities in this country and his alleged diplomatic representation, and make report to the Senate of such findings.

The said committee is hereby empowered to sit and act at such time and place as it may deem necessary; to require, by subpœna or otherwise, the attendance of witnesses, the production of books, papers, and documents; to employ stenographers, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page. The chairman of the committee, or any member thereof, may administer oaths to witnesses. Subpœnas for witnesses shall be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee or subcommittee thereof. Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said committee or any subcommittee thereof, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any question pertinent to the investigation heretofore authorized, shall be held to the penalties provided by section 102 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The expense thereof shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate on vouchers ordered by said committee, signed by the chairman thereof and approved by the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

HISTORY OF THE WASHINGTON NAVY YARD.

Mr. STANLEY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 264), which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be reprinted and extended to date Senate Document No. 22, 1889, "A History of the Navy Yard, Washington, D. C."

HAMILTON V. KENTUCKY DISTILLERIES & WAREHOUSE CO.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and to have printed as a public document the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in the so-called war-time prohibition case, being the case of Hamilton against Kentucky Distilleries & Warehouse Co.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The opinion is as follows:

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

(Nos. 589 and 602.—October term, 1919.)

589. Elwood Hamilton, Collector of Internal Revenue, appellant, v. Kentucky Distilleries & Warehouse Co. Appeal from the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Kentucky.

602. Alphons Dryfoos, Eugene Blum, and Eugene Bascho, appellants, v. William H. Edwards, Collector of Internal Revenue. Appeal from the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York.

[Dec. 15, 1919.]

Mr Justice Brandeis delivered the opinion of the court.

The armistice with Germany was signed November 11, 1918. Thereafter Congress passed and, on November 21, 1918, the President approved the war-time prohibition act (ch. 212, 40 Stat. 1045, 1046), which provides as follows:

"That after June 30, 1919, until the conclusion of the present war and thereafter until the termination of demobilization, the date of which shall be determined and proclaimed by the President of the United States, for the purpose of conserving the man power of the Nation, and to increase efficiency in the production of arms, munitions, ships, food, and clothing for the Army and Navy, it shall be unlawful to sell for beverage purposes any distilled spirits, and during said time no distilled spirits held in bond shall be removed therefrom for beverage purposes except for export. * * *"

On October 10, 1919, the Kentucky Distilleries & Warehouse Co., owner of distillery warehouses and of whisky therein, brought in the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Kentucky a suit against Hamilton, collector of internal revenue for that district, alleging that the above act was void or had become inoperative and praying that he be enjoined from interfering, by reason of that act, with the usual process of withdrawal, distribution, and sale of the whisky in bond. The case was heard before the district judge on plaintiff's motion for a preliminary injunction and defendant's motion to dismiss. A decision without opinion was rendered for the plaintiff; and, the defendant declining to plead further, a final decree was entered granting a permanent injunction in accordance with the prayer of the bill. A similar suit seeking like relief was brought on October 29, 1918, by Dryfoos, Blum & Co. in the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York against Edwards, collector for that district. That case was heard on November 5 before the district judge on like motions for a preliminary injunction and to dismiss. An opinion was filed November 14, 1919, holding the act in force, and on the following day a final decree was entered dismissing the bill.

The essential facts in the two cases differ in this: In the Kentucky case the whisky was stored in a distillery warehouse; the plaintiff was the maker of the whisky; had owned it prior to the passage of the act; and had, since June 30, 1919, paid the revenue tax on part of it. In the New York case the liquors were in general and special bonded warehouses; the plaintiffs were jobbers, and it does not appear when they became the owners of the liquors. Both cases come here by direct appeal under section 238 of the Judicial Code, were argued on the same day, and may be disposed of together. Four contentions are made in support of the relief prayed for: (1) That the act was void when enacted because it violated the fifth amendment; (2) that it became void before these suits were brought by reason of the passing of the war emergency; (3) that it was abrogated or repealed by the eighteenth amendment; (4) that by its own terms it expired before the commencement of these suits. These contentions will be considered in their order.

First. Is the act void because it takes private property for public purposes without compensation in violation of the fifth amendment? The contention is this: The Constitution did not confer police power upon Congress. Its power to regulate the liquor traffic must therefore be sought for in the implied war powers; that is, the power "to make all laws necessary and proper for carrying into execution" the war powers expressly granted. (Art. I, sec. 8, clause 18.) Congress might under this implied power temporarily regulate the sale of liquor and, if reasonably necessary, forbid its sale in order to guard and promote the efficiency of the men composing the Army and the Navy and of the workers engaged in supplying them with arms, munitions, transportation, and supplies. (McKinley v. United States, 249 U. S., 397, 399.) But the exercise of the war powers is, except in respect to property destroyed by military operations (United States v. Pacific Railroad, 120 U. S., 227, 239), subject to the fifth amendment (United States v. Russell, 13 Wall., 623, 627). The severe restriction imposed by the act upon the disposition of liquors amounts to a taking of property; and being uncompensated would, at least as applied to liquors acquired before the passage of the act, exceed even the restriction held to be admissible under the broad police powers possessed by the States. Therefore, since it fails to make provision for compensation, which in every other instance Congress made when authorizing the taking or use of property for war purposes,[1] it is void. Such is the argument of the plaintiffs below.

That the United States lacks the police power, and that this was reserved to the States by the tenth amendment, is true. But it is none the less true that when the United States exerts any of the powers conferred upon it by the Constitution, no valid objection can be based upon the fact that such exercise may be attended by the same incidents which attend the exercise by a State of its police power, or that it may tend to accomplish a similar purpose. Lottery Case (188 U. S., 321, 357); McCray v. United States (195 U. S., 27); Hipolite Egg Co. v. United States (220 U. S., 45, 58); Hoke v. United States (227 U. S., 308, 323); Seven Cases v. United States (239 U. S., 510, 515); United States v. Doremus (249 U. S., 86, 93–94). The war power of the United States, like its other powers and like the police power of the States, is subject to applicable constitutional limitations (Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall., 2, 121–127; Monongahela Navigation Co. v. United States, 148 U. S., 312, 336; United States v. Joint Traffic Association, 171 U. S., 505, 571; McCray v. United States, 195 U. S., 27, 61; United States v. Cress, 243 U. S., 316, 326); but the fifth amendment imposes in this respect no greater limitation upon the national power than does the fourteenth amendment upon State power. (In re Kemmler, 136 U. S., 436, 448; Carroll v. Greenwich Insurance Co., 199 U. S., 401, 410.) If the nature and conditions of a restriction upon the use or disposition of property is such that a State could, under the police power, impose it consistently with the fourteenth amendment without making compensation, then the United States may for a permitted purpose impose a like restriction consistently with the fifth amendment without making compensation; for prohibition of the liquor traffic is conceded to be an appropriate means of increasing our war efficiency.

There was no appropriation of the liquor for public purposes. The war-time prohibition act fixed a period of seven months and nine days from its passage during which liquors could be disposed of free from any restriction imposed by the Federal Government. Thereafter, until the end of the war and the termination of mobilization, it permits an unrestricted sale for export and, within the United States, sales for other than beverage purposes. The uncompensated restriction upon the disposition of liquors imposed by this act is of a nature far less severe than the restrictions upon the use of property acquired before the enactment of the prohibitory law which were held to be permissible in cases arising under the fourteenth amendment. (Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S., 623, 668; Kidd v. Pearson, 128 U. S., 1, 23.) The question whether an absolute prohibition of sale could be applied by a State to liquor acquired before the enactment of the prohibitory law has been raised by this court but not answered, because unnecessary to a decision. (Bartemeyer v. Iowa, 18 Wall., 129, 133; Beer Co. v. Massachusetts, 97 U. S., 25, 32–33; Eberle v. Michigan, 232 U. S., 700, 706; Barbour v. Georgia, 249 U. S., 454, 459.) See, however, Mugler v. Kansas, supra, pages 623, 625, 657. But no reason appears why a State statute, which postpones its effective date long enough to enable those engaged in the business to dispose of stocks on hand at the date of its enactment, should be obnoxious to the fourteenth amendment; or why such a Federal law should be obnoxious to the fifth amendment. We can not say that seven months and nine days was not a reasonable time within which to dispose of all liquors in bonded warehouses on November 21, 1918. The amount then in storage was materially less than was usually carried;[2] because no such liquor could be lawfully made in America under the Lever food and fuel control act (August 10, 1917, c. 53, sec. 15, 40 Stat., 276, 282) after September 9, 1917. And if, as is suggested, the liquors remaining in bond November 21, 1918, were not yet sufficiently ripened or aged to permit them to be advantageously disposed of within the limited period of seven months and nine days thereafter, the resulting inconvenience to the owner, attributable to the inherent qualities of the property itself, can not be regarded as a taking of property in the constitutional sense. (Clark Distilling Co. v. Western Maryland Ry. Co., 242 U. S., 311, 332.)

Second. Did the act become void by the passing of the war emergency before the commencement of these suits? It is conceded that the mere cessation of hostilities under the armistice did not abridge or suspend the power of Congress to resort to prohibition of the liquor traffic as a means of increasing our war efficiency; that the support and care of the Army and Navy during demobilization was within the war emergency; and that, hence, the act was valid when passed. The contention is that between the date of its enactment and the commencement of these suits it had become evident that hostilities would not be resumed; that demobilization had been effected; that thereby the war emergency was removed; and that when the emergency ceased the statute became void.

To establish that the emergency has passed, statements and acts of the President and of other executive officers are adduced; some of them antedating the enactment of the statute here in question. There are statements of the President to the effect that the war has ended[3] and peace has come;[4] that certain war agencies and activities should be discontinued;[5] that our enemies are impotent to renew hostilities[6] and that the objects of the act here in question have been satisfied in the demobilization of the Army and Navy.[7] It is shown that many war-time activities have been suspended; that vast quantities of war materials have been disposed of; that trade with Germany has been resumed; and that the censorship of postal, telegraphic, and wire communications has been removed.[8] But we have also the fact that since these statements were made and these acts were done, Congress, on October 28, 1919, passed over the President's veto the national prohibition act which, in making further provision for the administration of the war-time prohibition act, treats the war as continuing and demobilization

[1] War acts authorizing the seizure or requisition of property:
Mar. 4, 1917, ch. 180, 39 Stat. 1168, 1193, July 1, 1918, ch. 113, 40 Stat. 634, 651, factories, ships, and war materials; June 15, 1917, ch. 29, 40 Stat. 182, 183; Apr. 22, 1918, ch. 62, 40 Stat. 535; Nov. 4, 1918, ch. 201, 40 Stat. 1020, street railroads, equipment, etc., and the acquisition to title to lands, plants, etc.; Aug. 10, 1917, ch. 53, 40 Stat. 276, 279 (food-control act), foods, fuels, factories, packing houses, coal mines, coal supplies, etc.; Mar. 21, 1918, ch. 25, 40 Stat. 451, railroads; May 16, 1918, ch. 74, 40 Stat. 550, 551, June 4, 1918, ch. 90, 40 Stat. 593, houses, buildings, properties, etc., in District of Columbia; July 18, 1918, ch. 157, 40 Stat. 913, 915, ships; July 16, 1918, ch. 154, 40 Stat. 904, telephone and telegraph systems; Oct. 5, 1918, ch. 181, 40 Stat. 1069, 1010, mines, mineral lands, etc.
See also act of June 3, 1916, ch. 134 (39 Stat. 166, 213) for the mobilization of industries, which authorizes the seizure of munition plants and provides that the compensation therefor shall be "fair and just," and the act of Mar. 4, 1917, ch. 180 (39 Stat. 1168, 1169), authorizing the acquisition of aeroplane patents by condemnation, for which $1,000,000 was appropriated.

[2] The amount of distilled spirits of all kinds in bonded warehouses June 30, 1919, was 72,358,151.1 gallons as compared with 282,036,460.2, June 30, 1914; 253,668,341.3 gallons, June 30, 1915; 232,402,878.3 gallons, June 30, 1916: 194,832,682.6 gallons, June 30, 1917; 158,959,264.5 gallons, June 30, 1918. Report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for 1919, page 173. The following explanation is given by the commissioner, page 51, why more was not withdrawn: "The high rates of tax on spirits, fermented liquors and wines which were provided in the bill subsequently enacted into law as the revenue act of 1918, prompted many dealers to make heavy purchases of these commodities prior to the passage of the act and, as a consequence of this action on the part of the dealers as well as of the expansion of prohibition territory throughout the United States, the withdrawals from bonded warehouses materially declined after the passage of the act."

[3] Address to Congress, Official U. S. Bulletin, Nov. 11, 1918, p. 5.

[4] Thanksgiving proclamation, Official U. S. Bulletin, Nov. 18, 1918, p. 1.

[5] Address to Congress, Dec. 2, 1918, Official U. S. Bulletin, Dec. 2, 1918, p. 6.

[6] Armistice commemoration proclamation, Nov. 11, 1919.

[7] Veto message, Oct. 27, 1919, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Oct. 27, 1919, p. 8063.

[8] U. S. Official Bulletin, Nov. 12, 1918, p. 3; Nov. 22, 1918, p. 1; Nov. 27, 1918, p. 7; Dec. 12, 1918, p. 4; Dec. 20, 1918, p. 4; Dec. 30, 1918, p. 7; U. S. Bulletin, Feb. 27, 1919, p. 6; May 8, 1919; May 12, 1919, p. 14; Oct. 20, 1919, p. 17.

as incomplete; that the Senate, on November 19, 1919, refused to ratify the treaty of peace with Germany;[1] that under the provisions of the Lever Act the President resumed, on October 30, 1919, the control of the fuel supply which he had relinquished partly on January 31, 1919, and partly on February 20, 1919;[2] that he is still operating the railroads, of which control had been taken as a war measure; and that on November 18, 1919, he vetoed Senate bill 641, because it diminished that control,[3] that pursuant to the act of March 4, 1919 (c. 125, 40 Stat., 1348), he continues to control, by means of the Food Administration Grain Corporation, the supply of grain and wheat flour; that through the United States Sugar Equalization Board (Inc.), he still regulates the price of sugar; that in his message to Congress on December 2, 1919, he urgently recommended the further extension for six months of the powers of the Food Administration; that as Commander in Chief he still keeps a part of the Army in enemy occupied territory and another part in Siberia; and that he has refrained from issuing the proclamation declaring the termination of demobilization for which this act provides.

The present contention may be stated thus: That notwithstanding the act was a proper exercise of the war power of Congress at the date of its approval and contains its own period of limitation—"until the conclusion of the present war and thereafter until the termination of demobilization"—the progress of events since that time had produced so great a change of conditions and there now is so clearly a want of necessity for conserving the man power of the Nation, for increased efficiency in the production of arms, munitions, and supplies, that the prohibition of the sale of distilled spirits for beverage purposes can no longer be enforced, because it would be beyond the constitutional authority of Congress in the exercise of the war power to impose such a prohibition under present circumstances. Assuming that the implied power to enact such a prohibition must depend not upon the existence of a technical state of war, terminable only with the ratification of a treaty of peace or a proclamation of peace (U. S. v. Anderson, 9 Wall. 56, 70; The Protector, 12 Wall. 700, 702; Hijo v. U. S., 194 U. S. 315, 323), but upon some actual emergency or necessity arising out of the war or incident to it, still, as was said in Stewart v. Kahn, 11 Wall. 493, 507, "The power is not limited to victories in the field and the dispersion of the [insurgent] forces. It carries with it inherently the power to guard against the immediate renewal of the conflict and to remedy the evils which have arisen from its rise and progress."

No principle of our constitutional law is more firmly established than that this court may not, in passing upon the validity of a statute, inquire into the motives of Congress (U. S. v. Des Moines Navigation Co., 142 U. S. 510, 544; McCray v. U. S., 195 U. S. 27, 53–59; Weber v. Freed, 239 U. S. 325, 330; Dakota Central Telephone Co. v. South Dakota, 250 U. S. 163, 184). Nor may the court inquire into the wisdom of the legislation. (McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheaton 316, 421; Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheaton 1, 197; Brushaber v. Union Pacific Railroad Co., 240 U. S. 1, 25; Rast v. Van Deman & Lewis, 240 U. S. 342, 357.) Nor may it pass upon the necessity for the exercise of a power possessed, since the possible abuse of a power is not an argument against its existence. (Lottery Case, 188 U. S. 321, 363.)

That a statute valid when enacted may cease to have validity owing to a change of circumstances has been recognized, with respect to State laws, in several rate cases. (Minnesota Rate Cases, 230 U. S. 352, 473; Missouri Rate Cases, 230 U. S. 474, 508; Lincoln Gas Co. v. Lincoln, 250 U. S. 256, 268.) That the doctrine is applicable to acts of Congress was conceded arguendo in Perrin v. U. S., 232 U. S. 478, 486; and Johnson v. Gearlds, 234 U. S. 422, 446. In each of these cases Congress had prohibited the introduction of liquor into lands inhabited by Indians, without specified limit of time; in one case the prohibition was in terms perpetual; in the other it was to continue "until otherwise provided by Congress." In both cases it was contended that the constitutional power of Congress over the subject matter necessarily was limited to what was reasonably essential to the protection of the Indians. In the Perrin case it was contended (p. 482) that the power was transcended because the prohibition embraced territory greatly in excess of what the situation reasonably required, and because its operation was not confined to a designated period reasonable in duration but apparently was intended to be perpetual. In Johnson v. Gearlds the contention was (p. 442) that a prohibition originally valid had become obsolete by reason of changes in the character of the territory included in it and the status of the Indians therein. In both cases the court, while assuming that since the power to impose a prohibition of this character was incident to the presence of the Indians and their status as wards of the Government and did not extend beyond what was reasonably essential to their protection, it followed that a prohibition valid in the beginning would become inoperative when in regular course the Indians affected were completely emancipated from Federal guardianship and control, nevertheless held that the courts would not be justified in declaring that the restriction either was originally invalid or had become obsolete if any considerable number of Indians remained wards of the Government within the prohibited territory. In each case the decision rested upon the ground that the question what was reasonably essential to the protection of the Indians was one primarily for the consideration of the law-making body; that Congress was invested with a wide discretion; and that its action, unless purely arbitrary, must be accepted and given full effect by the courts.

Conceding, then, for the purposes of the present case, that the question of the continued validity of the war prohibition act under the changed circumstances depends upon whether it appears that there is no longer any necessity for the prohibition of the sale of distilled spirits for beverage purposes, it remains to be said that on obvious grounds every reasonable intendment must be made in favor of its continuing validity, the prescribed period of limitation not having arrived; that to Congress in the exercise of its powers, not least the war power, upon which the very life of the Nation depends, a wide latitude of discretion must be accorded; and that it would require a clear case to justify a court in declaring that such an act, passed for such a purpose, had ceased to have force because the power of Congress no longer continued. In view of facts of public knowledge, some of which have been referred to, that the treaty of peace had not yet been concluded, that the railways are still under national control by virtue of the war powers, that other war activities have not been brought to a close, and that it can not even be said that the man power of the Nation has been restored to a peace footing, we are unable to conclude that the act has ceased to be valid.

Third. Was the act repealed by the adoption of the eighteenth amendment? By the express terms of the amendment the prohibition thereby imposed becomes effective after one year from its ratification. Ratification was proclaimed on January 29, 1919 (40 Stat., pt. 2, appendix). The contention is that as the amendment became on its adoption an integral part of the Constitution its implications are as binding as its language; that in postponing the effective date of the prohibition the amendment impliedly guaranteed to manufacturers and dealers in intoxicating liquors a year of grace; and that not only was Congress prohibited thereby from enacting meanwhile new prohibitory legislation, but also that the then existing restriction imposed by the war-time prohibition act was removed. (See Narragansett Brewing Co. v. Baker and O'Shaunessy, U. S. D. Ct. R. I., Nov. 12, 1919.)

The eighteenth amendment, with its implications, if any, is binding not only in times of peace but in war. If there be found by implication a denial to Congress of the right to forbid before its effective date any prohibition of the liquor traffic, that denial must have been operative immediately upon the adoption of the amendment, although at that time demobilization of the Army and the Navy was far from complete. If the amendment effected such a denial of power, then it would have done so equally had hostilities continued flagrant or been renewed. Furthermore, the amendment is binding alike upon the United States and the individual States. If it guarantees a year of immunity from interference by the Federal Government with the liquor traffic, even to the extent of abrogating restrictions existing at the time of its adoption, it is difficult to see why the guaranty does not extend also to immunity from interference by the individual States, with like results also as to then existing State legislation. The contention is clearly unsound.

Fourth. Did the prohibition imposed by the act expire by limitation before the commencement of these suits? The period therein prescribed is "until the conclusion of the present war and thereafter until the termination of demobilization, the date of which shall be determined and proclaimed by the President of the United States." It is contended both that the war has been concluded and that the demobilization has terminated.

In the absence of specific provisions to the contrary, the period of war has been held to extend to the ratification of the treaty of peace or the proclamation of peace. (Hijo v. United States, 194 U. S., 315, 323; The Protector, 12 Wall.,

[1] CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Nov. 19, 1919, p. 9321.
[2] U. S. Bulletin, Nov. 10, 1919, p. 9; U. S. Official Bulletin, Jan. 18, 1919, p. 1.
[3] CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Nov. 19, 1919, p. 9323.

700, 702; United States v. Anderson, 9 Wall., 56, 70.) From the fact that other statutes concerning war activities contain each a specific provision for determining when it shall cease to be operative,[1] and from the alleged absence of such a provision here, it is argued that the term "conclusion of the war" should not be given its ordinary legal meaning; that instead it should be construed as the time when actual hostilities ceased; or when the treaty of peace was signed at Versailles on June 28, 1919, by the American and German representatives, or, more generally, when the actual war emergencies ceased by reason of our complete victory and the disarmament of the enemy coupled with the demobilization of our Army and the closing of war activities; or when the declared purpose of the act of "conserving the man power of the Nation, and to increase efficiency in the production of arms, munitions, ships, food, and clothing for the Army and Navy" shall have been fully satisfied. But there is nothing in the words used to justify such a construction. "Conclusion of the war" clearly did not mean cessation of hostilities, because the act was approved 19 days after hostilities had ceased upon the signing of the armistice. Nor may we assume that Congress intended by the phrase to designate the date when the treaty of peace should be signed at Versailles or elsewhere by German and American representatives, since by the Constitution a treaty is only a proposal until approved by the Senate. Furthermore, to construe "conclusion of the war" as meaning the actual termination of war activities would leave wholly uncertain the date when the act would cease to be operative, whereas Congress evinced here, as in other war statutes, a clear purpose that the date of expiration should be definitely fixed. The reason why this was not directed to be done by a proclamation of peace is made clear by the use of the word "thereafter." It was expected that the "conclusion of the war" would precede the termination of demobilization. Congress therefore provided that the time when the act ceased to be operative should be fixed by the President's ascertaining and proclaiming the date when demobilization had terminated.

It is insisted that he has done so. The contention does violence to both the language and the evident purpose of the provision. The "date of which shall be determined and proclaimed by the President" is a phrase so definite as to leave no room for construction. This requirement can not be satisfied by passing references in messages to Congress nor by newspaper interviews with high officers of the Army or with officials of the War Department. When the President mentioned in his veto message the "demobilization of the Army and Navy" the words were doubtless used in a popular sense, just as he had declared to Congress on the occasion of the signing of the armistice: "The war thus comes to an end." If he had believed on October 28, 1919, that demobilization had, in an exact sense, terminated, he would doubtless have issued then a proclamation to that effect; for he had manifested a strong conviction that restriction upon the sale of liquor should end. Only by such proclamation could the purpose of Congress be attained; and the serious consequences attending uncertainty be obviated. But in fact demobilization had not terminated at the time of the veto of the act of October 28, 1919; or at the time these suits were begun; and, for aught that appears, it has not yet terminated. The report of the Secretary of War made to the President under date of November 11, 1919 (and transmitted to Congress on December 1), in describing the progress of demobilization, shows (p. 17) that during the preceding 10 days (Nov. 1–10) 2,018 officers and 10,266 enlisted men had been discharged, the rate of discharge being substantially the same as during the month of October, in which 8,690 officers and 33,000 enlisted men were discharged.

The war-time prohibition act being thus valid and still in force, the decree in No. 589 is reversed, and the case is remanded to the district court with directions to dismiss the bill, and the decree in No. 602 is affirmed.

No. 589. Reversed.

No. 602. Affirmed.

A true copy.

Test:

_____,

Clerk Supreme Court United States.

(Emergency shipping fund act of June 15, 1917, ch. 29, 40 Stat., 182, as amended by the act of Apr. 22, 1918, ch. 62, 40 Stat., 535, and by the act of Nov. 4, 1918, ch. 201, 40 Stat., 1020.) "All authority * * * shall cease six months after a final treaty of peace is proclaimed between this Government and the German Empire."

(Charter rate and requisition act of July 18, 1918, ch. 157, 40 Stat., 913.) "All power and authority * * * shall cease upon the proclamation of the final treaty of peace between the United States and the Imperial German Government."

(Railroad control act of Mar. 21, 1918, ch. 25, 40 Stat., 451, 458.) "* * * Federal control * * * shall continue for and during the period of the war and for a reasonable time thereafter, which shall not exceed one year and nine months next following the date of the proclamation of the exchange of ratifications of the treaty of peace."

(Food control act of Aug. 10, 1917, ch. 53, 40 Stat., 276, 283.) "Sec. 24. That the provisions of this act shall cease to be in effect when the existing state of war between the United States and Germany shall have terminated, and the fact and date of such termination shall be ascertained and proclaimed by the President."

(Trading with the enemy act of Oct. 6, 1917, ch. 106, 40 Stat., 411, 412.) "The words 'end of the war' as used herein shall be deemed to mean the date of proclamation of exchange of ratifications of the treaty of peace, unless the President shall by proclamation declare a prior date, in which case the date so proclaimed shall be deemed to be 'the end of the war' within the meaning of this act."

(Soldiers' and sailors' civil relief act of Mar. 8, 1918, ch. 20, 40 Stat., 440, at 441 and 449.) "(5) The term 'termination of the war' as used in this act shall mean the termination of the present war by the treaty of peace as proclaimed by the President. * * * Sec. 603. That this act shall remain in force until the termination of the war and for six months thereafter."

(Saulsbury resolution of May 31, 1918, ch. 90, 40 Stat., 593.) "That until a treaty of peace shall have been definitely concluded between the United States and the Imperial German Government, unless in the meantime otherwise provided by Congress * * *."

(Wheat price guarantee act of Mar. 4, 1919, ch. 125, sec. 11, 40 Stat., 1348, 1353.) "That the provisions of this act shall cease to be in effect whenever the President shall find that the emergency growing out of the war with Germany has passed, and that the further execution of the provisions of this act is no longer necessary for its purposes, the date of which termination shall be ascertained and proclaimed by the President, but the date when this act shall cease to be in effect shall not be later than the 1st day of June, 1920.

[1] The provisions fixing the date of expiration of the several war acts are as follows:

(Aircraft act, being ch. 16 of the Army appropriation act of July 9, 1918, ch. 143, 40 Stat., 889.) "Within one year from the signing of a treaty of peace with the Imperial German Government."

(Departmental reorganization act of May 20, 1918, ch. 78, 40 Stat., 556.) "That this act shall remain in force during the continuance of the present war and for six months after the termination of the war by the proclamation of the treaty of peace.")

NATIONAL BUDGET SYSTEM.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, I have just read a very interesting article in a magazine by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK]. I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

CALLS FOR DRASTIC MEASURES TO REMEDY BUDGET EVILS—SENATOR MCCORMICK WOULD MAKE EACH BRANCH OF THE GOVERNMENT INESCAPABLY RESPONSIBLE FOR ESTIMATES OF EXPENDITURES AND APPROPRIATIONS GRANTED—DECLARES EFFORTS TO CURE THE DISORDERS OF OUR METHODS SINCE 1870 HAVE BEEN "TIMID AND HOMEOPATHIC."

[By MEDILL MCCORMICK, United States Senator from Illinois.]

"The business men of the country are crying out for a national budget. The American taxpayer for the first time in our history is acutely conscious of the cost of the Federal administration. His purse tells him there is a Government situate on the Potomac. He has reason to believe that not only has his Government become costly but that it is inefficient and wasteful. He is uncertain as to the exact increase in the cost of his Federal enterprise, and he is not precise about the details of the reform to which he is entitled and which has made 'budget' and 'administrative efficiency' current in the political vernacular. But he is very certain that there has got to be a grand house cleaning.

"The third and last session of the last Congress appropriated for one year about $7,000,000,000, or ten times the aggregate appropriations of both sessions of the Fifty-sixth Congress, 20 years ago. For the next several years Government will cost about ten times as much annually as it did five years ago. There has been a tremendous acceleration in the rate of increase in taxation and public expenditure. Roughly speaking, Government cost 30 per cent more at the end of the 10 years 1901-1911 than it did at the beginning of that decade. Then a convention at Baltimore denounced Republican waste and extravagance, nominated Woodrow Wilson, and rode into office. The increase for the five years 1913-1917 was 60 per cent, or twice what it was during the 10 years which preceded the assembling of the denunciatory convention at Baltimore.

"I have written so much by way of preface because men do not often realize how sudden and how vast was the growth of governmental expenditure even during the years which immediately preceded the war. More than that, let me recall that the annual cost of the municipal administration of New York to-day is approximately equal to the annual cost of the Government of the United States during the last years of the nineteenth century. When we began the agitation for budget reform in Illinois, I startled taxpayers by pointing out that the cost of the State government was increasing at the rate of 200 per cent every 10 years.

DIVIDED RESPONSIBILITY.

"During my last term in the legislature I had written and persuaded a colleague to introduce a budget bill, lest if I fathered it some people might regard it as a measure of impolitic reform. I was not able long to conceal the actual paternity of the bill and so enjoyed for the balance of the legislative session the affectionate derision of some of my colleagues. Nevertheless, like Horace's farmer, who planted trees he would not live to see bear fruit, I had sponsored a bill the principle of which was to become law in Illinois the year I came to Washington. The circumstances which environed the enactment of budget legislation in Illinois exist to-day in Washington.

* * * * * * *

"The bill written by Prof. Willoughby, and which bears the name of Congressman GOOD, is not a budget bill. It does not create a budget system. It postpones the day when a true budget system may be established. It has the virtue that it does promise the future establishment of a budget, yet even then not by law but by Executive ukase.

"The Good bill seeks to establish a divided responsibility in public finance, the vice of which far outweighs any virtue that the bill contains. It would create a budget bureau, so called, in the office of the President. It substitutes this budget bureau for the Department of the Treasury as the place where the financial estimates of the several other departments shall be assembled. The Good bill thus confers no powers or duties on the budget bureau which are not already devolved by law upon the Treasury. It would make of the President a finance minister, if by his authority and his attention to the labors of the budget bureau he should vitalize its activity. It would add this unbearable burden to the most overburdened political Executive in the world.

TOO MANY COMMITTEES.

"As far back as Col. Roosevelt's time, under the most energetic and vigorous Executive of our day, the annual cost of government amounted to one-tenth of what it will be during the next several years. Since that time not only has the cost of government tremendously multiplied but so also have the many responsibilities of the President. During Mr. Taft's administration it was indisputable that the business of the Executive Office was often in arrears, while during the present administration the business has been done because the President denied himself the privilege of seeing many persons who sought him upon the public business or political errands.

"The taxpayer now suffers because there are too many appropriating committees in the Senate and the House of Representatives. It is painful to think that we may follow our accursed political practice of dividing responsibility and further mulct the taxpayer because academic budget writers shrink from vesting in the American Treasury powers comparable with those of a foreign minister of finance. If we adopt the principle embodied in the Good bill we shall not dignify—we shall belittle—the Secretaryship of the Treasury; we shall make it more difficult instead of more easy to get big men to fill the place.

"Even if the first director of the budget were to be a man of parts, we know from our experience with Government commissions and special bureaus that his successor would be a political hack or a professional theorist. But, worse than that, since the President would have no time to discharge the duties of a finance minister, the detailed administration of the budget bureau inevitably would fall into obscurity. Its chief would not be a conspicuous member of the administration, and so responsible for its financial policy before Congress and the bar of public opinion. Like every other officer in the history of the Government whose power to spend money exceeds his legal, moral, and political authority, the director of the budget would become the prey of every searcher for pork.

SUBJECTION TO THE PRESIDENT.

"It is objected by certain academic reformers that to vest in the Treasury true budget-making powers, to coordinate, to revise, and to reduce estimates, would exalt the Secretary of the Treasury at the expense of his Cabinet colleagues. That would depend upon the caliber of the Secretary of the Treasury and upon the caliber of his colleagues. I recognize that it is difficult to adapt foreign budget systems to the American Constitution and the American practice. The foreign democracies which have developed modern systems of public finance are subject to administration by a cabinet composed of members of the legislature and responsible to it. In a sense the finance minister is at one and the same time secretary of the treasury and chairman of the ways and means committee.

"Since the finance minister is a member of Parliament that system in a very real way is more immediately democratic than ours, but, on the other hand, I can not hold with Henry L. Stimson or Elihu Root that we should vest one independent Executive with the power to make and to submit to the legislature estimates which the legislature can not decrease or increase in its own discretion. That would result in the complete subjection of the legislature to the President. He could dole out or withhold appropriations for camps and cantonments, harbor improvements, quarantine guards, agricultural experiment stations, etc., in exact accordance to the subservience or independence of a Senator or Congressman.

"Mr. Taft punished certain Senators and Representatives for insurgency by withdrawing their 'patronage' from them. It is now reported that this punishment has been visited upon a certain Democratic Senator. We do not want to make the budget a means of further emasculating Congress. We want to energize and make more efficient both branches of our Government. Two years ago in Washington a venerable member of the British Parliament, who shall be nameless, said of our National Legislature that 'it was no parliament, or even a congress such as the framers of the Constitution contemplated, but a mere Prussian Diet, in which were registered the projects of law drafted by mediocre ministers responsible to an elected autocrat.' That was pretty terrible from a friendly critic whose parliamentary experience has been contemporaneous with two generations of men.

"We dare not adopt the budget scheme put forward by certain university professors and which the New York voters overwhelmingly rejected.

SUMMARY OF PROPOSED LAW.

"The Senate bill which I shall introduce, although it bears my name, is certainly not the handiwork of any one man. Two skilled draftsmen are chiefly responsible for its actual text. The views of the strongest congressional authority, ex-Congressman Fitzgerald, and of Secretary Glass are largely embodied in its terms. In part it is the fruit of our experience in Illinois; and, finally, in so far as our American Constitution permits, it follows the budget patterns of other countries. Without taxing the reader with the details of the bill, I venture to summarize its most important elements.

"First, it requires of the Secretary of the Treasury that he shall submit to the President for recommendation to Congress a coordinated and revised budget of estimates of public expenditure, together with any appropriate recommendations for the increase or the diminution of the public revenues, so that they may conform to the estimates of expenditure. The bill provides a budget bureau under a director responsible to the Secretary of the Treasury. It provides that this bureau, through the subordinates of the director, shall keep in touch with the budget or estimating officer in each of the departments. Here we shall check at once the current practice under which department subordinates seek appropriations for Government services which actually duplicate and compete with one another. If the department budget officer and the director of the budget can not agree, the Secretary or other chief of department may join the issue directly with the Secretary of the Treasury, and finally can exercise the right of appeal to the President himself.

"This machinery is not created by the bill in fulfillment of any academic theory. Unlike some peoples less practical in self-government, we Americans prefer to embody in our public administration the results of experience rather than experimental theory. Where we have been guided either by theory or by experience too little tried we have suffered. That has been true in every branch of our Government, and more particularly in the municipal and State governments, which have manifested far greater abuses of corruption and waste than the Federal Government at Washington. The bill contemplates that the members of the Cabinet under the President shall have a collective political and financial policy. It is sheer nonsense to imagine that a budget can be a nonpartisan or nonpolitical instrument. There are no nonpartisan Presidents; there have been none in our time nor are there likely to be any. There is no reader of these lines who has not lived long enough to remember the appalling degeneration of important administrative tribunals, because, under political influence, first-rate men have given way to cranks or political lame ducks.

PROVISION FOR REVISION.

"The estimates submitted to Congress must include not only sums for the routine administration of government but for the development of certain policies to which the President has been committed by his party platform. Under the Senate bill to be introduced the President and his advisers must determine how much or how little they will expend in the aggregate, and how much they will allot to each of the branches of the administration. That having been done, after preliminary conference and discussion in the Cabinet, it remains to carry out this financial and political program. It must not be presumed that it will not require revision. The first estimates upon which the President and his Cabinet have agreed will require amendment before they are sent to Congress. The Secretary of Agriculture, let us say, will be pressed by his subordinates in certain bureaus for larger sums than he originally purposed to give them. If his department, let us say, is carrying out a great agricultural policy to increase farm production or to hold the youngsters on the farm through improvement in rural living the elaboration of the program may demand much more than he originally estimated.

"The director of the budget and the Secretary of Agriculture may not agree; the Secretary of Agriculture may not be able to agree with the Secretary of the Treasury. Then an appeal must be taken to the President, who, in conference with his Cabinet, will determine whether the administration wishes (a) to increase the sum intended to be asked of Congress, (b) to curtail the great agricultural program, or (c) to curtail expenditure by other departments in order to make possible the development of agriculture and rural life contemplated by the political convention and the administration. Thus the administration collectively and the President personally will be responsible to the country for the aggregate sum to be asked of Congress, and so for the total sum of taxation to be imposed upon the people.

"It will be for the Members of Congress, individually and collectively, whether as partisans of the administration or as Members of the House of Representatives or the Senate, to decide (a) if they wish to appropriate more than the administration wants, and so add to the burden of the taxpayer; (b) if they care to appropriate less than the administration asks and diminish the public services in the interest of economy; or (c) accept in substance, if not in detail, the estimates recommended by the President.

PLACING RESPONSIBILITY.

"What have we done? We have made each branch of the Government publicly, definitely, and inescapably responsible, the one for the estimates of expenditure and taxation recommended and the other for the appropriations granted and taxes levied. Of course, I would not stop there. I would reduce the appropriating committees from 14 in the House and 14 in the Senate to 1 in each Chamber, and I would amend the rules to defer consideration of private appropriation bills. We ought to reform not only the method of assembling and revising the estimates at the western end of Pennsylvania Avenue but at the eastern end, on Capitol Hill, we ought to reform the disintegrate committee system under which appropriation bills are now considered without relation to one another.

"The reader who has studied the budget problem doubtless will complain that I have not developed a plan for an independent audit of expenditure. There are perhaps twoscore statutes bearing upon Government accounting and auditing, and, although I lean very strongly to the view that we ought to create the office of an independent and powerful Auditor and Controller General, who shall have intimate relations to a no less important joint committee on audit and expenditure (in place of the atrophied little committees on expenditure which now exist in both houses), I no less strongly incline to the opinion that Congress should undertake or should authorize the codification of the existing statutes before it creates the office of Auditor General.

"Looking back over 35 years, and looking back again to the period when, under Hamilton, we had a true budget system and Hamilton himself was a great minister of finance, the student of governmental expenditure in America will conclude that the Senate committee for the consideration of a budget ought to do not a hurried and incomplete job but a thorough one. We owe our present distressing condition partly to the repeal of that first statute under which Hamilton directed the financial policy of this Government and partly to the vicious and vindictive action of the Democratic majority in visiting its resentment on Mr. Randall in 1885.

"I have not yet learned why the first budget law was repealed, but I do know that since 1870 Congress has been trying to cure the disorder in our methods of preparing estimates. The remedies have been timid, homeopathic, and prescribed without adequate diagnosis. The condition of the taxpayer and of the Treasury in a very real sense is graver than it has been since the Civil War. We have the information, the experience, and the occasion for applying drastic remedies as did Hamilton. Let us do nothing less."

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL RESERVE ACT—CONFERENCE REPORT.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. McLEAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to Senate bill 2472.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 2472) to amend the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, on the 2d of December I offered a resolution asking for information with regard to the profits of the coal operators. On the 11th of December I offered an additional resolution touching the same matter. On December 6 the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] submitted a resolution covering the same subject. It will be satisfactory to me to have the resolution of the Senator from Georgia substituted for both the resolutions which I have offered; and, if that may be done, I ask the Senator from Georgia if it would be satisfactory to him to have his resolution now considered?

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to state that I should like to have the resolution now considered, and I offer the resolution submitted by me as a substitute for the resolutions of the Senator from South Dakota.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The conference report is before the Senate on a vote of the Senate to proceed with its consideration. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, may I ask if the conference report has been read?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been read and has been printed in the RECORD.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I happened to be absent at the convening of this session of Congress. I am very sorry that I should have been the cause of any delay in the passage of the bill embodied in the conference report. I appreciate very greatly the courtesy which has been extended to me by my fellow Senators in the postponement of its consideration until my return.

I think, however, that there has been considerable misapprehension as to my attitude with reference to the entire bill. I think it must be conceded by everyone that when this bill was introduced in the Senate and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency it was not given sufficient consideration. I have before me the hearings on Senate bill No. 2472, which hearings consist of 28 pages, a large portion of which is taken up by the printing of a letter from the chairman of the Federal Reserve Board.

The only members of the Committee on Banking and Currency who participated in the discussion, so far as is disclosed by the printed hearings, were the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], the Senator from Oklahoma being the principal participant.

The bill as introduced and as reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency was not only a crude bill of proposed legislation but it was an exceedingly dangerous one, as I think even the friends of the bill will now admit. It may be, Mr. President, that since the recent World War human nature has been changed; it may be that those who in times past and just before the war devoted all of their energies and all of their time to the making of millions of dollars have now changed, and that their only effort and desire in the future will be to look after the welfare of the people of the devastated countries of Europe and of the people of America. If that is the case, then it was safe to pass the Edge bill as it was reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency; but if that is not true, it was nothing but a "blue-sky" proposition; it was a proposal giving men who are engaged in high finance an opportunity to fasten their hands upon the throats of the people of Europe and America and to control them for all time; to give them control of not only the finance of the country but also of the politics of this country and of all the world.

Mr. President, I trust that no Senator will for a moment contend that this is an exchange bill. That question is merely incidental. I trust that not even a backwoods financier will have the audacity to say that the bill is a bill to regulate foreign exchange.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, what is the object of the bill? I apprehend the Senator from North Dakota may throw a little light on the subject, and I should like to hear him.

Mr. GRONNA. It is customary when a question of that sort is asked to say "I will come to that a little later on." I will say, however, to the Senator from Illinois, in all earnestness, that, as I understand the bill, it is to permit the organization of corporations with a capital of not less than $2,000,000 to deal in securities; to issue debentures, based, of course, upon the securities purchased; to issue bonds and notes with or without the indorsement or guaranty of those who are running the proposed institutions.

Of course it is the intention to sell these debentures and bonds to the public at, I presume, a small rate of interest; but with the German mark at a value of less than 2 cents and the pound sterling at $3.72¾, we can easily see the picture upon the screen and the possibilities for individuals interested in the corporations authorized by the bill to make their millions at the expense of the public.

In no way will the public share in the huge profits which these people will reap from the transactions in which the corporations will engage. All the public possibly can get will be a reimbursement for the amount paid for the stocks or the bonds which they acquire plus a small rate of interest; and I am afraid they will not get that, because these patriots refuse to subscribe to a provision imposing a double liability. The Congress of the United States has never passed a law authorizing the creation of banking institutions of this character which did not provide for a double liability.

Of course, Senators will say that we are told by the Federal Reserve Board that such a requirement can not be primarily essential, because banking institutions will own stock in these corporations. That will be the answer of the friends of the measure. It is unnecessary because something that is dead, something that has no life, is holding the stock of these corporations.

Mr. President, why should we not provide for a double liability in view of the fact that the corporations to be created under this bill are to be permitted to receive deposits? While it is true that they can only receive deposits of an international character and such deposits as are incident to the international transactions in which the institutions engage, we must admit that such deposits will be in the largest of volume, for millions upon millions of dollars will be received by these institutions as deposits. Not only that, but they are to be permitted, as I have said, to issue debentures and to sell them to the public without their indorsement or guaranty.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President——

Mr. GRONNA. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCORMICK. I should like to ask the Senator a question to ascertain if my memory is at fault. As I recall, the Senate by an amendment adopted on the floor provided for a double liability in the case of the institutions proposed to be created by the bill.

Mr. GRONNA. That is true; there was such a provision adopted.

Mr. McCORMICK. Was that struck out in conference?

Mr. GRONNA. That was struck out in conference.

Mr. McCORMICK. What explanation have the conferees to offer to justify that action?

Mr. GRONNA. The chairman of the committee is present and can explain that matter to the Senator, I have no doubt.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, I have already explained to the Senate a number of times the reasons for the action of the conferees. As, however, the Senator from Illinois was probably not present, I shall be glad very briefly to state those reasons once more.

The primary reason which ordinarily justifies the imposition of a double liability does not apply to the institutions proposed to be created by this bill, for they are not banks of deposit in the ordinary sense of the word, in that they receive no cash demand deposits. They will deal in either long or short time paper.

Another reason is the fact that many similar institutions organized under State laws are now in full operation, but to none of them does the double liability apply.

For instance, the State of New York by statute requires double liability of the commercial banks receiving demand deposits, but does not require it of these finance institutions. Now, unless these corporations are permitted to compete on an equality with the other institutions that are already organized, of course this law will become inoperative; and if it were possible that I could have my way I would not only charter these corporations without the double liability but I would compel all existing institutions doing a similar business to come under Federal supervision, where they would be under the control and regulation of the Federal board and subjected to examination.

There are other reasons why the double liability should not apply, but it seems to me that I have stated substantially those which impelled your committee to reach the decision which it did reach. The matter was very carefully considered. I will say to the Senate that the double liability was not urged in the House, and in the committee of conference I, representing the majority of the Senate, did the best I could to convince the committee that double liability might be feasible and in accordance with the wishes of the Senate. My vote was the only one in its favor. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], who, as Senators know, was chairman of the committee for a long time, and who consented to and, I think, voted for the double liability in the Senate, changed his mind as a member of the committee of conference, and felt that under the circumstances there was no reason for imposing this burden.

Another reason comes to me which was suggested. As you know, the national banks are permitted to invest a certain percentage of their stock, 10 per cent of their capital and surplus, in these institutions. That at once creates a contingent liability on the part of these national banks.

It is impossible to estimate it in their returns unless it is put in at its full amount, and this might unfairly impair their capital; and my information is that if it is insisted upon the national banks will be advised by their counsel not to invest in these corporations.

It seems to me it is very important that something should be done. I do not agree with the Senator from North Dakota that the bill has been greatly improved by the amendments. They are very restrictive. They limit to an unreasonable extent, it seems to me, the operation of these corporations. I would in some respects have preferred the bill as it was originally reported by the committee, leaving regulation more fully to the Federal Reserve Board. I think this would have been as effective and the banks would have accomplished more; but I stood alone in that regard. It is the policy of foreign nations to leave the management and control of their banking institutions very largely to an administrative body, because it is difficult for the legislative body to go into details, and if they attempt it their restrictions are apt to be unwise and harmful; but I stood alone in this regard, and the House amendment has largely eliminated, I think, all the objections that were raised.

The Senator says it will not benefit the exchange. I disagree with him entirely. Of course any long-time investment or credit that is extended to European countries and producers must benefit the exchange, for their liquid assets are exhausted, and unless they can get one or two or three years' credit they can not continue to purchase goods of us any longer. They can not afford to pay the premium on gold and buy our products, and it will result in chaos unless something is done to assist the return of the exchanges to a normal level. This bill to a certain extent, in my opinion, will do that.

I have about finished. I do not care to make any reply to the Senator's argument. Time is very important, and with the Senator's permission I will say what I have to say now.

It is vital that something should be done and at once. We are told that the remedy lies in production; that production alone will ultimately enable European countries to redeem their paper money. That is true; but men and women will not produce unless their confidence in their institutions is maintained in some way. Confidence has coined more money for the world than all her mints; and unless something is done to help our associates in the late war maintain their confidence in their political and industrial future, the worst that can be anticipated will happen; and if we were to put ourselves in their position and be compelled to bear the burdens which they must bear I can see that we would feel that this was the least that ought to be done to assist in the premises.

There is another thing, Mr. President, that I will mention while I am on my feet.

We all know that for years London has been the clearing house for the foreign exchanges of the world. They have taken toll going and coming upon all our exports and imports, and it has amounted to hundreds of millions of dollars. It does seem to me that now that we have the money we ought to have the courage to permit our capitalists to finance our exporters and importers; and for this reason I think we ought to enact some wise, safe legislation whereby our banks or our capitalists can handle these foreign exchanges.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if the State institutions to which he referred receive deposits? I mean those that have already been set up, the international institutions to which the Senator referred. Do they receive deposits?

Mr. McLEAN. I suppose they receive long or short time deposits. They are not permitted to receive cash deposits, demand deposits, as I understand.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator if these same institutions are authorized to issue debentures or bonds?

Mr. McLEAN. Their powers are infinitely broader than the powers granted under this charter. They can easily get State charters which permit them to do anything under the sun, and that is why I said that if it were possible, and I could have my way, I would compel the 9 or 10 institutions already organized to come in under this Federal law, where they would be supervised and examined.

Mr. GRONNA. Of course that would be a State charter, would it not?

Mr. McLEAN. It would be a State charter.

Mr. GRONNA. I want to thank the chairman for his explanation of the bill. It seems to me, though, that the Senator is somewhat mistaken in making the statement that we ought to have these institutions in order to establish confidence. It seems to me that it would establish more confidence if we would compel these institutions to organize in such a way that they would be absolutely safe, and a double liability could not detract anything from the soundness of an institution of this kind. It certainly could not injure the institution to be compelled to subscribe to a double liability.

Mr. President, I do not intend to delay unduly the proceedings of the Senate in discussing this bill. I want to say that I had something to do with the amendments which were inserted in this bill not only in the Senate but I was consulted on the other side; and while the Senator from Connecticut disagrees with me as to whether the bill has been improved, I believe I can safely say that unless these amendments had been made, some dozen or fifteen of them in the Senate, and a great many more in the House, this bill could not have passed; it would not have become a law.

I repeat what I said, that this bill can not possibly regulate the exchange, and I am going to read from higher authorities than myself on that subject.

I want to read from yesterday morning's Washington Post, from a man whom I consider, and whom I presume the Senator will consider, an authority. It is under the heading:

BRITISH BLAME EXCHANGE RATES ON STATE LOANS.

LONDON, December 13.

The report of the committee on postwar currency and foreign exchange has issued a white paper recommending certain measures for the economic restoration of the nation.

"Increased production, cessation of Government borrowing, and decreased expenditure both by the Government and individual members of the nation are the first essentials of recovery," the report says.

The restoration of prewar methods of currency and control of the credit system are urged in order to reestablish a free gold market at London soon. The weakness in exchanges is regarded as due not only to trade conditions, but to the expanded state of credit. Preference should be given to export business with those countries able to tender payment in the ordinary course of trade, according to the committee.

I want to show, a little later on, that Great Britain has established her trade with some of the neutrals; that she has vastly increased her exports to these countries; and that the discount is very small in some of the countries. I remember distinctly that in one of the countries—Norway—the pound sterling is at par.

I also want to read an Associated Press article printed in this same paper, the Washington Post, of December 14, under the heading:

ALLIES OFF GOLD BASIS—DEPRECIATED CURRENCY FACTOR IN EUROPEAN EXCHANGE RATES—TRADE BALANCE DISTURBED—NO RETURN TO PARITY LIKELY, SAYS JAMES S. ALEXANDER, UNTIL GOLD STANDARD IS RESTORED AND EXPORTS BECOME EQUAL TO IMPORTS—BANKER ANALYZES PRESENT CONDITIONS.

[By the Associated Press.]

NEW YORK, December 13.

Restoration of an approximate equilibrium of imports and exports between the United States and Europe and a return of European currencies to a gold basis are needed before foreign exchanges will return to a normal basis, according to James S. Alexander, president of the National Bank of Commerce and an authority on foreign trade.

Mr. Alexander, officer and director of many important banking institutions, who served as chairman of the committee on credit and finance at the international trade conference at Atlantic City and is chairman of the executive committee of the national committee on European finance, was asked to-day by the Associated Press to reduce to plain terms the highly complicated international business problem presented by the present condition of foreign exchange.

REFLECTS TRADE CONDITIONS.

He prepared a statement in which he explained that foreign exchange is a commodity, and the present demoralized depreciation in rates for sterling and other European exchanges is a normal expression of the law of supply and demand. The statement follows:

Mr. EDGE. Will the Senator suffer a question?

Mr. GRONNA. Not at the present time; before I get through with this article.

Mr. EDGE. I did not intend to divert the Senator from the article.

Mr. GRONNA. I will be glad to yield when I have finished the article:

Depreciation of the foreign exchanges is primarily only a reflection of deeper problems in relation of exports and imports between America and Europe. The problem may be simply stated as follows:

When exporters sell to foreign buyers they draw checks, drafts, etc., on those foreign consignees or their banks for the amounts due. These bills are drawn in foreign money, preponderantly pounds sterling—that is, on houses in London, long the world's international clearing house. Americans drawing these bills sell them in the foreign exchange market for what they will bring, which under normal conditions fluctuates within narrow limits of face value. The total volume of such checks and drafts coming into the foreign exchange market constitutes the supply of foreign exchange in existence at that time. The foreign exchange market consists of foreign exchange houses whose function is to buy exchange, say, in New York, on London, and send it there for collection or the establishment of balances.

BUYING SHOULD OFFSET SELLING.

Ordinarily, at the same time, Americans are selling goods to foreigners, foreigners are sellings goods to Americans who therefore have remittances to make abroad. They therefore buy from the foreign exchange dealers drafts or checks against the balances those dealers have established abroad through the purchase of foreign exchange. Thus while American exporters sell foreign exchange, American importers buy foreign exchange. The one creates the supply; the other creates the demand.

Normally this supply and demand were about equal, because the total volume of goods and services sold to Europe about equaled the total volume of goods and services bought from Europe. In prewar times the difference in the two volumes fluctuated between narrow limits and the excess one way or the other was settled by shipments of gold.

The foregoing states in general terms what normally took place in the foreign exchange market, ignoring many technical details, which, however, do not alter the main thought.

SITUATION CHANGED BY WAR.

The war, however, has materially changed the situation. In the first place, while there have been huge increases in our exports to Europe, there have been great decreases in our imports from Europe. There has therefore come into the foreign exchange market a greater volume of checks and drafts on Europe than European drafts on America, resulting in a far greater supply of foreign exchange in this market than there is a demand for on the part of Americans having remittances to make abroad. As always happens in the case of any commodity when supply exceeds demand, prices of the foreign exchange fell. The depreciation of foreign exchange in this market, therefore, is merely a normal expression of the law of supply and demand.

The question as to what will correct the situation can be answered on general principles without any attempt to prophesy. Foreign exchange can not come back to parity until the restoration of the gold standard in Europe corrects the depreciation of European currencies and until the restoration of approximate equilibrium between our exports and our imports in respect to Europe again makes the demand for foreign exchange approximate the supply.

Mr. President, this comes from one of the leading financiers of the country, and I am sure, at least I have reason to believe, that my distinguished friend from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] will agree with the statement of Mr. Alexander. I now yield to the Senator, if he wants to interrupt me.

Mr. EDGE. I do not want to delay the Senator at all. I simply wanted to ask the Senator if he knew that at the convention to which he refers, where Mr. Alexander delivered that address, and was chairman of the committee, as stated in the article, the convention unanimously indorsed this bill, and sent such a memorandum to the Members of Congress?

Mr. GRONNA. I do not doubt that, Mr. President. I believe what the Senator has stated is true. We all know how easy it is to pass resolutions at such meetings. I have attended farmers' meetings at times, and all we have to do is to put at the head of the resolution "Resolved. That something should be done to benefit the farmer." We all know how easy it is to get a resolution of that sort passed. I presume the same is true with bankers' conventions.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator that while agreeing mainly with the article which he has read, and I do; I think it is very sound, and I am glad the Senator read it into the RECORD; does not the Senator believe that this measure will afford temporary relief? I am not satisfied that it is going to be a permanent cure and remedy for the situation, but for the present, temporarily, is it not a good thing to help tide us over to the time when our exports and imports will be practically at an equilibrium? We must have trade, undoubtedly. We can not have trade unless we cure this trouble about the cost of exchange. We can not sell our goods, we can not export, because we can not have buyers. Is it not a good idea to bring about the equilibrium between exports and imports by affording a facility whereby we can start our exports moving? And is it not an excellent plan, as a temporary measure, for that purpose, bringing about the very condition which the Senator admits must be brought about in order that we may have a permanent and proper arrangement?

Mr. GRONNA. I do not disagree with the Senator from Florida. I am simply trying, in as brief a time as possible, to call attention to what exchange is, and I believe that it is impossible to legislate so as to affect that problem. I believe it is absolutely impossible for this Government to say what the rate of exchange shall be; and there has been a great misconception as to what Congress can do or can not do. I do not believe that any Senator will seriously contend that we can say, by law, what the rate of exchange shall be. There are conditions, as the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] knows, which enter into that problem.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. GRONNA. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. About the only way, Mr. President, that exchange will be brought to par in any country in the world is to have their exportations at least equal to their importations. If the exportations exceed the importations, of course the currency of the country will immediately go to par; but if their exportations are less than their importations there is only one way to make up the difference, and that is to get a loan from some other country, or be in a position to borrow the gold that will make up the difference in some other way. Unless it is made up, and that is equalized, of course whatever moneys of the country may be circulated will fall below par; and that is the condition we find Europe in to-day. Why is the mark, a 24-cent mark in Germany, down to 1¼ cents to-day? Because all the countries of the world recognize that Germany can not redeem that paper money. It is an absolute impossibility for them to do it, and I have not any doubt, Mr. President, that the German people themselves believe that the time will soon arrive when there will be another issue of money entirely different from that which is being issued to-day and has been issued in the past, and the paper in circulation in Germany will be worth simply what the paper is worth and nothing more. The Americans who have been speculating in the purchasing of German marks, I feel sure right now will not only not make anything upon their purchases but they will lose all they have put into the speculation.

Mr. GRONNA. I agree with what the Senator from Utah has said, and with reference to his last statement regarding the value of marks and the impossibility of making any profit, I will say to the Senate that my reasons for insisting on a double liability are to protect the innocent bondholders, the men of this country who will be holding these securities.

I have no more responsibility with reference to this legislation than has any other Senator. But instead of discussing this as a purely exchange bill, we ought to know what it is. I have no objection to legislation helpful to the people of Europe, but this is a bill to set up organizations for the purpose of buying securities which may practically be worthless in the European countries and to stimulate their business. But while you are stimulating the production of Europe you can not at the same time, with the same money, stimulate the production of the products of your own country. I am only finding fault with some of the statements that have been made by those who seem to claim to be the friends of this measure as to what this bill will do. You are complaining because of the high cost of living. You are proposing by this measure to raise money to loan to England, to France, to Belgium—and I have no objection to that—and to Germany and to Austria for the purpose of buying American products. The result will be that prices will go still higher to the consumer.

You must stimulate the industries of this country and produce more, you must increase production of the natural products of this country if you are going to benefit the consumers, which has been claimed as the result of this legislation by the friends of the measure. We all know that Europe had a balance of trade against her for 10 months of more than $3,000,000,000. I have before me here the report of the Department of Commerce, which I ask to have inserted in the RECORD, because I do not wish to take the time of the Senate to go into detail, which will show absolutely that Europe has a balance of trade against her from America of more than $3,000,000,000. Every dollar of that has gone to Great Britain. What happens? Here are two men in New York, A and B. A is an importer and B is an exporter. The exporter, Mr. B, has hundreds of millions due him from London. It is impossible for A to get any exchange from London, because the imports into London are so much greater than her exports that she has no paper on New York.

People wonder why the pound sterling has gone down from $4.866. It seems to me that any man ought to understand it. With hundreds of millions of this paper outstanding against the banking institutions of London and no gold for export and no gold to sell, and yet you wonder why it has been reduced almost 20 per cent—19.4 is about the discount. There is nothing technical about it. It is a proposition so simple that every man ought to understand it. The only trouble is that some of the patriots up in Wall Street always are trying to becloud the issue when anything of importance is going on, but Americans are willing to discuss these matters in a frank manner.

Mr. President, I am going to ask to have inserted in the RECORD an article written by Samuel S. Dale, a citizen of Boston, a very distinguished citizen, editor of Textiles, I believe. While I am not going to take the time of the Senate to read the entire article, I do wish to read the last paragraph. The article is entitled "Protection or free trade." I can just see before me now the mild protectionist from New England and how he will come to Congress in the near future and ask for protection. It is possible that the men who are so determined to have their own way in financial affairs will find mild protectionists. If the cost of living can in no other way be reduced to the people of the United States it is possible, sir, that we will have to resort to that method. It is a peculiar thing. Everything in the world seems to move in numbers of three. There is a trinity about nearly everything. We had the treaty and the league of nations, we have this bill, and we have the tariff question, and they are all involved in the same issue.

Although I do not have the privilege of knowing Mr. Dale personally, I understand he is an authority on the tariff; that his knowledge has been sought by congressional committees; that he has on many occasions appeared here to give information to committees when tariff bills have been framed. I want to read just the last paragraph from Mr. Dale's article, which he sent to me and said I might use in any way that I saw fit. He says:

There is to be no regulation of exports.

That, Mr. President, is a very important matter. The farmer of the West was satisfied when an embargo was placed upon his products. The farmers all throughout the country did not come here in large delegations asking that that embargo be lifted. They knew as well as we knew who had looked into the matter that they were losing on an average of a dollar a bushel on their grain. They knew it, but they were willing to sacrifice in the interest of the consuming public, and up until the 15th day of this month, or yesterday, the embargo has been retained on their principal crops, to their detriment and to their loss, but in the interest of the public. If the manufacturer and the dealers had been as patriotic as were the producers in disposing of their product the situation would be different to-day.

From the standpoint of the producer if the bill would do what the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] say it will do, I would be for it. If I were as selfish as some of the Wall Street journals say I am—possibly they are telling the truth, but I consider it a certificate of honor that they are devoting columns to me, and the only argument that they have for the Edge bill is that I am selfish.

I do not wish to take the time to read any of those articles as I do not care, and the public cares very little for what the Wall Street journals say or do with reference to legislation, financial or any other legislation. The men who carried the treaty in their pockets for months are the very same men who are trying to tell us what bills we shall pass, financial bills and other bills.

Mr. Dale said:

There is to be no regulation of exports. The American products taken from American consumers will be used not only to supply the real necessities of suffering peoples in distant countries but to gratify the vanity and feed the extravagance of foreigners who are not suffering, while foreign governments, relieved of the burden of providing for the needs of their nationals, will be able to turn their resources to the support of armies and navies for world conquest and dominion, directed perchance against the United States itself. This plan is not only in the minds of schemers, it is so far advanced that the Edge bill authorizing United States charters to banking corporations for financing it, has already been passed by both House and Senate and may be a law before these words are printed.

This banking scheme to lend American money to foreigners should be cast with free trade and the league of nations into the everlasting discard.

Mr. President, I do not say that I am for free trade. I never was in favor of free trade. I do not say that I am against a league of nations, but I do say that I am against any league and against any entanglement which will prevent the American people doing business in their own way and from continuing their traditional policy as laid down by the fathers. I am opposed to any such scheme as that.

I find in a little booklet under the title, "Business Conditions," issued by the American Eagle Fire Insurance Co., a statement from a Mr. Paul M. Warburg, which I am going to ask to have printed in full.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

Mr. GRONNA. I am going to quote just one paragraph from Mr. Warburg. I am not reading literature from radicals or from socialists or from people of that sort. I am reading from the time's soundest financiers and any man who will read the articles which I shall insert in the RECORD will agree that I am sound in the policy which I have advocated with reference to the bill. I have been instrumental in improving it, and I am aware that it is not possible to defeat the bill, but I am going to have the RECORD show my position.

Says Mr. Warburg:

Everybody knows that in order to prevent a further rising of prices it is necessary that production be increased and consumption be decreased. The necessity of such a course has been forcefully urged by many; it is conceded by all and practiced by nobody. In Europe and in the United States there never was a greater recklessness in spending money than there has been prevailing since the conclusion of the armistice. The ease with which a large amount of depreciated money can be earned has diminished the respect for money and the eagerness to save. A willingness to subordinate or sacrifice one's wishes and pleasures to the greater advantage of the country, splendidly manifested during the years of war, has ended in the present reaction of an orgy of brazen self-indulgence at the very moment when the war bill is presented for payment.

This is quite a lengthy article, and I ask that I may be permitted to have it printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks, together with certain other articles to which I shall refer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there is no objection, permission is granted.

Mr. MCLEAN. I will say to the Senator that my recollection is that I have a letter from Mr. Warburg strongly advocating the bill.

Mr. GRONNA. That may be true. I do not deny that. Why, Mr. President, I take it that every patriotic citizen is willing, so far as he can, to lend aid to the peoples of Europe. I take it that no one is going to object to legislation which is in the interest of the American people and in the interest of people of Europe or any other country. But if the transformation has not been made that I outlined a moment ago, if men are still selfish, then, sir, we ought to be careful in passing legislation which gives to these men of wealth the great opportunity to control not only the finances of the country but to dictate the prices of products, and to control the policy not only of this country but of foreign countries as well.

Mr. President, I hold in my hand a statement issued by the Department of Commerce on "imports and exports of domestic and foreign exchange by countries." I find that the United Kingdom during the month of October, 1918, exported to the United States $10,710,165, and in 1919, $41,718,294; but imported from the United States during the same month in 1918, $148,680,049, and during the same month in 1919, $164,965,249. During 10 months ending October, 1918, Great Britain exported to the United States $130,059,299, and during the same 10 months in 1919 she exported to the United States $219,298,354; whereas in 1918, for the same 10 months, she imported from the United States $1,711,507,737, and in 1919 for 10 months she imported approximately $1,867,688,755.

Mr. President, is not that a good reason why there is a difference in exchange? Having exported but $219,298,354 of goods, having to buy $1,867,688,755 of goods, and not having the gold with which to settle the balance, why should not her pound sterling be depreciated?

We are going to set these corporations up in business and give them the benefit of being quasi governmental agencies in order that they may sell their bonds and their debentures absolutely in their own interest. Why, then, should we not require of them that whatever bonds they issue they shall be liable for at least double the amount of their capitalization? That is not considered a hardship upon other classes of bankers; and, while such bankers receive deposits, they do not have the right to issue debentures or to issue bonds. A national bank issues currency, for which it must purchase Government bonds, and, regardless of whether the bank fails or not, that currency is good, because it is guaranteed by Government bonds. It is not so as to the companies authorized by this bill. I am only calling attention to that. I believe it is unfair to the public.

I have before me a booklet which has been sent to me by Lewis L. Clarke, president of the American Exchange National Bank of New York, the booklet being entitled "Foreign Exchange." I shall only read a short paragraph from this booklet, as follows:

> Out of all this war-time confusion in foreign exchange markets and international commerce should come radical improvement in monetary standards to simplify the transaction of international commerce and the settlement of accounts. The Far East has made greater progress in this respect than have Europe and the Americas. Some specialists in foreign exchange may find the existing complicated systems to their advantage, but it would greatly help international trade if small merchants could ascertain prices and costs in other countries without the aid of an interpreter.

Now, this is especially what I desire to call attention to:

> The league of nations, if it comes into being, might very profitably deal with the unification of monetary standards throughout the world.

I do not say that this good citizen is in favor of that great document for this specific reason only, but it is the only one he mentions in his booklet, and it was evidently running through his mind that the great benefit which would come if the league of nations were adopted would be that to which he has called attention and which I have just read.

I desire now to read a short extract from a printed speech of the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. In his speech he had printed this statement from Justice Brandeis, in Other People's Money:

> The great monopoly in this country is the money monopoly. So long as that exists our old variety and freedom and individual energy of development are out of the question. A great industrial nation is controlled by its system of credit. Our system of credit is concentrated. The growth of the Nation, therefore, and all our activities are in the hands of a few men who, even if their actions be honest and intended for the public interest, are necessarily concentrated upon the great undertakings in which their own money is involved and who necessarily, by every reason of their own limitations, chill and check and destroy genuine economic freedom. This is the greatest question of all; and to this statesmen must address themselves with an earnest determination to serve the long future and the true liberties of men.

Mr. President, that is the statement of Justice Brandeis, and it speaks for itself.

From the Chief Executive of our land, from citizens in every walk of life, in business vocation and profession, we are told that the World War is over; we are told that demobilization has been completed; but we are also told by the highest tribunal of this Nation that until peace has been declared by our Chief Executive we are technically, if not actually, still at war. It is true that hostilities have long since ceased. Why, then, hesitate declaring peace with all men and nations? If we honestly and sincerely favor peace, let peace be declared. If there are peoples or nationalities which we can not trust, let us frankly say so. So far as I know, the people of the United States are not looking for indemnities, for additional territory, or for profits. The rank and file made stupendous sacrifices from a patriotic standpoint. They made them, as they believed, in the interest of humanity, and their chief concern today is for an honorable, just, and lasting peace.

We are a Christian Nation, composed of more than a hundred million people. Uppermost in the minds of 99 per cent of our people is the question of peace with all men and nations. Self-interest is in the minds of only a few.

Is it asking too much for the American people to be allowed to transact their business in their own constitutional way, in accordance with their traditional policy laid down by the fathers of this Republic?

Thousands of our brave young men made the supreme sacrifice; a greater number faced the danger and stood ready to make it. Shall those of us who personally did not participate in this terrible struggle confess that already we have forgotten what these brave men did for us? Have we so soon forgotten their sufferings and sacrifices?

The World War is over, but the responsibilities which we owe to those who remain have not been discharged, nor have the obligations that we owe to our fellow men been fulfilled. The reconstruction period has just begun and will for months and years engage our best attention. Every effort honestly and efficiently to reconstruct our own country for the benefit of our own people must be made, and at the same time we must make every effort and sacrifice possible to help the people of the devastated countries of Europe to reconstruct and rebuild their countries to prewar and normal conditions. This can not be done if our only aim shall be to profit from the labors of other men. This can not and will not be done if by legislation we grant special privileges to those who are now in possession of wealth, for the purpose of accumulating more profits at the expense of the oppressed. If we are sincere and intend to make our promises good in the interest of reconstruction, capital and labor, the rich and the poor, must become more efficient; we must work more ourselves, if necessary, and produce more, even if the cost be greater and the profit less. Capital and labor must be satisfied with smaller, not greater, returns, and labor must become more, not less, efficient. I know of no other way to save our own people from chaos and financial ruin; I know of no better way to save others from the same fate. This is not the time for the powerful and strong to saddle the burdens upon the bended backs of those who are not so strong. This is the time for mutual cooperation; this is the time for every citizen of our land to join in solid phalanx, with but one thought and one purpose in mind, and that thought and purpose must be reconstruction, in order that we may get back to normal conditions.

This can be done if we make up our minds to do it, if we join with our neighbors and do our full share of what is necessary to be done. But there is one thing we must be willing to do at the outset, and that is to resolve in our own consciences not to expect a larger profit from the labor of the other fellow, but to be satisfied with the earnings from our own efforts and efficiency.

I have no doubt some of you will denominate this doctrine as socialistic, but call it what you please, I believe it to be an idealistic doctrine, a patriotic doctrine, and if we could only for a short period of time, say, a year or two, eliminate our madness for money and profit we would happily express ourselves over the satisfactory accomplishment and wonderful results. But will we do it? No. Business will proceed in its usual way. The millionaire will in the future, as in the past, be looking for special privileges, for legislation, making it possible for him to make more millions, for concessions by those in power to accumulate more wealth, not for the country, not for the public, but for himself.

If we want to avoid trouble and disaster the high and the low, the rich and the poor, must be willing to make sacrifices. Of course I know that the man of wealth complains about the high taxes and the heavy expenses, but let us not forget the toiling millions who are barely eking out an existence, who have barely enough to live from day to day. Their problems are more difficult, especially when overtaken by sickness and disaster, than are the problems of the men who enjoy luxurious wealth. The men of large means are not in want for food, raiment, or shelter. If they have sustained financial losses, they have the property or the money to lose. Not so, Mr. President, with the majority of the people of our country. They are simply laboring to maintain an existence and are living from day to day. We have no right, I say, in these days of distress and oppression to grant special privileges to those who are in control of wealth and to saddle the burdens upon the bended backs of the people of our country or of foreign countries.

Mr. President, I want to say that so far as this bill is concerned I hope it will work out in the way that its friends believe it will work out. My only object in endeavoring to change this measure has been to make it possible to help the people of Europe, as well as the people of America, rather than these men who we know have always taken advantage of the public in times of distress, and who, we have reason to believe, will continue to take that advantage if they are not limited and if they are not controlled by proper legislation. As one Member of this body, I believed it my duty to call attention, and I have called attention, and we have succeeded in changing some of the most dangerous provisions of this bill, because it gave too much power to these corporations. While it may be true, as the Senator from Connecticut has stated, and he knows that I have great respect for his judgment, that it might facilitate their operations, at the same time is it safe for us in dealing with the people who have these vast fortunes, who are absolutely in control of the destinies of men and of nations, not to safeguard by legislation the interests of the men who have less to control?

Mr. President, there are many things to which I intended to call attention. I shall not trespass further upon the patience of the Senate, but I ask permission to have certain documents printed at the conclusion of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be made.

The matter referred to is as follows:

FOREIGN EXCHANGE.

During the century between the Napoleonic wars and the outbreak of the Great War, foreign exchange became so thoroughly stabilized that few, if any, dreamed of the possibility of disorganization such as did occur and is still manifest as a result of the conflict. In the closing days of July, 1914, and for several weeks thereafter, sterling exchange commanded enormous premiums in New York, because international banking houses and other issuers of bills of exchange were short of exchange to cover large amounts of bills accepted by London bankers against letters of credit issued for account of American merchants and also because of forward sales of time bills against prospective exports of grain, cotton, and other seasonal commodities that move freely to market after harvest. This perfectly legitimate and usually conservative anticipation of exports went wrong when England suddenly demanded settlements in gold and movements of vessels were interrupted by fear of German raiders on the high seas. The city of New York alone had to raise about $90,000,000 in gold or equivalent exchange to pay its Treasury bills falling due in London and Paris during the fall of 1914. Many other then neutral countries could not meet England's demands for payments in gold and declared moratoriums to save local debtors from bankruptcy. America liquidated all her current liabilities, and then the tide changed again almost as suddenly as it had at the beginning of hostilities in Europe.

Inability to ship merchandise to England and France fast enough to take care of maturing bills of exchange and other obligations caused the initial rise in rates for sterling exchange in the New York market and in almost all other neutral countries. In normal times London would have accepted and renewed bills of exchange without demur, and both American and London banks and dealers in exchange would have made a small profit by discounting movements of cotton, grain, and other seasonal commodities, as they had been doing regularly for many years. It was the sudden disturbance of international trade by a war that involved all the great powers of the Old World which threw foreign exchange out of balance.

When the pendulum swung back, it went over too far, and while the credit situation was changed the balance was not fully restored. England, France, Italy, and other European belligerents imported all the supplies that ships could be found to carry, and paid high prices for everything. They were so engaged in war work that they could produce and spare little for export in exchange for these imports. America was the chief source of supplies and passed from the condition of an international debtor to that of a creditor nation in a few months. England shipped gold to New York by way of Canada to stabilize exchange which was running heavily against her, and was measurably successful in so doing with the help of loans floated in New York after it became apparent that the United States was floundering in a sea of idle gold. French and other belligerents' exchange remained at a heavy discount in New York and has not yet fully recovered.

War is waste. The foreign exchange market is the most responsive and most delicately balanced barometer of conditions in existence. European belligerents not only imported enormous quantities of supplies and war materials at high prices, but burned them up in waging war. They did not use these imports to create new wealth, as they would have done under peace conditions. They poured real wealth into a fiery furnace which gave back nothing of material value. As far as commerce was concerned, this real wealth, imported for war purposes, might as well have been dumped into the sea, and that literally happened to no inconsiderable part of it as a result of the German submarine campaign.

Under peace conditions imports are used in the manufacture of other merchandise or are consumed for the sustenance of the people whose labor creates real wealth. The wheat flour and meat that a workman eats has the same direct productive value as the coal burned under the boilers of the factory in which he works. Something of greater value comes out in exchange for the food and fuel consumed in producing man and horse power.

Under war conditions the products of industry have been burned up. This waste is the measure of the war taxes and national debts of the belligerent nations, including the United States. America has been exporting twice as much as she imported and has received evidences of debt instead of real wealth to balance the account. She has given and must continue to give credit for a long time to come and she must either take merchandise in exchange for the evidences of debt she holds or regard and treat the debts others owe her as practically permanent investments, just as England has done for two centuries.

Being a creditor Nation, America will for many years be able to sell bills of exchange based on these foreign debts and thus protect her gold reserves to such extent as may be deemed advisable.

It is obvious that this must not be overdone, because such a financial policy would restrict the ability of others to buy goods made in America and would limit our exports of merchandise. We can so use our financial strength as to destroy our export trade, and therefore we must not press our debtors too sharply.

In the years within living memory, before this war destroyed the balance that existed in international trade and finance, the manner in which the purchases and sales, or imports and exports, of the nations offset one another excited the wonder even of experts. America imported more from Asia than she exported, and exported more to Europe than she imported, while Europe stood as a creditor of Asia. The accounts of the triangle came so near to a perfect balance that only a minute percentage of the total transactions remained to be settled in gold or silver. London was the clearing house in which Japan's bills against the United States were met by America's bills against England, and our debt to Japan was set off against what she owed England. The ramifications of this settlement of world-wide debits and credits in London were infinite, but balances were struck and settlements made without difficulty by the use of bills of exchange and with little use of gold. The war destroyed this normal balance in international trade. Some nations now owe enormous debts, while others hold corresponding credits. These differences can not be settled by shipments of gold, because enough of it does not exist. The estimated world's stock of gold available for currency purposes is about $9,300,000,000, which would not settle the balance in favor of America. We must either treat the balance in our favor as a long-time loan or accept merchandise in payment. If we take merchandise for this purpose, our imports will vastly exceed our exports for several years to come and the so-called balance of trade will be heavily against us, which would be a novel and perhaps an unpleasant experience.

As between ourselves and the countries in our debt, the rates of exchange can be held in our favor until we have collected all floating debts due to us. If we permit our debtors to fund these debts and turn over the securities to us, the bills of exchange representing payments of interest or dividends will keep exchange in our favor, and will offset any ordinary excess of imports over exports as far as the foreign exchange markets are concerned. England was in this financial position most of the time for nearly 200 years before the Great War. This transition from the position of a debtor to a creditor Nation will affect our foreign exchange position for many years to come and will furnish new problems for bankers and dealers in bills of exchange.

Hereafter an "invisible balance of trade" will run in our favor, as it has done in England's case for generations. How great it will be and how long it will continue depends on the manner in which we push our foreign trade and handle our international finances. American bankers, merchants, and importers must not forget that if the rate of exchange remains heavily in our favor it will be proportionately heavy against our best customers and will tend to check their purchases from us while stimulating them to sell merchandise to us to the possible detriment of our industries.

Spain profited enormously by the war. For a time she tried to collect payment in gold, and the rate of exchange in her favor rose to ridiculous heights. This tended to check her exports, and an arrangement was made that ameliorated these conditions. Spain learned that money is not food, though it will buy food. During the war Holland and the Scandinavian countries tried in a legitimate way to force the Entente Allies to let them import foodstuffs and raw materials for manufacture, and notified foreign debtors that they did not want gold. Foreign exchange figured prominently in international politics for several months. The world has learned much about economics and political economy in the last five years.

France is improving her exchange position by good banking methods in the face of terrible losses. Millions of British, Italian, Portuguese, and American soldiers have been spending their pay in France, and their Governments have bought supplies and military equipment from French manufacturers to the limit of their capacity. Since the first armistice was signed the money spent by and for foreign soldiers in France has done much to ease the rate of exchange on Paris.

In Latin America merchants have been clamoring for merchandise. They did not want gold. Goods on their shelves meant trade and profit, but gold was of little use when it could not be exchanged for merchandise. Gold is worth only what it will buy and is as valueless in a monetary sense as counterfeit bills when the possessor can not exchange it for real wealth in the form of articles of commerce.

Out of all this war-time confusion in foreign exchange markets and international commerce should come some radical improvement in monetary standards to simplify the transaction of international commerce and the settlement of accounts. The Far East has made greater progress in this respect than have Europe and the Americas. Some specialists in foreign exchange may find the existing complicated system to their advantage, but it would greatly help international trade if small merchants could ascertain prices and costs in other countries without the aid of an interpreter. The league of nations, if it comes into being, might very profitably deal with the unification of monetary standards throughout the world.

[From the Washington Post, Tuesday, Dec. 16, 1919.]

LONDON FINANCIAL MARKETS.

(Special cable from the London Times to the Washington Post. Copyright, 1919, by the Public Ledger Co.)

LONDON, December 15.

The stock markets showed a further almost general improvement and in one or two directions the rise in prices assumed substantial proportions. Gilt-edged securities were again good on the market and recovery in home railway stocks made further progress. Mexican Eagle oil shares rose £1, and the tendency of the South African market was good with a notable advance in Modderfontein. In view of the approaching holidays, there were signs of a falling off in the volume of business.

While floating supplies of credit were again ample, there did not appear to be quite such a superabundance of very cheap money on offer at the close. Borrowers, however, were able to satisfy all their requirements at the previous rates, 2 per cent being accepted for afternoon money. A fair volume of business was done in jobbing in discount, although the banks were not asking for any but short dated bills, maturing within a year, of which there were practically no sellers.

There was a distinct improvement in New York exchange, which closed at $3.72¾. The franc also improved, business being done at 39 francs 30 centimes. The rate closed at 40 francs 30 centimes.

Total imports and exports.

MERCHANDISE, BY MONTHS.

Months.	Imports.				Exports.			Monthly excess of—
	Free of duty.	Dutiable.	Total.	Per cent of free.	Domestic.	Foreign.	Total.	Imports.	Exports.
1918.
January	$176,330,562	$57,611,519	$233,942,081	75.4	$496,354,488	$8,442,818	$504,797,306		$270,855,225
February	141,931,340	65,784,200	207,715,540	68.3	406,492,092	4,869,878	411,361,970		203,646,430
March	169,296,543	72,865,474	242,162,017	69.9	514,770,188	8,130,050	522,900,238		280,738,221
April	190,633,749	88,347,578	278,981,327	68.3	489,834,516	10,608,390	500,442,906		221,461,579
May	226,619,941	96,232,957	322,852,898	70.2	542,241,494	8,683,297	550,924,791		228,071,893
June	178,998,042	81,352,029	260,350,071	68.8	475,647,993	8,151,406	483,799,399		223,449,328
July	175,643,781	66,233,977	241,877,758	72.6	500,758,371	6,709,398	507,467,769		265,590,011
August	203,794,049	69,208,865	273,002,914	74.5	519,357,034	7,656,882	527,013,916		254,011,002
September	205,293,121	56,375,523	261,668,644	78.4	541,821,877	8,574,117	550,395,994		288,727,350
October	194,080,763	52,684,143	246,764,906	78.6	492,037,083	9,823,467	501,860,550		255,095,644
November	204,274,453	46,733,584	251,008,037	81.4	513,180,250	9,056,344	522,236,594		271,228,557
December	163,456,557	47,429,960	210,886,517	77.5	555,379,051	10,507,061	565,886,112		354,999,595
Total, 12 months	2,230,352,901	800,859,809	3,031,212,710	73.6	6,047,874,437	101,213,108	6,149,087,545		3,117,874,835
1919.
January	157,519,481	55,473,163	212,992,644	74.0	611,802,497	10,750,286	622,552,783		409,560,139
February	153,676,326	81,447,948	235,124,274	65.4	574,096,706	11,000,306	585,097,012		349,972,738
March	182,981,370	84,614,919	267,596,289	68.4	592,381,542	10,760,106	603,141,648		335,545,359
April	178,829,089	94,127,860	272,956,949	65.5	680,074,049	34,726,088	714,800,137		441,843,188
May	215,124,360	113,801,233	328,925,593	65.6	592,605,392	11,361,633	603,967,025		275,041,432
June	195,549,458	97,366,085	292,915,543	66.7	907,968,086	20,411,117	928,379,203		635,463,660
July	235,734,602	108,011,468	343,746,070	68.5	557,975,783	10,711,732	568,687,515		224,941,445
August	213,492,812	93,796,274	307,289,086	69.5	634,470,487	11,583,938	646,054,425		338,765,339
September	308,861,303	126,523,364	435,384,667	70.9	582,093,722	14,441,119	596,534,841		161,150,174
October	284,824,373	117,049,288	401,873,661	70.9	620,729,119	11,180,927	631,910,046		230,036,385
Total, 10 months	2,126,593,174	972,211,602	3,098,804,776	68.6	6,354,197,383	146,927,252	6,501,124,635		3,402,319,859
Fiscal year:
1916	1,492,647,350	705,236,160	2,197,883,510	67.9	4,272,177,579	61,305,306	4,333,482,885		2,135,599,375
1917	1,848,840,520	810,514,665	2,659,355,185	69.5	6,227,104,050	62,884,344	6,290,048,394		3,630,693,209
1918	2,118,599,372	827,056,031	2,945,655,403	71.9	5,838,652,057	81,059,314	5,919,711,371		2,974,055,968
1919	2,230,222,808	865,497,260	3,095,720,068	72.0	7,081,461,938	151,336,805	7,232,798,743		4,137,078,675
Calendar year:
1915	1,167,428,816	611,167,879	1,778,596,695	65.6	3,493,230,532	61,440,315	3,554,670,847		1,776,074,152
1916	1,611,887,638	779,747,697	2,391,635,335	67.4	5,422,642,505	59,998,596	5,482,641,101		3,091,005,766
1917	2,135,552,430	816,915,525	2,952,467,955	72.3	6,169,617,225	63,895,372	6,233,512,597		3,281,044,642
1918	2,230,352,901	800,859,809	3,031,212,710	73.6	6,047,874,437	101,213,108	6,149,087,545		3,117,874,835

GOLD, BY MONTHS.

1919.
January	$2,113,217		$2,113,217		$3,377,038	$19,060	$3,396,098		$1,282,881
February	3,944,839		3,944,839		3,109,609	544	3,110,153	$834,686
March	10,481,197		10,481,197		3,788,174	15,055	3,803,229	6,677,968
April	6,691,795		6,691,795		1,763,727	6,330	1,770,057	4,921,738
May	1,079,525		1,079,525		1,954,415	1,720	1,956,135		876,610
June	26,134,460		26,134,460		82,883,390	89,450	82,972,840		56,838,380
July	1,846,495		1,846,495		54,668,687	4,540	54,673,227		52,826,732
August	2,490,489		2,490,489		45,107,094	82,224	45,189,318		42,698,829
September	1,471,628		1,471,628		29,031,050	19,416	29,050,466		27,578,838
October	4,969,595		4,969,595		43,968,066	180,924	44,148,990		39,179,395
Total, 10 months	61,223,240		61,223,240		269,651,250	419,263	270,070,513		208,847,273
Fiscal year:
1916	494,009,301		494,009,301		61,254,731	28,994,817	90,249,548	403,759,753
1917	977,176,026		977,176,026		284,948,025	6,973,200	291,921,225	685,254,801
1918	124,413,483		124,413,483		188,441,940	2,410,284	190,852,224		66,438,741
1919	62,363,733		62,363,733		116,340,663	234,872	116,575,535		54,211,802
Calendar year:
1915	451,954,590		451,954,590		19,321,567	12,104,351	31,425,918	420,528,672
1916	685,990,234		685,990,234		134,882,762	20,910,165	155,792,927	530,197,307
1917	552,454,374		552,454,374		364,500,814	7,383,070	371,883,884	180,570,490
1918	62,042,748		62,042,748		40,691,141	378,677	41,069,818	20,972,930

SILVER, BY MONTHS.

1919.
January	$5,576,281		$5,576,281		$18,891,544	$723,692	$19,615,236		$14,038,955
February	6,756,665		6,756,665		32,352,756	747,418	33,100,174		26,343,509
March	8,197,748		8,197,748		21,491,081	1,615,411	23,106,492		14,908,744
April	7,066,781		7,066,781		23,038,136	2,038,438	25,076,574		18,009,793
May	7,913,379		7,913,379		26,206,970	2,391,634	28,598,604		20,685,225
June	7,078,684		7,078,684		11,694,454	913,905	12,608,359		5,529,675
July	5,528,037		5,528,037		7,427,759	834,388	8,262,147		2,734,110
August	8,327,128		8,327,128		8,625,623	5,183,254	13,808,877		5,481,749
September	7,539,452		7,539,452		8,866,525	4,061,416	12,927,941		5,388,489
October	8,722,430		8,722,430		8,744,112	3,525,567	12,269,679		3,547,249
Total, 10 months	72,706,585		72,706,585		167,338,960	22,035,123	189,374,083		116,667,498
Fiscal year:
1916	34,154,375		34,154,375		53,171,760	6,619,763	59,791,523		25,637,148
1917	35,003,563		35,003,563		74,011,157	4,268,774	78,279,931		43,276,368
1918	70,328,153		70,328,153		127,705,661	11,475,738	139,181,399		68,853,246
1919	78,825,266		78,825,266		286,779,434	14,395,116	301,174,550		222,349,284
Calendar year:
1915	34,483,954		34,483,954		47,467,235	6,131,649	53,598,884		19,114,930
1916	32,263,289		32,263,289		64,985,637	5,609,400	70,595,037		38,331,748
1917	53,340,477		53,340,477		77,726,074	6,404,802	84,130,876		30,790,399
1918	71,375,699		71,375,699		239,972,503	12,873,961	252,846,464		181,475,765

Imports and exports of domestic and foreign merchandise.
BY COUNTRIES.

Countries.	October.				10 months ending October.
	Imports.		Exports.		Imports.			Exports.
	1918	1919	1918	1919	1917	1918	1919	1917	1918	1919
EUROPE.
Austria-Hungary		$257,557		$8,339,268	$64,937	$50,878	$1,390,305			$34,398,576
Azores and Madeira Islands	$101,083	96,910	$78,905	85,039	1,263,611	1,339,659	1,288,519	$306,749	$114,597	428,245
Belgium	1,032	1,259,396	25,602,530	31,342,621	158,022	13,956	4,161,040	33,294,341	122,032,276	314,379,470
Bulgaria		92,012		1,049	8,569		670,218			1,753,903
Denmark	9,815	526,936	1,317,254	11,175,065	884,632	482,249	4,960,590	32,264,876	2,190,516	140,084,569
Finland		1,381		4,247,560	2,896		583,931	459,387	100	18,069,138
France	4,276,430	14,046,214	81,847,622	67,497,672	82,549,338	52,360,924	87,329,770	804,690,160	809,600,024	757,429,051
Germany	147,225	2,157,608		20,663,521	158,901	162,888	4,914,787	3,275		52,420,095
Gibraltar	408	1,992	769,745	85,098	61,837	2,061	29,376	5,866,291	5,872,126	41,629,793
Greece	195,928	2,093,394	67,002	2,683,312	5,606,232	14,981,095	24,665,578	7,605,212	3,829,218	31,712,425
Iceland and Faroe Islands	63,232	33	510,725	633,327	436,155	881,305	484,589	1,742,025	2,150,511	3,132,273
Italy	1,080,491	7,224,329	42,980,729	31,871,737	31,104,745	22,204,934	40,893,785	324,319,671	400,094,752	366,173,049
Malta, Gozo, etc	685	4,010	114,739	34,120	52,017	4,181	18,857	76,149	355,914	360,773
Netherlands	1,401,483	9,180,229	1,022,908	20,357,776	20,482,188	7,793,134	61,271,308	57,504,268	5,618,089	197,337,570
Norway	89,371	439,222	4,357,104	18,485,843	5,673,617	1,121,809	4,891,172	58,903,676	28,332,890	117,813,768
Portugal	56,554	277,250	1,380,356	1,492,029	7,324,018	3,565,928	5,281,380	15,589,030	20,273,486	16,261,966
Roumania				189,911	1,285			253,222		4,808,110
Russia in Europe		23,121	190,890	830,601	8,470,208	5,319,830	2,866,266	296,390,981	8,525,300	13,379,965
Serbia, Montenegro, and Albania				26,299				3,540	17,497	2,846,512
Spain	2,450,616	3,376,864	1,719,266	8,344,695	30,841,961	13,634,642	38,040,061	72,006,418	46,351,180	82,461,439
Sweden	99,396	2,630,423	2,604,084	8,033,599	17,487,951	4,687,023	9,665,565	19,964,552	9,293,915	116,353,036
Switzerland	1,503,927	2,516,688	2,179,894	4,068,831	16,173,364	13,370,130	19,243,754	16,744,535	23,007,329	69,331,731
Turkey in Europe		2,516,474		1,944,131			10,889,737			15,599,810
United Kingdom:
England	8,109,462	36,848,680	139,229,149	151,154,884	204,158,817	103,603,643	188,053,769	1,500,276,863	1,617,152,897	1,735,247,344
Scotland	1,157,000	2,979,520	8,726,666	11,042,290	25,321,307	11,294,660	20,475,223	153,661,240	88,763,157	102,314,729
Ireland	1,443,613	1,890,094	724,234	2,768,075	18,204,396	15,160,996	10,769,362	19,978,859	5,591,683	30,126,682
Total United Kingdom	10,710,165	41,718,294	148,680,049	164,965,249	247,684,520	130,059,299	219,298,354	1,673,916,962	1,711,507,737	1,867,688,755
Total Europe	22,187,841	90,410,334	315,439,812	407,398,353	476,401,004	272,035,925	542,838,952	3,421,905,320	3,199,167,457	4,265,826,913
NORTH AMERICA.
Bermuda	210,008	9,659	186,563	149,686	894,719	1,033,269	1,020,180	1,934,202	1,767,456	1,686,263
British Honduras	274,768	230,376	121,726	73,199	1,394,807	2,058,622	2,300,132	1,650,883	1,878,894	2,176,225
Canada	46,782,695	54,877,193	82,504,502	67,976,685	328,319,977	371,429,268	393,436,449	691,164,704	727,117,082	587,653,629
Central American States:
Costa Rica	488,697	503,890	177,224	436,533	5,714,318	8,318,371	6,032,367	2,734,538	1,323,655	3,408,002
Guatemala	194,558	575,283	265,589	744,106	9,851,857	7,718,990	11,535,703	5,957,869	3,650,500	6,771,772
Honduras	369,733	658,590	351,756	548,666	4,175,317	4,659,944	6,444,284	4,241,373	4,080,643	5,955,294
Nicaragua	212,136	293,997	407,437	570,224	3,335,162	4,278,084	5,131,916	3,825,245	3,699,603	5,151,428
Panama	594,026	681,629	1,301,060	1,817,639	6,043,169	7,669,161	6,416,037	22,594,126	17,632,662	18,370,340
Salvador	361,115	379,620	426,056	497,129	5,019,535	7,000,562	4,014,283	3,568,986	2,903,002	4,861,602
Total Central American States	2,220,265	3,093,009	2,929,122	4,614,297	34,139,358	39,645,112	39,574,590	42,922,137	33,290,065	44,516,438
Greenland	97,500	103,500			218,500	97,500	103,500	13,186	5,596	19,036
Mexico	16,122,910	12,271,375	8,285,560	9,942,552	109,385,772	129,549,076	118,143,918	83,177,032	80,407,364	106,374,333
Miquelon, Langley, etc			23,440	64,546		3,191	571	458,260	213,420	437,937
Newfoundland and Labrador	928,408	1,050,372	1,436,932	1,446,095	2,937,596	4,529,306	4,632,008	8,088,466	10,262,887	12,294,442
West Indies:
British—
Barbados	4,571	75,819	228,113	310,700	230,060	932,960	488,944	2,081,497	2,597,683	3,151,390
Jamaica	245,474	485,347	344,497	1,027,213	2,847,774	2,549,406	4,347,984	6,464,603	5,838,861	8,623,290
Trinidad and Tobago	228,152	404,592	683,506	838,678	6,907,279	6,854,348	7,430,512	5,704,168	5,485,565	6,025,015
Other British	128,325	172,084	395,816	471,042	2,953,931	2,515,248	2,539,148	4,828,818	3,352,467	3,817,896
Total British West Indies	606,522	1,137,842	1,651,932	2,647,633	13,009,044	12,851,962	14,806,588	19,079,086	17,274,576	21,617,591
Cuba	16,720,023	34,850,570	16,389,231	27,357,811	237,728,028	254,332,972	375,286,383	146,259,908	187,214,341	214,568,093
Danish West Indies (Virgin Islands of United States)	26,472	166,115	150,938	170,775	906,943	1,120,295	1,550,108	1,451,404	1,274,314	1,456,281
Dominican Republic	899,934	210,602	772,040	1,735,840	11,571,247	6,661,645	10,854,773	12,635,804	13,179,447	14,799,148
Dutch West Indies	121,717	143,778	125,496	218,301	787,358	1,032,214	2,446,106	1,484,275	1,145,587	1,572,321
French West Indies	27,307	12,398	225,381	611,347	116,110	129,666	54,682	6,078,186	4,004,072	7,539,029
Haiti	477,676	1,009,392	705,863	868,775	3,175,102	5,213,370	8,541,168	5,643,739	7,355,414	12,372,270
Total West Indies	18,879,651	37,530,697	20,020,881	33,610,482	267,293,832	281,342,124	413,539,808	192,632,402	231,447,751	273,924,733
Total North America	85,516,205	109,169,181	115,508,726	117,877,542	744,584,561	830,587,468	972,754,156	1,022,041,272	1,086,390,515	1,029,083,236
SOUTH AMERICA.
Argentina	32,958,910	23,773,398	5,448,761	13,874,154	152,179,545	198,179,790	155,955,865	84,369,150	81,510,182	131,625,518
Bolivia		378,585	304,910	166,465	10,153	159,282	1,352,475	2,896,837	3,834,833	4,139,093
Brazil	4,881,759	24,171,680	2,549,799	12,279,001	128,159,036	83,480,567	184,953,444	50,499,887	48,481,637	101,577,678
Chili	13,074,601	5,818,281	4,519,788	3,449,293	118,876,743	137,306,238	64,715,843	44,846,616	52,601,262	46,950,214
Colombia	1,751,211	4,017,408	657,578	2,730,539	23,839,302	20,139,857	35,017,166	10,828,218	8,804,023	17,026,615
Ecuador	196,530	850,751	202,352	770,698	8,861,483	8,817,115	8,297,355	4,378,627	3,681,820	6,276,434
Falkland Islands				5,788	400,000			36,887	295,660	170,123
Guiana:
British	22,022	57,140	598,033	308,540	179,291	326,560	323,812	4,088,993	4,372,535	4,225,329
Dutch	21,011	63,981	187,414	1,129	1,311,047	526,518	774,967	1,189,432	1,217,187	1,282,285
French			13,600	1,954		5,091		698,514	629,040	953,076
Paraguay	45,869	65,151	8,745	66,588	69,978	83,592	596,016	344,036	604,176	706,565
Peru	3,014,073	3,981,197	1,527,785	2,141,263	34,906,037	30,977,326	28,074,345	17,345,968	17,482,438	22,491,021
Uruguay	1,034,714	3,783,598	942,769	1,914,116	30,206,017	17,607,629	41,823,531	15,141,547	14,432,778	28,452,940
Venezuela	662,660	1,325,851	470,087	1,586,517	13,569,208	10,478,109	27,814,656	9,095,202	5,763,502	11,115,039
Total South America	57,663,360	68,287,021	17,431,621	39,296,045	512,567,840	508,087,674	549,699,475	245,759,914	243,711,073	377,032,530

Imports and exports of domestic and foreign merchandise—Continued.
BY COUNTRIES—continued.

Countries.	October.				10 months ending October.
	Imports.		Exports.		Imports.			Exports.
	1918	1919	1918	1919	1917	1918	1919	1917	1918	1919
ASIA.
Aden		$1,395,185	$598	$170,443	$1,686,710	$627,888	$4,491,258	$967,643	$115,544	$1,021,847
China	$7,117,806	19,193,750	6,294,016	7,090,736	110,404,767	97,865,133	124,760,242	30,724,445	44,250,430	90,281,416
China, leased territory:
British					5,922			7,434	878
French						13,410		204,598	287,421
German	36	174,661	5		47,104	31,350	488,944	243,658	5,836	5,834
Japanese	3,528,666	879,293	205,329	876,901	9,826,616	24,915,707	13,558,272	3,624,457	5,779,303	11,979,561
Total China	10,646,508	20,247,704	6,499,350	7,967,637	120,284,409	122,825,600	138,807,458	34,804,592	50,323,868	102,266,811
Chosen	517	2,613	67,437	480,008	101,821	139,083	309,723	1,539,113	988,953	3,088,623
East Indies:
British—
British India	7,274,537	19,818,070	2,851,145	5,738,791	84,238,908	109,942,169	110,839,494	25,801,202	30,243,287	58,638,431
Straits Settlements	9,163,094	13,768,120	695,119	1,086,557	103,121,833	134,075,111	117,456,269	6,554,851	8,690,188	10,238,282
Other British	586,884	5,147,473	178,138	167,576	23,719,609	18,318,408	30,013,975	869,976	937,030	1,676,578
Total British East Indies	17,024,515	38,733,663	3,724,402	6,992,924	211,080,350	262,335,688	258,309,738	33,217,029	39,870,505	70,553,291
Dutch East Indies	3,852,256	7,826,399	3,780,561	3,577,471	80,050,732	70,828,874	57,015,802	17,004,817	16,214,814	41,475,197
French East Indies			42,596	56,606		332	1,589,530	134,670	469,239	1,352,974
Portuguese East Indies				213		404	17		4,912	6,316
Hongkong	1,895,133	2,657,705	1,766,097	1,276,239	8,881,673	26,676,116	18,530,278	13,257,763	20,425,099	17,886,793
Japan	27,167,129	43,257,223	14,202,224	19,658,946	208,967,140	254,273,513	315,607,321	126,149,942	223,114,129	289,219,833
Persia	8,723	171,879		25,466	855,713	609,752	1,002,089	174,746	126,137	880,724
Russia in Asia	77,190	1,144,457	85,191	9,220,793	2,127,395	3,950,131	5,389,603	102,922,173	4,558,818	48,878,171
Siam	25,310	56,907	99,970	142,135	113,003	100,294	152,800	821,747	1,335,523	1,795,053
Turkey in Asia	1,458	3,345,476	52,368	332,187	192,180	486,125	15,009,539		385,214	2,987,874
Other Asia					21,165		9,780		274	360
Total Asia	70,699,748	118,833,211	30,410,794	49,901,070	634,333,391	742,844,800	816,205,005	330,994,235	357,943,029	581,413,864
OCEANIA.
British Oceania:
Australia	3,110,835	4,205,653	4,632,129	4,800,019	15,074,600	54,330,327	49,377,793	42,447,803	62,375,172	83,593,599
New Zealand	1,934,490	1,901,681	1,519,333	2,137,082	6,051,413	16,421,526	18,877,149	12,392,165	17,207,327	23,390,668
Other British	147,523	1,036,580	229,411	28,651	1,753,074	3,268,265	4,262,143	433,547	684,028	479,620
Total British Oceania	5,192,857	7,146,917	6,410,873	6,965,752	22,879,086	74,080,118	72,517,085	55,273,521	80,266,527	107,373,896
French Oceania	89,824	324,093	115,574	77,131	1,455,510	2,492,024	1,615,844	856,874	1,271,798	1,052,773
German Oceania	162,144	163	62,043	31,272	495,199	717,062	1,557,939	337,492	358,747	225,241
Philippine Islands	9,983,747	6,076,609	5,976,290	4,133,420	47,668,055	67,970,475	54,627,615	27,960,512	45,542,653	61,041,210
Total Oceania	15,428,572	13,547,782	12,564,789	11,210,575	72,407,851	145,259,679	130,318,483	84,428,399	127,439,725	169,693,210
AFRICA.
Abyssinia							5		2,000
Belgian Congo	40		108,642	13,328		24,345	473,254	102,927	605,727	2,633,491
British Africa:
West	1,376,169	293,232	120,358	651,650	11,503,268	12,766,292	18,908,430	5,671,535	5,876,226	10,407,733
South	3,645,152	208,351	7,558,978	2,746,277	20,021,455	29,499,081	33,442,974	23,497,243	27,692,780	37,909,635
East	11,468	3,548	187,473	84,709	192,449	348,747	667,251	1,570,380	865,680	1,368,782
Total British Africa	5,032,789	565,134	7,866,809	3,482,636	31,717,172	42,614,120	53,018,655	30,739,158	34,344,685	49,685,153
Canary Islands	25,551	37,204	1,293	144,575	227,296	135,286	143,700	574,041	105,279	1,268,845
Egypt	2,287	607,385	1,344,188	1,506,028	27,340,603	24,771,373	29,135,517	2,687,451	5,098,254	8,488,789
French Africa	63,807	70,394	41,643	521,558	927,309	674,725	1,527,328	2,489,694	2,407,784	8,986,804
German Africa				5,750	466,987	8,209	89,274	2,120		287,122
Italian Africa				39,542	315,513		437,272	3,876		209,876
Liberia	28,093	8	47,482	37,678		64,003	172,765	164,723	99,944	212,886
Madagascar			2,763	6,004	132,738	21,776	39,053	140,107	64,704	520,832
Morocco	18,965	112,391	96	199,106	162,160	227,561	555,264	352,342	863,693	1,298,750
Portuguese Africa	97,648	227,616	1,101,892	270,018	2,317,197	1,961,212	1,395,618	3,587,600	2,711,382	4,426,531
Spanish Africa				238	386			76,718	9,587	54,893
Total Africa	5,269,180	1,620,132	10,504,808	6,226,461	63,607,361	70,502,610	86,988,705	40,920,757	46,313,040	78,074,972
Grand total	246,764,906	401,873,661	501,860,550	631,910,046	2,504,021,908	2,589,318,156	3,098,804,776	5,146,049,897	5,030,964,830	6,501,124,635

CALENDAR YEARS.	Imports.						Exports.
	Europe.	North America.	South America.	Asia and Oceania.	Africa.	Total.	Europe.	North America.	South America.	Asia and Oceania.	Africa.	Total.
1911	$770,293,236	$296,361,256	$187,514,969	$254,434,917	$23,754,782	$1,532,359,160	$1,293,072,862	$482,438,006	$121,736,604	$171,490,317	$23,788,957	$2,092,526,746
1912	900,003,944	373,809,916	233,731,935	284,887,243	25,640,017	1,818,073,055	1,467,451,834	573,298,563	138,944,930	191,832,602	27,690,064	2,399,217,993
1913	864,666,103	389,814,744	198,269,005	316,126,868	23,729,760	1,792,596,480	1,499,573,363	601,176,159	146,514,635	207,825,327	28,928,808	2,484,018,292
1914	783,517,509	441,400,758	229,520,375	315,176,388	19,660,971	1,789,276,001	1,339,295,916	481,588,221	91,013,339	176,402,751	25,324,823	2,113,624,050
1915	546,352,567	509,458,281	322,282,189	365,865,167	34,638,491	1,778,596,695	2,573,408,120	558,803,012	144,128,681	241,185,800	37,145,234	3,554,670,847
1916	633,316,886	658,438,120	427,609,562	610,377,429	61,893,338	2,391,635,335	3,813,278,324	924,553,649	220,266,818	470,531,804	54,010,506	5,482,641,101
1917	551,144,599	871,892,524	508,818,532	867,458,301	73,063,909	2,932,467,955	4,061,728,923	1,261,703,532	311,893,023	546,803,463	51,381,650	6,233,512,597
1918	318,121,271	974,615,243	610,931,072	1,042,038,662	85,506,462	3,031,212,710	3,858,697,768	1,325,486,350	302,709,610	602,996,198	49,197,619	6,149,087,545

Total values of imports and exports of the United States—October, 1919.
(Preliminary figures for 1919, corrected to Nov. 20, 1919.)

MERCHANDISE.

	October—		Ten months ending October—
	1919	1918	1919	1918	Increase.
IMPORTS.
Free of duty	$288,429,844	$194,080,763	$2,130,198,645	$1,862,621,891	$267,576,754
Dutiable	127,235,832	52,684,143	982,398,146	706,696,265	275,701,881
Total	415,665,676	246,764,906	3,112,596,791	2,569,318,156	543,278,635
EXPORTS.
Domestic	620,729,119	492,037,083	6,354,205,135	4,979,315,136	1,374,889,999
Foreign	11,181,853	9,823,467	146,928,178	81,649,703	65,278,475
Total	631,910,972	501,860,550	6,501,133,313	5,060,964,839	1,440,168,474
Excess of exports	216,245,296	255,095,644	3,388,536,522	2,491,646,683

IMPORTS AND EXPORTS OF MERCHANDISE, BY MONTHS.

	1919	1918	1917	1916	1915
IMPORTS.
January	$212,992,644	$233,942,081	$241,793,282	$184,350,942	$122,148,317
February	235,124,274	207,715,540	199,479,996	193,935,117	125,123,391
March	267,596,289	242,162,017	270,257,139	213,589,785	157,982,016
April	272,956,949	278,981,327	253,935,966	218,236,397	160,576,106
May	328,925,593	322,852,898	280,727,164	229,188,957	142,284,851
June	292,915,543	260,350,071	306,622,939	245,795,438	157,695,140
July	343,746,070	241,877,758	225,926,352	182,722,938	143,244,737
August	307,289,086	273,002,914	267,854,767	199,316,480	141,804,202
September	435,384,667	261,668,644	236,196,898	164,033,614	151,236,026
October	415,665,676	246,764,906	221,227,405	178,658,730	149,172,729
November		251,008,037	220,534,550	176,967,749	155,496,675
December		210,886,517	227,911,497	204,834,188	171,832,505
	[1] 3,112,596,791	2,569,318,156	2,504,021,908	2,009,833,398	1,451,297,515
EXPORTS.
January	622,552,783	504,797,306	613,324,582	330,036,410	267,879,313
February	585,097,012	411,361,970	467,648,406	401,783,974	299,805,869
March	603,141,648	522,900,238	553,985,699	410,742,034	296,611,852
April	714,800,137	500,442,906	529,927,815	398,568,532	294,745,913
May	603,967,025	550,924,791	549,673,545	474,803,637	274,218,142
June	928,379,203	483,799,399	573,467,789	464,685,956	268,547,416
July	568,687,515	507,467,769	372,758,414	444,713,964	268,468,702
August	646,062,177	527,013,916	488,655,597	510,167,438	260,930,995
September	596,534,841	550,395,994	454,506,904	514,924,134	300,654,921
October	631,910,972	501,860,550	542,101,146	492,813,918	336,152,009
November		522,236,594	487,327,604	516,167,324	327,679,353
December		565,886,112	600,135,006	523,233,780	339,306,362
	[1] 6,501,133,313	5,060,964,839	5,146,049,807	4,443,239,997	2,867,604,132
Excess of exports	3,388,536,522	2,491,646,683	2,642,027,989	2,433,406,599	1,416,426,617

[1] Ten months ending October.

GOLD AND SILVER.

	October—		Ten months ending October—
	1919	1918	1919	1918	Increase (+), decrease (−).
GOLD.
Imports	$4,969,595	$1,470,239	$61,223,240	$57,973,303	+ $3,249,937
Exports	44,148,990	2,178,149	270,070,513	36,441,228	+233,629,285
Excess of imports				21,532,075
Excess of exports	39,179,395	707,910	208,847,273
SILVER.
Imports	8,722,430	6,766,239	72,706,585	61,549,381	+ 11,157,204
Exports	12,269,679	32,037,469	189,374,083	197,369,122	− 7,995,039
Excess of exports	3,547,249	25,271,230	116,667,498	135,819,741

IMPORTS AND EXPORTS OF GOLD AND SILVER, BY MONTHS.

	Gold.			Silver.
	1919	1918	1917	1919	1918	1917
IMPORTS.
January	$2,113,217	$4,404,254	$58,926,258	$5,576,281	$5,997,455	$3,345,951
February	3,944,839	2,549,168	103,766,495	6,756,665	4,449,159	2,477,692
March	10,481,197	1,912,362	139,498,590	8,197,748	6,963,330	2,977,068
April	6,691,795	2,745,727	32,372,455	7,066,781	5,080,745	2,375,462
May	1,079,525	6,620,516	52,262,090	7,913,379	7,298,096	4,740,686
June	26,134,460	31,892,021	91,339,051	7,078,684	5,351,186	2,235,430
July	1,846,495	2,596,886	27,303,798	5,528,037	5,220,017	3,420,199
August	2,490,489	1,554,838	18,692,170	8,327,128	7,256,942	5,681,288
September	1,471,628	2,610,836	4,171,535	7,539,452	7,172,039	5,796,320

Total values of imports and exports of the United States—October, 1919—Continued.

IMPORTS AND EXPORTS OF GOLD AND SILVER, BY MONTHS—continued.

	Gold.			Silver.
	1919	1918	1917	1919	1918	1917
IMPORTS—continued.
October	$4,969,595	$1,470,239	$4,140,582	$8,722,430	$6,766,239	$5,049,484
November		1,920,209	2,906,476		5,490,246	9,086,298
December		1,765,692	17,065,874		4,330,245	6,154,593
	[1] 61,223,240	57,973,303	532,482,024	[1] 72,706,585	61,549,381	38,099,586
EXPORTS.
January	3,396,098	3,746,244	20,719,898	19,615,236	6,627,704	5,887,418
February	3,110,153	5,084,060	22,068,059	35,100,174	6,519,297	7,693,568
March	3,803,229	2,809,359	17,919,601	23,106,492	13,431,917	5,555,713
April	1,770,057	3,660,084	16,965,210	25,076,574	12,251,038	4,353,073
May	1,956,135	3,598,946	57,697,419	28,598,604	46,381,126	6,272,204
June	82,972,840	2,704,102	67,164,268	12,608,350	8,566,271	8,964,764
July	54,673,227	7,199,908	69,052,357	8,262,147	40,685,701	5,538,042
August	45,189,318	3,277,134	46,049,306	13,808,877	20,549,127	7,503,711
September	29,050,466	2,283,929	31,332,396	12,927,941	10,340,187	10,465,079
October	44,148,990	2,178,149	11,154,074	12,269,679	32,037,469	6,983,064
November		3,047,907	7,223,160		7,150,451	4,788,674
December		1,579,996	4,538,136		48,306,176	10,125,472
	[1] 270,070,513	36,441,223	360,122,583	[1] 189,374,083	197,369,122	69,216,730
Excess of imports		21,532,075	172,359,436
Excess of exports	208,847,273			116,667,498	135,819,741	31,117,144

[1] 10 months ending October.

[Advance proof from Textiles, Boston, Mass., December, 1919.]

PROTECTION OR FREE TRADE.

Now that the sovereignty and independence of the United States have been protected by the rejection of the German treaty with the league of nations, it is fortunate that the President in his message to Congress has drawn the lines sharply on the other great issue of free trade or protection to American industry. After stating the well-known facts as to the huge debts that Europe owes to the United States, the great excess of our exports over imports, the inability of Europe to ship gold in payment, and the danger of increasing the present stock of gold in this country, the President advocates free trade in these words:

"The time has nearly passed for international governmental loans and it will take time to develop in this country a market for foreign securities.

"The productivity of the country greatly stimulated by the war must find an outlet by exports to foreign countries and any measures taken to prevent imports will inevitably curtail exports, force curtailment of production, load the banking machinery of the country with credits to carry unsold products, and produce industrial stagnation and unemployment. If we want to sell, we must be prepared to buy. Anything, therefore, which would tend to prevent foreign countries from settling for our exports by shipments of goods into this country could only have the effect of preventing them from paying for our exports and therefore of preventing the exports from being made."

This proposal to change the settled policy of the United States from protection to free trade, like that of abandoning the policy of Washington for a league of nations, must be judged, not by the temporary and extraordinary conditions created by the World War, but by the conditions that will exist when the world is restored to a normal basis.

Under the present abnormal conditions, not only is Europe unable to pay her debts with gold but the greater part of Europe has been deprived temporarily of the ability to produce goods with which to pay these debts. In some sections this loss of productive power is due to devastation; in other sections, to the lack of raw material. But in all sections of the Continent the disability is temporary and the return to normal production but a question of a few years under the skillful management for which Europeans are so well fitted.

When the present prostration has passed and European mills and workshops are again in operation, any attempt to pay the huge debts to America with manufactured goods would disorganize American industries and cause widespread unemployment.

It was the fear of demoralized industry that led the peace council at Paris to reject the idea of allowing Germany to pay her indemnity with manufactured goods. As one of the entente representatives put it, "The very Government that proposes this plan would be the first to revolt against it if put into effect." And yet with that fact so clearly demonstrated at Paris, the President now proposes that Europe's gigantic debt to America shall be paid with European goods.

The remedy for the present extraordinary situation in international trade is not to be found by opening the gates for a devastating flood of manufactured goods into the United States. It is to be found in the regulation of both exports and imports on the principle that the citizens, not only of the United States but of every country on earth, have the first right to the consumption of what they produce and to the production of what they consume.

Instead of admitting foreign goods free of duties, the mad struggle for export trade should be abandoned. The true American policy is to provide for the needs of the American people with American goods so far as nature makes that possible, letting foreign countries adopt the same policy of industrial independence for themselves. That principle, not the league of nations, is the secure foundation for world peace. Under the extraordinary conditions now existing the United States by the power of mere example can do much to secure its general adoption by the nations of the earth.

The President not only advocates free trade for the United States but in the extract from his message quoted above views with approval the policy of granting ultimately great loans to Europe for financing our export trade. By indorsing it the President has fallen a victim to the money madness that has taken possession of so many influential men and who are obsessed with the idea that the welfare of the American people depends on shipping as great a quantity of goods as possible to foreign countries. Among the exponents of this policy we find former Secretary Redfield seriously proposing that the American people lend $8,000,000,000 to foreigners that the foreigners may use the money to buy American goods. In this way we are to pay ourselves for the goods we sell. The same scheme is advocated by E. A. Filene, of Boston, who urges a great popular loan of $4,000,000,000 as a starter, "with securities issued in denominations as low as $5, so they will be within the reach of everybody."

Anyone with ordinary horse sense knows that the Redfield-Filene scheme would mean no payment at all, but merely a transfer of the credit from the American exporter, middleman, and banker to the American public; and, furthermore, that such loans mean a huge interest charge, which at 6 per cent on Mr. Redfield's loan would amount to $480,000,000 a year, or $4,800,000,000 every 10 years, against countries that can not now pay what they owe.

But the most serious result of this scheme would be its effect on the cost of living. The only real remedy for the social unrest and the labor troubles in the United States is a reduction of the cost of living. The Redfield-Filene scheme would bring with it an immediate increase by aggravating the scarcity of all the necessities of life. This would be brought about at a time when as a result of the war conditions and the demands of labor for shorter hours, with reduced output, production not only has been overtaken by consumption but is now far short of the necessities of American consumers. Under this scheme anyone with $5 in his pocket can increase the cost of living by lending his money to foreign creditors in countries that are bankrupt or on the verge.

The foreign borrower will use American money to buy the necessaries of life in the United States, taking them away from the American consumer.

The foreigners will have the goods. The exporter, middleman, and banker will have the money and the profits. The American investor will have a finely engraved piece of paper on which some one somewhere promises to pay something sometime. The American producer and consumer will have the privilege of paying higher prices for the necessities of life and the materials that make up the cost of production. With the rising prices will continue the hopeless and demoralizing struggle to raise wages to the level of the cost of living, with the certain result of increasing social unrest and the strain on the social order.

There is to be no regulation of exports. The American products taken from American consumers will be used not only to supply the real necessities of suffering peoples in distant countries but to gratify the vanity and feed the extravagance of foreigners who are not suffering, while foreign Governments, relieved of the burden of providing for the needs of their nationals, will be able to turn their resources to the support of armies and navies for world conquest and dominion, directed, perchance, against the United States itself. This plan is not only in the minds of schemers, it is so far advanced that the Edge bill, authorizing United States charters to banking corporations for financing it, has already been passed by both House and Senate and may be a law before these words are printed.

This banking scheme to lend American money to foreigners should be cast with free trade and the league of nations into the everlasting discard.

(Telephoned from the Secretary's office of the Treasury at 4.20.)

Rates of exchange as of noon, December 11, 1919, as established by the Federal Reserve Bank of New York:

(1) England: $3.72⅛ to the pound.
(2) France: 11.75 francs to the dollar.
(3) Belgium: 11.30 francs to the dollar.
(4) Italy: 13.45 lire to the dollar.

If any further information is wanted, or the Senator desires to ask any questions relating to the matter, call Mr. Kelley, of the Secretary's office in the Treasury.

The solvency of the Allies—Great Britain, France, Belgium, Italy.

* * * * * * *

GREAT BRITAIN.

As one of the principal belligerents, engaged in the war from the beginning of hostilities, Great Britain has made expenditures growing directly and indirectly out of the war which are far greater than those of any other allied nation.

For convenience, in considering the financial status of Great Britain, monetary values will be rendered in American dollars at the par of exchange, $4.866 to the pound sterling.

Briefly stated, the major facts respecting the finances of the United Kingdom as of March 31, 1919, the end of the last fiscal year, are as follows:

The gross debt was $36,746,650,056, of which sum only $6,569,100,000 represented external obligations, repayable in foreign currency, while advances to allies and dominions amounted to $8,580,000,000.

The estimated debt service of the United Kingdom for the fiscal year 1919–20, as presented in the Chancellor of the Exchequer's budget proposals, will be $1,751,760,000, or 30 per cent of revenue receipts. And the normal peace budget of the British Government, as estimated by the chancellor, will be $3,727,356,000, of which the debt service, including amortizations of one-half per cent, will constitute about 52 per cent. The post-war budget, as foreseen by the chancellor, will be approximately four times that of the fiscal year 1913–14.

PAYING THE BILL.

The war, through increase of debt, pensions, and relief payments, and increase of normal civil expenditures, has placed a very large tax burden upon the British people. It appears that in a normal post-war year their taxes will have to yield about $3,400,000,000, or 19.4 per cent of their national annual income, which is conservatively estimated to be $17,517,600,000.

But already the policy of the Government in the administration of war finances has quite properly included heavy taxation. Of the total money raised for the Government's own expenses during the last five years, 36 per cent was supplied by means other than loans. And the fact that the taxing machinery has been organized for raising such enormous sums will be very advantageous in planning the after-war administration of Government finances.

ULTIMATE OFFSETS TO DEBT.

Furthermore, it will be noted, no allowance has been made here for the indemnities which eventually will be collected from the central powers nor for the debts owed to the British Government by the dominions and the allies. While they should be considered as ultimate offsets to the British debt, in what degree receipts from these sources may be available in the near future is a matter of speculation. Eventually, however, they will reduce the burdens of English taxpayers, so that the ratio between taxation and income will gradually be reduced.

As regards the internal debt, which is 82 per cent of the total, there is involved no transfer of wealth to other countries. The payment of interest and principal, it is true, involves a transfer of wealth from taxpayer to debt holder which may seriously burden the individual taxpayer. How well such a load may be adjusted to the ability to bear it will depend upon the equitableness of the taxing system. And certainly there can be few holders of Government bonds who will not be called upon to pay in some part, at least, the taxes which they will in turn receive as interest or principal of the obligations.

The interest and amortization of the other 18 per cent of the debt, which is owed abroad, will amount to approximately $360,000,000. As an offset, the interest due Great Britain on advances made to allies and dominions amounts approximately to one and three-tenths times the total interest on the external debt. Payments, in the main, will have to be made in the form of commodities or services, which, in international trade accounts, contribute to the credit or export side of the ledger. To what extent England's export trade will be stimulated by this situation is problematic. For many years the United Kingdom has imported more goods than it has exported, but this so-called unfavorable balance of trade has been offset by international payments which do not enter into the reports of foreign trade.

FOREIGN INVESTMENTS.

Chief among these counterbalancing items in the case of Britain have been the returns from investments abroad and the receipts of British-owned ocean carriers.

It is estimated that British foreign investments before the war amounted to $19,464,000,000 and that they now approximate $14,500,000,000. Broadly speaking, then, the returns from foreign investments that may be relied upon in balancing the international account have been reduced by about one-fourth during the war. Nevertheless, the remaining foreign investments exceed the external debt by about $8,000,000,000, and the yield from these investments at normal rates would not only pay the interest on that debt but also leave a large margin to England's credit.

PRODUCTIVE CAPACITY.

Nevertheless, the prosperity of the nation will be measured largely by its ability to produce marketable commodities for sale abroad.

The experience of Great Britain in the war is a most illuminating example of the way in which war induces a rapid expansion of the capacity to produce consumable goods. Edgar Crammond estimates that the nation's power of production has been increased by about 50 per cent since 1914.

Great Britain's industrial position has rested heretofore upon the ability to gather in raw materials from abroad and resell them as manufactures. In 1913, 69.5 per cent of the merchandise exports were classed as manufactures, while of the imports only 25.2 per cent were so classed. The expanded physical equipment has enhanced the nation's power to serve as a world's workshop.

LABOR FORCE.

The number of men killed and those who died of disease in the armed forces of the United Kingdom during the war was approximately 900,000. The population numbered 45,516,259 in 1911. The increase in subsequent years, estimated on a basis of the excess of births over deaths in the civilian population, added 2,057,121. Deducting 900,000 from the total thus obtained leaves an estimated population at the end of 1918 of 46,673,380.

But even if the population is larger than at the beginning of the war, it does not necessarily follow that the actual productive labor force has been augmented. There has been a substitution of hitherto unemployed women, for men withdrawn from civilian tasks, however, and it is reasonable to expect that such substitution will be operative in some measure in the future.

INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATION.

The manifold improvements in England's industrial organization during the war have constituted the most durable offset to the loss of man power.

It is estimated that whereas in 1872 Great Britain produced 57 per cent of the total food consumed in the country, in 1913 only 42 per cent was of domestic production. During the war agricultural production was greatly increased, some 4,000,000 acres being added to the area under cultivation, and this will make the country less dependent upon foreign sources of food supplies than before the war.

STANDARDIZATION.

It was in manufactures that the most significant increases in output were effected. How this expansion was accomplished is explained in part by Prof. A. W. Kirkaldy as follows: "At Lord Kitchener's instance, the whole world was searched for the best machinery; new factories were built, old factories were stripped and recquipped; and the new machinery was automatic, semiautomatic, foolproof, such as unskilled workers could very quickly be taught to handle. * * * We had scrapped all our old-fashioned ideas, our old machines that could do very beautiful work with a skilled man behind, and we replaced them with foolproof tools, whose steel brain did the work, with an unskilled worker to pull the lever."

OTHER INDUSTRIAL GAINS.

In other respects the gains to the industrial organization of the country have been important. Workers have been taught as never before to work with gauge and micrometer. The resulting gains in accuracy of workmanship will be lasting.

Again, manufacturers have learned much about the advantages of standardization of processes and operations in their plants. This was brought about in part by the Government in its efforts to bring to the maximum the output of all the plants working for the Government. Under governmental guidance there was a pooling of experience that has been of great educational value to those directing the production of goods.

There has been a tendency toward combination in industry, for export trade, and for production. A notable example is the recent dyestuffs combination. Employers, too, have learned to work together more readily than hitherto. Cooperation in unusual degree for a common cause of such magnitude as winning the war is bound to have its lasting effects.

PREPARATION OF BANKS.

One evidence of the foresight of financial leaders in England is found in the amalgamations of large commercial banks, which have brought together huge aggregations of banking resources.

Whereas in 1902 there were 115 banks in the United Kingdom publishing accounts, and in 1914, 70, in 1918 amalgamations had reduced the number to 57, with assets of approximately $12,700,000,000, or an average of about $223,000,000 per bank. No such concentration of banking resources has been effected in the United States. Here, in June, 1918, the State, private, and national banking institutions numbered 28,880, with aggregate resources of $40,726,400,000, or an average per bank of $1,410,000.

The recent amalgamation movement owes its chief impetus to the contemplated after-war demands that increased business would make upon the banks. With the principal banking resources already combined into larger units, English bankers are better prepared than ever to assist in the development of English industry and commerce.

The war occasioned a large increase in paper money, chiefly through currency notes issued directly by the British Government. On July 29, 1914, the Bank of England had issued $267,000,000 of notes secured by a gold reserve of 69 per cent. This had increased by June 18, 1919, to $505,000,000, with an 84 per cent gold reserve. On June 18, 1919, the amount of currency notes in circulation totaled $1,677,000,000, with a gold reserve of 8.5 per cent. These were emergency notes, and the whole amount was, therefore, a net addition to the paper circulation.

The national wealth, valued at $82,500,000,000 in 1914, is now estimated by Crammond at $116,000,000,000, representing a war-time increase of 39 per cent.

AFTER THE NAPOLEONIC WARS.

England's recovery and industrial expansion following the Napoleonic wars furnish an object lesson that may well be recalled in connection with the present situation. It is very difficult, of course, to institute a comparison between conditions obtaining a century ago and those of to-day. The applications of steam and electricity in industry and other transformations and developments in the equipment for supplying goods and services make ours an industrial age markedly different from that of 1815. Nevertheless, without pressing the analogy unduly, it is possible to find interesting and suggestive similarities between conditions and problems in Great Britain in the two periods.

England took part in a series of wars that continued, with brief interruptions, from 1793 to 1815. The population of Great Britain in 1816 was about 20,000,000. The wealth of the United Kingdom at that time was not more than $12,500,000,000, and the national income was not more than $1,500,000,000. Nevertheless, the country had incurred an aggregate debt of $4,475,000,000, the annual interest charge on which was $165,000,000. Thus, approximately 11 per cent of the national income was paid in support of the debt. At the same time the total annual expenditure of the Government was more than 25 per cent of the national income.

It is interesting to note that the estimate of the ratio between debt service and national income for the present after-war period is almost identical with that just cited. The ratio between the total expenditures in the coming budget and the national income is 21 per cent, or somewhat less than the estimated ratio in 1816.

Moreover, heavy taxation during the Napoleonic wars had borne much the greater part of the British Government expenditures. Taxes yielded $9,732,000,000 and loans $2,189,700,000.

In spite of the heavy expenditures, the wealth of Great Britain increased year by year during the wars. The steam engine was brought into general use, and spinning mills in the cotton and woolen trades underwent great development. The output of coal and iron rose rapidly. Both internal and foreign trade multiplied. Exports, which in 1811 were valued at $155,712,000, were valued at $248,166,000 in 1815.

During the Napoleonic wars there had been issued a great volume of paper currency, and prices rose to great heights. After 1797, when the Bank of England suspended cash payments, the country's circulating media consisted entirely of paper money.

Shortly after the signing of the peace treaty there was a great slump in prices, and the years 1816 and 1817 were marked by a considerable business depression. Poor crops in England contributed much to this result, and another cause seems to have been a misjudgment of the after-war continental demand for English manufactures, and a consequent speculation in commodities at prices which proved disastrous to English traders. Whether the Continent's inability to offer goods in exchange outweighed the influence of English tariff restrictions aimed at the Continent, it is impossible to say. In either event the result was the same. The Continent had need of English goods, but was not prepared under the handicaps existing to pay for them.

But in 1818, despite the temporary setback, British industry and commerce made noticeable gains. By 1820 a period of rapid industrial growth had begun. What had seemed an unbearable burden of debt in 1815 was borne with comparative ease.

THE OUTLOOK.

All in all, the outlook for industrial progress in England is favorable. The manufacturing capacity of the country has been greatly increased during the war. Even more notable have been the improvements in ports and warehouse facilities. Ships are being turned out rapidly, and the British merchant marine still exceeds in tonnage that of any other nation. A system of preferences which unites the various parts of the empire commercially more closely than ever before will give the vast colonial resources a new significance for the development of British industry and trade. The position of London as a world financial center still is an exceptionally important asset for the period of rehabilitation.

The recent removal of restrictions on the exportation of capital for investment will naturally result in an expansion of the export trade and a stimulation of domestic production.

Much depends upon the spirit and temper of a people. Their record of achievements in industry and finance has amply demonstrated the capacity of the English for doing big things in a big way, and for meeting emergencies with the requisite energy and ability.

In view of the advantages accruing from a century of progress in the realms of industry and finance, it may be expected that Great Britain will again recover from the effects of war no less quickly than it did a century ago.

FRANCE.

The surprising military achievements of France in the World War attested not only the fortitude and morale of a great people but the strength and adaptability of the country's industrial and financial organization before the war. Because of the sacrifices in men and wealth which France made in support of the common cause of the Allies, all the world is interested in the reconstruction and readjustment of French industry and finance.

AREA, POPULATION, AND DEBT.

In area continental France is more than four times as large as New York State. The population in 1911 was 39,601,509. But in thinking of France as an economic unit its vast colonial empire must be included. In addition, France now regains the lost Provinces of Alsace-Lorraine, with an area of 5,605 square miles and a population numbering 1,874,000 in 1910.

The war losses of France in killed are estimated at approximately 1,385,000 men. In the 77 uninvaded departments there was, from 1914 to 1918, inclusive, a loss in population of about 1,070,000, calculated on the basis of reported births and deaths.

The national wealth of France before the war was estimated at $67,000,000,000. But in computing the value of national wealth at present the changed level of prices should be taken into account, and inasmuch as prices rose from July, 1914, to March, 1919, approximately 289 per cent, it may be assumed that a revaluation of France's national wealth in terms of money values to-day would give a figure well beyond $100,000,000,000.

The total debt of France on July 31, 1914, was 34,186,147,969 francs, or, at par of exchange, $6,593,278,296. The debt in March, 1919, was approximately $34,908,000,000. Some $1,388,600,000, however, had been advanced to the Allies. Taking no account of other offsets, the net debt, computed by deducting from the gross total the advances to allies, amounts to approximately 173,000,000,000 francs, or $33,389,000,000.

The paper money in circulation, notes of the Bank of France, on June 5, 1919, amounted to $6,628,905,000, backed by a gold reserve equaling 14.7 per cent of the face value of the notes. On July 30, 1914, the note circulation was $1,290,000,000, and the gold reserve was 61.9 per cent.

Of the total debt, about $5,785,000,000 is external. As offsets to the external debt, there are French investments abroad estimated at $8,100,000,000.

ABILITY TO CARRY THE DEBT.

As estimated by Ribot, the peace budget of France will require approximately 16,000,000,000 or 17,000,000,000 francs, which is three times the budget of 1914. The service of the debt, which he estimates will be 200,000,000,000 francs in 1920, is placed at 10,000,000,000 francs.

In view of the foreign investments and the expected payments of indemnities by Germany, it appears that no great difficulty will be experienced by France in caring for the external obligations after the resumption of normal peace activities.

The internal debt is so large that only by means of heavy taxation can the necessary revenues for its service be obtained. In view of the sudden invasion and the overruning of a large portion of French territory, it was deemed expedient to rely during the war mainly upon borrowing. Until the taxing machinery can be reorganized, it is probable that considerable further borrowing on the part of France will be necessary. Ultimately, taxation sufficient to meet the expenses will have to be levied. The exceedingly wide distribution of the holdings of the Government debt by the French people should facilitate the raising of sufficient revenue from taxation.

The key to the solution of the fiscal problems confronting the French Government is industrial. It is important, therefore, to note the degree of preparation already made for the present industrial tasks and the development and utilization of latent resources.

RECONSTRUCTION DURING THE WAR.

The really wonderful efficiency of the French nation as a fighting organization was in itself a guaranty that the national equipment for production was highly developed. Nor was this magnificent equipment for the production of the materials required in war used up in a single supreme effort. France was not exhausted at the close of the war, as was abundantly shown by its power of offense to the very end. It was not necessary to adopt, and France did not adopt, the slogan "business as usual" in order to preserve intact the capacity for peace-time production. Efficiency in a long war necessarily requires a high degree of provision for industrial production in peace.

The Departments of Nord and Pas de Calais, which were overrun in the early weeks of the war, were among the most highly developed industrial sections of France. The districts occupied by the enemy represented more than 50 per cent of the nation's coal production, 80 per cent of the total iron-ore production, 66 per cent of the steel output, and 68 per cent of the pig-iron output. The textile, beet sugar, and other important industries also suffered greatly.

However, production was not paralyzed. So resolutely was the provision of food undertaken that by the spring of 1916 the agricultural situation was almost as satisfactory as it had been two years before. It is significant that between June, 1915, and June, 1917, the number of cattle in France increased appreciably.

INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION.

In various lines of industry there was expansion of the capital equipment as the war progressed. New plants were constructed and old ones were enlarged. In addition to the construction by the French, many new works and improvements were made by the British and the Americans, chiefly transport facilities.

The rapidity with which the French put new plants into operation is indicated by the results of an investigation made by the Department of Labor in July, 1917. Mines, quarries, railways, tramways, and establishments which were under the supervision of the ministries of war and marine were not included in the investigation. In the 52,278 plants investigated, which were engaged in what may be called civilian production, it was found that the number of employees at work in July, 1917, was larger than before the war; the figures being respectively 1,559,393 and 1,524,959.

The construction of new plants and enlargement of old ones was widely distributed among the several branches of industry. The chemical industries necessarily were greatly stimulated. Before the signing of the armistice the production of sulphuric acid had almost doubled the prewar volume, and the output of nitric acid had been increased to thirty or forty times the former production.

In the field of mechanical construction the war occasioned the renewal in large part of the tool equipment of the French factories. Much of this equipment was obsolete and its replacement with more modern machine tools marked a permanent gain. The scarcity of workers in many cases was largely offset by the introduction of labor-saving machines. In fact, the utilization of machinery did not merely replace former workers, it carried production to levels never before attained.

COAL AND WATER POWER.

New coal fields helped to replace the output of the mines that had been seized. The iron deposits of Normandy gave rise to an important smelting industry in that region.

One of the most significant of all the industrial developments during the war was the expansion of hydroelectric installations. Of the estimated 6,000,000 horsepower available in the country, only about 650,000 horsepower had been brought into use in 1913. At the end of 1917 there had been added some 374,000 horsepower, or more than half as much as all the developed water power in 1913. These new power installations have profoundly influenced the metallurgical industries. Before the armistice about 50 electric furnaces were producing steel, with an estimated capacity of 800,000 tons annually. A beginning has been made in the electrification of railways, and it is expected that the work of further electrification will be pushed vigorously. A full utilization of water-power resources would result in a saving of approximately 30,000,000 tons of coal annually.

The principal sources of hydroelectric energy are in the sections of France least exposed to invasion. This fact and the development of transportation in central, southern, and western France during the war, including an enormous expansion of port and terminal works, combine to make relatively permanent the new center of French industry. And this means that in many cases the destroyed factories in northeastern France will not be rebuilt on the old sites.

RECOVERY OF ALSACE-LORRAINE.

In addition to this reconstruction behind the lines in France, the productive equipment of the country has been greatly enlarged as a result of the restoration of Alsace-Lorraine and the control of the coal mines in the Saar Basin.

Throughout the period of German control agriculture and manufacturing in Alsace-Lorraine, already important, continued to develop.

The recovery of the Provinces is especially important for France, however, because of their mineral resources. The iron deposits in Lorraine, it is estimated, amount to 1,800,000,000 tons. They occupy an area of approximately 1,660 square miles. The output in 1913 was 21,000,000 tons. While the coal resources of Alsace-Lorraine do not correspond in volume to the iron, the control of the Saar Valley mines will offset the relative shortage of coal in the recovered Provinces.

COAL RESOURCES.

The coal production in the Saar Basin before the war amounted to about 16,500,000 tons annually. According to the terms of the treaty of peace Germany undertakes to deliver to France 7,000,000 tons of coal a year for 10 years, and, in addition, an amount of coal equal to the difference between the annual production before the war of the mines of the Nord and Pas de Calais, which were destroyed as a result of the war, and the production of the mines of the same area for a period not exceeding 10 years. Apparently, then, the coal resources at the disposal of France in the reconstruction period are to be in excess of the coal produced before the war and the iron resources will be greatly superior to those of the prewar period.

POTASH DEPOSITS.

The potash deposits of Alsace also are important. The output in 1913 was 350,000 tons, although the Germans had never found it necessary to work these deposits intensively under a policy of artificially restricted production. In the coming years unusual emphasis will be placed upon the enlargement of agricultural production in France; and every domestic source of fertilizer will facilitate the expansion of agriculture.

Alsace-Lorraine was the chief seat of the German cotton manufacturing industry and was also an important center of the woolen industry. The number of cotton spindles in the returned Provinces before the war was one-fourth the number in France. Other important manufacturing industries in Alsace-Lorraine include glass, chemicals, and paper.

WILL DEVELOP MANUFACTURES.

The indications are that France will not revert to the prewar industrial position, characterized so largely by small-scale production of fine-quality manufactures. Doubtless there will be sufficient hand production and concentration upon luxury articles, but the main development promises to be the building up of a great manufacturing center in line with prewar developments in England and Germany. Fundamental bases for such a development are found in the coal and iron which will be available in the reconstruction period, the large resources in water power, and the improved port facilities. With a vast colonial empire supplying raw materials and absorbing manufactures and with other markets open to French trade throughout the world it is reasonable to expect that France will eventually become a much more powerful manufacturing nation than it was before the war.

FRENCH COLONIES.

The importance of the French colonial possessions for the future of French industry should not be overlooked.

The total area of the French colonial possessions is more than twenty-two times that of continental France. The population of these colonies is greater by 18 per cent than the population of continental France. The extent of the industrial development of these outlying regions is best reflected in the statistics of trade. In 1913 the total foreign trade of the colonies was valued at $608,800,000. The trade, therefore, was approximately one-fourth that of France proper. It is important to note that France supplied 55 per cent of the imports of the colonies and of the exports from the colonies 48 per cent was sent to France.

This vast colonial empire of France contains valuable resources—agricultural, forest, and mineral. Time will be required for the further development of these outlying regions, but the indications are that their development in the near future will progress much more rapidly than in the years immediately before the war. France has need of the raw materials which the colonies can supply, and the manufacturing capacity of France will need new outlets. The logical line of development, therefore, embodies a concentration upon the exploitation of what is already in control of France. The recent extension of credit by French bankers to a Brazilian railway enterprise is suggestive of the temper and outlook of French industrial interests at the present time. It is to be expected that French capital will be invested more heavily than ever before, not only in French colonies but also in other undeveloped lands.

PROSPECTIVE AGRICULTURAL DEVELOPMENT.

As a necessary part of the industrial development of France in the reconstruction period, much emphasis is to be placed upon agriculture. There was a noticeable extension of the use of agricultural machinery before the war, particularly in northern France. The stimulus to the use of machinery which has been occasioned by the war will not be dissipated at once. The enormous capacity of the French metallurgical industries will find one of its natural outlets in the production of farm machinery.

In view of the importance that the development of the export trade of France will assume in the reconstruction period, it is significant to note that the losses suffered by the French merchant marine during the war have been offset by new construction and purchases. Other construction is under way, and a portion of the indemnity exacted of Germany will be paid to France in the form of merchant ships. Lloyd's Register of Shipping, June, 1919, shows that the tonnage of France's merchant fleet exceeds the prewar figure.

SPEEDY RECUPERATION.

The French people have made surprising progress since the armistice in readjusting industry to a peace basis. As early as February, 1919, the minister of industrial reconstruction reported that out of a total of 1,700,000 employees occupied on November 11, 1918, in a group of Government and private plants, 1,300,000 were then engaged in peaceful pursuits. An investigation by the Department of Labor in April revealed the fact that the reemployment of the war workers in peace activities had progressed remarkably well.

One of the most striking developments of the reconstruction period is found in the rapidity with which the means of communication, destroyed or impaired during the war, have been restored. It is reported that 90 per cent of the destroyed railways have been reconstructed and that approximately one-third of the highways damaged during the war have been repaired. The minister of liberated regions reported in June that 70,000 houses had already been repaired, that 10,000 new houses had been completed, and that between 55,000 and 70,000 houses were under construction.

ABLE TO SUPPLY MUCH EQUIPMENT.

While a great volume of raw materials from abroad will be required in the work of rehabilitation, for the most part French industries are themselves able to supply the necessary equipment. The great need is not foreign machines and tools, but materials with which to operate idle equipment. The country is handicapped somewhat at the present time in its purchase of materials abroad by the unfavorable exchange rates. As an offset, however, the depreciation of the franc in foreign markets tends to restrict the importation of goods which are not essential in the necessary work of reconstruction.

Moreover, it does not follow that French industry can not proceed successfully on a large scale until the franc is restored to par in international exchange. It is possible that a measure of stability can be obtained which will enable the French people to conduct their trade advantageously with outsiders, although the franc may remain for a long time at a discount in other markets; and especially in the trade with other nations whose exchanges are not at par the difficulties will not be insuperable.

THE RECOVERY OF FRANCE AFTER 1870.

After the decisive defeat at the hands of the Germans, France agreed in the treaty of 1871 to surrender Alsace-Lorraine and to pay in addition an indemnity of 5,000,000,000 francs within a period of approximately three years. It is well known that France displayed remarkable recuperative powers in the face of such tremendous obstacles. The indemnity was paid in a shorter time than had been allotted. For some years after 1871 the industry and trade of France gave evidence of unusual prosperity. It is noteworthy that approximately four-fifths of all indemnity payments were in bills of exchange and not in money.

There are, of course, marked differences between the problems which confronted France in 1871 and those of to-day. But, if after an overwhelming defeat and the loss of an important portion of French territory the nation was able to recover so rapidly in the seventies, now heartened by victory and with productive equipment enlarged, it may be expected that recovery in the present period of reconstruction will be no less phenomenal than in the earlier period. France is in a favorable situation with reference to the expansion of the nation's trade with the Near East and the French colonies in particular. The fundamental economic situation appears to be on a sound basis. With some outside assistance in the form of capital and labor, there may be built up a great industrial nation—the new France, sharing in the expanding world trade on a scale commensurate with the country's resources and advantageous location.

BELGIUM.

The case of Belgium is in some respects unique. The country was all but completely overrun by the enemy, and because it was a manufacturing center the bulk of its wealth was of a sort readily destroyed or impaired.

DEBT.

The peace treaty provides that Germany shall reimburse Belgium in the form of gold bonds for advances made by the Allies before the armistice. Heads of delegations at the peace conference are said to have agreed to recommend to their respective parliamentary bodies that German reparation bonds be substituted for advances made by the Allies to Belgium, thus canceling this debt.

The debt of Belgium, exclusive of war loans from the United States and Allies prior to the signing of the armistice, is equivalent at par of exchange to approximately $2,000,000,000. This is a little more than twice the debt in July, 1914. Of the $294,000,000 external debt $227,000,000 represents advances by allies since the armistice, which is to be repaid from first German reparation payments.

The best approach, perhaps, to an estimate of Belgium's ability to cope with the debt is a consideration of the prewar industrial situation and how the nation's capacity for the production of wealth has been modified by the war.

On the eve of the war Belgium was one of the busiest countries of the world. Although in area only a little larger than Vermont, it nevertheless supported a population of more than 7,500,000.

AGRICULTURAL RESOURCES.

Belgium's prosperity and high position among the industrial nations before the war had an especially sound basis in the country's highly developed agriculture. About three-fifths of the total area was under cultivation. The average value of the produce per acre was approximately $100, a yield equaled by no other country. Land owning in small units by workers has been encouraged. The intensive cultivation of small farms, a certain traditional aptitude for agriculture, an excellent system of agricultural education, low railroad rates, good roads, and a spirit of mutual helpfulness, as shown by the more than 1,300 cooperative societies, have all contributed to the prosperity of the farming element.

Important as has been the unparalleled development of Belgium's agriculture, it is the manufacturing and related industries, diversified and intensively developed, that have given the country so prominent a place among the commercial nations.

COAL AND IRON DEPOSITS.

An important key to a nation's industrial progress and possibilities is its coal supply. For some years before the war the output averaged about 23,000,000 tons, and until 1907 Belgium exported more coal than it imported. Since 1907, however, increased domestic consumption, due primarily to the very rapid growth of industries, has brought about a reversal of this condition. Two years before the war Belgium was consuming 12 per cent more coal than the domestic production, the imported coal coming principally from Germany.

Along with the coal resources in the southern Provinces are rich deposits of iron ore, but owing in part to legal restrictions governing the extraction of these deposits the production of ore has been small for a long time. However, Belgium's 50 blast furnaces produced in 1912, chiefly from Luxemburg ores, 2,300,000 tons of pig iron. This output of iron was reflected in the country's prosperous steel industry. Although the steel business is an old and well-established one it has recently experienced a remarkable expansion. In the decade before the war Belgium increased its production 160 per cent, the total production being, in round numbers, 2,500,000 tons. The output of finished iron and steel was greatly in excess of the domestic needs, and there was a growing market for the high-grade Belgian steels, famous the world over.

In keeping with the development of the iron and steel industry there has been a significant expansion of various related lines of manufacturing, especially machine and engine works, and the construction of railway equipment and automobiles. The zinc, lead, chemical, glass, and textile industries are among the other more important enterprises.

There are more miles of railway in Belgium in proportion to area than in any other country. Practically all the standard-gauge roads are owned by the State.

The operation of the State railways since 1835 has been financially successful. The capital invested in the roads in 1912, $520,000,000, was equal to two-thirds of the State debt.

The Belgians have for a long time held a prominent position in international finance, the estimated volume of foreign investments in 1911 being $540,000,000, almost twice the present external debt. Belgian capital is found in a great variety of enterprises almost all over the world. There are Belgian banks, mines, railways, etc., in South America, China, Spain, and Italy, and more than 100 tramway and electric-power enterprises in various parts of Europe have been financed with Belgian capital. The greater part of Russia's pig-iron output before the war was produced by Belgian companies recently established, or by firms in which Belgian capital was invested. Belgian companies supplied equipment for numerous tramways in our western cities, and many American utility securities are still owned by Belgians.

DESTRUCTION OF PROPERTY DURING THE WAR.

The national wealth of Belgium was estimated in 1912 at 29,803,000,000 francs, or approximately $6,000,000,000. In considering the ratio of the debt to the value of the wealth at the present time it must be recognized that both are expressed in terms of a money whose value is greatly below that of prewar times.

It is well known that the Germans destroyed and carried away great quantities of wealth. How much of this was in the form of relatively fixed capital equipment as compared with consumption goods it is impossible to say.

By the terms of the peace treaty Belgium is to be compensated for all the destruction or appropriation of property incidental to the war. But the indemnities can not be immediately available in full; nor, if they were immediately collectible, could they be transformed at once into buildings, machinery, etc. In any event, the country is confronted with a situation characterized chiefly by a shortage both of consumable goods and the means of producing them.

RECONSTRUCTION ACTIVITIES.

A report made early in 1919, after investigation by the central industrial committee of Belgium, showed that the condition of Belgian industries was not so unfavorable as had generally been supposed. It was found that most of the industries could resume operation in part, at least, immediately. Belts and other accessories of the industrial plants had in many cases been removed, but the deliberate wrecking of plants was shown to have been narrowly confined. The Germans had need of the output of various industries during the occupation and these had been carefully preserved. The greatest handicap was found in the inability to resume adequate operations promptly in the basic metallurgical industries.

TRANSPORTATION.

The main Belgian railways were completely Germanized during the war. The rolling stock which fell into enemy hands was in general worked almost to the point of destruction. Rapid progress has been made in restoring the roads to a workable condition. Considerable replacement of equipment from German stocks has been effected, and practically all the stationary equipment has been so far restored as to provide slow transportation of freight about as in normal times.

An interesting project in connection with the reconstruction of Belgian railways is the proposed electrification of the whole system, the power to be supplied by generating stations in the coal-producing areas. The project has recently received official sanction and work is expected to proceed promptly.

LIGHT RAILWAYS.

For its size, Belgium had a larger and more efficient system of narrow-gauge local railways than any other European country before the war. In many sections rails were taken from the lines and relaid by the Germans. Rolling stock was also commandeered.

However, the business of the light railways, as measured by the receipts of the company operating practically all the lines, continued to grow throughout the war period. The receipts were $4,543,000 in 1914 and $8,198,000 in 1918. Dividends grew year by year from $1,172,600 in 1914 to $1,691,750 in 1918, while appropriations to reserve increased proportionately even more in this period than did dividends.

PORTS.

The port facilities of Belgium were damaged in varying degree by the Germans. Their repair was no less urgent than that of the railways. The work of clearing obstructions was undertaken immediately upon the signing of the armistice. Within a few weeks navigation between the sea and Antwerp was completely reestablished, with all buoys and lights relaid. The cargo-handling facilities of this port are in good condition. Work at the port of Ostend has been pushed vigorously, and by April the harbor could accommodate vessels of 14 feet draft.

These examples are indicative of the rapidity with which the transport system of Belgium is being restored. It is characteristic of Belgian enterprise that, in addition to repairs to ports and waterways, certain improvements planned before the war are being made at the same time.

RESUMPTION OF INDUSTRIAL ACTIVITY.

Inasmuch as Belgian steel and iron manufacturers and other allied iron and steel products comprised over 12 per cent of the total prewar export trade of Belgium, it is necessary for these industries to resume operations as soon as possible. Furthermore, as textile and other manufacturing plants have been stripped of machinery, it will be necessary for new machines to be installed, and it is desirable that the Belgian steel works should assist as much as possible in refitting these plants.

Although the Belgian steel companies were in a very bad way, due to the destruction of most of their property, several mills could operate at the time of the armistice, and others have since been put in order.

Some 10 or 12 of the largest steel companies in Belgium have undertaken the formation of a large steel corporation similar in plan to the United States Steel Corporation. Each of the plants, it is understood, will specialize in some particular branch of the steel industry.

There are multiplying evidences that Belgian industrial life in general is steadily and surely resuming a more normal appearance. German prisoners have been used to advantage in clearing away the débris of ruined buildings and in other work. Many carloads of machinery and fixtures taken away by the Germans have been returned and set in operation. And reemployment of the workers at high wages has resulted in the withdrawal of public aid from nearly all of the 800,000 persons who were being assisted in November, 1918.

And official reports indicate that the yield of this year's crops will not be much below that of normal prewar years.

CONGO.

In the Belgian Congo there is an asset which will prove of increasing importance in the future development of Belgium's industries. In area the colony is eighty times as large as Belgium itself. Although situated in equatorial Africa, its climate is, on the whole, much more salubrious than that of most tropical countries, because the greater part of the country is a comparatively high plateau.

Since the annexation of the Congo by the Kingdom of Belgium in 1908, industrial enterprise there has been concerned chiefly with preparation for a comprehensive and well rounded development of the colony through the exploitation of its enormous resources—agricultural, forest, and mineral.

Among the surest evidences of a wise preparation for the future development of the Congo is the official recognition of the fact that the foundation of a stable economic life and of enduring general prosperity there must be found in agriculture. In 1910 the Government began a comprehensive program of agricultural education and experimentation.

Quite naturally the development of the transportation system of the colony began with the utilization of the Congo River and its tributaries, the world's second largest river system, with about 10,000 miles of navigable water. In January, 1916, there were 1,165 miles of Congo railways in operation. Important additions to this mileage have since been made. From the navigable Upper Congo River it is now possible to go by train to Cape Town in the south, and to Beira on the coast of Portuguese East Africa, and by train and steamboat across German East Africa to the Indian Ocean.

The vast mineral wealth of the Congo includes copper, tin, gold, diamonds, iron, and coal. The chief mining interests are the copper properties in Katanga, the southeastern section of the colony. Only a small proportion of the total deposits are being worked, but the estimated output in 1918 was 40,000 tons.

The colony's exports and imports in 1913 had a value of approximately $25,000,000, and in 1916 the foreign trade exceeded $38,000,000.

BELGIUM'S CHIEF ASSETS.

The depletion of manpower in Belgium during the war was not as great proportionately as was experienced by most of the belligerent nations, for the sudden rush of the invasion made it impossible to mobilize a large number of the men of military age.

The proved industrial capacity and dependable character of the masses of the Belgian workers are the nation's best assets in the present emergency. The record of the nation's achievements in the past and its quiet and confident grappling with present difficulties are the surest guaranties that the Belgians can and will conquer in peace as they conquered in war.

ITALY.

The definite completion of Italian unity as a result of the recent war affords Italy the first opportunity to use the country's economic resources freely in the creation of a modern industrial system. This achievement has been made at great cost to the Italian people, of course. While the national debt has been greatly increased, at the same time the country's economic power has been enhanced.

The estimated value of the national wealth before the war was $16,200,000,000; according to the estimate of the finance commission for reconstruction in Italy, the wealth at present has a value of 110,000,000,000 lire, equivalent, at the par of exchange, to $21,230,000,000.

The debt of Italy on March 31, 1919, including paper money, was 67,667,454,963 lire, or $13,079,918,807, of which about three-fourths was internal. The external debt, amounting to $3,330,141,784, consisted entirely of credits extended during the war by the United States Government and Allies. The prewar debt was approximately $2,631,748,000. The annual interest on the entire debt as of March 31, 1919, is approximately $577,234,230.

CURRENCY AND FINANCIAL POLICY.

In July, 1914, State notes outstanding totaled $96,307,000, and bank notes $421,319,000. On November 30, 1918, the State notes outstanding amounted to $403,177,000, and bank notes to $2,238,221,000. At the earlier date the ratio of metallic reserve to State notes was 26.5 per cent. The corresponding figure for bank notes was 68.1 per cent. At the latter date these ratios were, respectively, 13 and 10.9 per cent.

The adverse effects of this inflation have been greatly tempered by the adoption of a sound taxation policy on the part of the Italian Government. Additional war taxes were imposed to meet added expenditures. The success of this taxation policy is indicated by the fact that the ratio of debt service to revenue receipts, which in the fiscal year 1912–13 was 23.6 per cent, fell below this figure only once during the war; in 1917–18 the ratio was 25.5 per cent.

Signor Nitti has estimated the peace budget of Italy at approximately 6,000,000,000 lire, or $1,158,000,000, which is considerably less than the total revenue receipts for the fiscal year 1917–18, and is about two and one-half times the prewar revenue receipts. In this estimated peace budget the debt service will consume about 50 per cent of the revenues.

LOCATION, AREA, AND POPULATION.

Italy is situated within easy access of the Atlantic and Indian Oceans and has, therefore, special advantages for commerce. Moreover, the Italian Peninsula forms part of the shortest route from European industrial centers to the Suez Canal, and transportation across the Alps is facilitated by four or five lines of railway and by well-constructed roads.

The total area of Italy, without the new accessions of territory, is approximately 110,632 square miles; the estimated population in 1915 was 36,120,000 people. The war losses totaled 462,00 men.

Italy has been handicapped by its lack of coal and iron. While there is considerable agricultural wealth, Italy's greatest asset has been its population. The growth of population was such as to give rise to heavy annual migration, and one of the country's principal means of increasing the national wealth has been the receipt of money from Italians living in other lands.

INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION.

Italy has had a long, hard struggle to recover lost ground in her industrial activity in comparison with the countries of northern Europe. Up to 1860 the best of her energy and the lives of her sons were sacrificed to obtain national unity. Since 1860, however, Italy has striven to regain the lost ground, and up to the outbreak of the war she had succeeded in no small measure.

Although Italy is primarily an agricultural country, considerable progress has been made in manufacturing.

The continuous economic development of Italy is illustrated by the following figures reflecting the first half century of Italian unity, from 1860 to 1910. During this period the value of agricultural production increased from $340,000,000 to $1,740,000,000. Thirty years ago the industries of Italy were but little developed, whereas there are now approximately 150,000 establishments and factories whose production amounts to several billions of lire.

Between 1880 and 1913 the value of Italian manufactures rose from $120,000,000 to $600,000,000. According to the census of 1911, there were 3,000,000 Italians employed in manufacturing industries and 11,000,000 in agriculture.

IRON INDUSTRY.

The Italian iron industry is new. The output of pig iron from the Elba mines was 112,000 tons in 1909. In 1913 the output was 426,000 tons. Before the war approximately 200,000 tons of pig iron were imported every year, principally from the United Kingdom. The output of steel increased from 350,000 tons in 1909 to 1,000,000 tons in 1913.

The Italian engineering industry has made considerable progress in recent years, particularly in the decade before the war. In 1913 Italy was producing all rolling stock needed for the railways and had begun to supply French railways with equipment. Italian works had a capacity for turning out 1,500 engines and 12,000 freight and passenger cars a year. Despite the energetic competition of Germans, the Italians had made great progress before the war in the production of electrical machinery.

SILK AND CHEMICAL INDUSTRIES.

Silk manufacture has been one of the most important Italian industries. Before the war 175,000 people were engaged in this industry. Exports of silk accounted for one-quarter of the average value of Italian exports. In the years preceding the war the Italian woolen industry had reached a considerable development, gradually emancipating itself from foreign control and seeking new outlets for exportation. About four-fifths of the raw material was imported from South America and Australia. Although the prices for raw material increased about threefold after the outbreak of the war and coloring materials for dyeing became constantly more scarce, the remarkable progress achieved from 1880 to 1913 has been admirably maintained during the war period.

AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTION.

Wheat is easily the most important agricultural product of Italy, both as regards area sown and the amount of crop produced. It is estimated that about 34,000,000 acres are devoted to agriculture, and of this amount 11,700,000 are sown with wheat. The total value of the crops and products of Italian agriculture as a whole is placed at $1,360,000,000, while the value of wheat at a normal price is estimated to be $235,000,000. As regards other cereals, about 4,000,000 acres are planted with maize and 2,000,000 with rye, barley, rice, and oats. Sugar beets, hemp, flax, and tobacco take up about one-sixth of the total agricultural area.

Another important branch of Italian agriculture is the production of grapes and wine. The statistics for the last five years before the war, when Italian agriculture was flourishing under normal conditions, show that there were 11,000,000 acres of vineyards, producing 979,000,000 gallons of wine. There are also more than 3,000,000 acres planted with olives, from which are obtained nearly 50,000,000 gallons of oil.

Italy also raises an appreciable crop of oranges and lemons, which are grown extensively in southern Italy and Sicily, and amount to about 780,000 tons a year. Nearly 100,000 tons of oranges and about 300,000 tons of lemons are exported. Approximately 250,000 tons are manufactured into citric acid and similar products, for which Austria-Hungary has been Italy's most important customer, and Great Britain the second best. For some years before the war there existed in Italy a fruit-growing organization founded by the Government, which has been an important factor in the promotion of this industry.

Undoubtedly silk-growing holds a place next to that of wheat-growing in Italian agriculture. The amount of raw silk produced in Italy during the years just prior to the war was between 10,000,000 and 12,000,000 pounds, the greater part of which was exported.

ECONOMIC CHANGES.

During the war period industrial growth in many directions has been manifest.

In June, 1914, the total normal capital of all the limited companies registered in Italy was approximately $1,254,500,000. This capital had risen before the end of 1918 to $3,088,000,000, or by about 146 per cent. During the last year alone 540 new companies were registered, having a capital of about $164,000,000, the greater part of which has been invested in the iron, steel, and engineering industries. Besides, the capitalization of old companies has also grown. Iron and steel companies, for instance, have acquired not less than $193,000,000 of additional capital.

Technical improvements have been various. In 1913 the electric furnace was virtually unknown in the production of Italian pig iron. To-day electric furnaces are used extensively and have a capacity of 200,000 tons.

Prior to 1914 Italy imported most of the machinery used in the textile, beet sugar, and paper industries, as well as agricultural machinery. Italian concerns are now able to supply a large part of this equipment.

In common with other countries, Italy experienced a marked growth in the chemical industry during the last five years, and the development of electrical power will afford opportunity for a still further expansion in these lines.

ENGINEERING SKILL DEVELOPED.

Italy has derived another gain from her supreme economic effort put forth during the war—a gain which is less tangible than those set forth in the foregoing paragraphs, but one no less valuable in the future industrial expansion of the country. This is an enhanced valuation in the eyes of the remainder of the world of the talent and skill which has been demonstrated by the engineering ability displayed by the Italians in dealing with all sorts of complex and difficult problems presented to them in their vast war program. The production of munitions of war, the manufacture of aeroplanes, and the development of shipbuilding, all in the face of great difficulties, have proved that the skill and ability of the Italians is not a thing of tradition, but a dynamic power that can be turned to account in any crisis. In view of the very palpable gains in the industries of the country, together with the newly awakened consciousness of power on the part of the Italians, and the recognition of this power by other countries, it seems safe to assume that in the future Italy will prove to be a forceful factor in the world's industrial and commercial life.

Since the signing of the armistice Italians have been especially aggressive in restoring trade, particularly with the Balkans and the Near East.

WATER POWER.

The hydroelectric power already in use and still to be developed will be the most important factor in the industrial future of Italy. During the year 1917 Italian authorities granted 54 requests for concessions for the use of water power. These concessions included 17 sources in Piedmont, with a capacity of 62,000 horsepower; 8 in Umbria, with 34,500 horsepower; 6 in Lombardy, with 37,000 horsepower; and several in Calabria, with a capacity of 26,880 horsepower.

It has been estimated that Italian water power is capable of supplying a total of over 6,000,000 horsepower; there is in use at present more than 1,200,000 horsepower. Works under construction and those definitely planned for the immediate future will have a capacity of 800,000 horsepower. It is expected, therefore, that in a short time 2,000,000 horsepower of electrical energy will be employed. More than 200 miles of railway have already been electrified.

The agricultural resources of Italy are of far greater importance than its mineral wealth. In any future adjustment Italy will not need assistance in developing her agriculture, but will require good openings and profitable markets having quick and easy communication with the centers of production.

TRADE EXPANSION.

While an expansion of agricultural production will be sought, principally through improvements in methods rather than by extension of the area under cultivation, the greatest development is to be expected in manufacturing. The abundant and relatively cheap and efficient labor supply, coupled with remarkable engineering skill, will facilitate the intensive utilization of the nation's resources for manufacturing.

During the six years from 1908 to 1913, inclusive, the visible trade balance of Italy showed an excess of imports averaging about $230,000,000. This so-called adverse visible balance was offset by invisible items. The principal invisible items, with estimated average amounts, were the following: Return on Italian investments abroad, $15,500,000; net remittances of emigrants and expenditures of travelers in Italy, $170,000,000; and receipts of the Italian merchant marine, $20,000,000.

During the war the adverse visible balance has increased and the offsetting invisible balance has decreased. This fact, together with currency inflation, has been reflected in the depreciation of the lira in outside markets. With the restoration of normal conditions in industry and commerce, however, the balancing of the nation's trade account will be effected. Tourists' expenditures and remittances of emigrants, no doubt, will both surpass previous records.

The continued emigration of laborers and settlers to other countries will help to create markets for Italian products. Southern France and South American countries especially will be inviting fields for Italian emigrants. The overseas possessions have an area of about four times that of Italy proper, including the accessions of territory gained in consequence of the recent war. These offer important industrial and trade possibilities making for the development of a great industrial nation.

Italy is well situated to serve as the principal entre-pôt between the Far East and central and southern Europe. Italians, with their historic legacy of maritime supremacy and their proved initiative, will not fail to avail themselves of the opportunity to develop Italian industry and commerce.

PRICES YESTERDAY, TO-DAY, AND TO-MORROW.

[An address before the Editorial Conference of the New York Business Publishers' Association, New York, April, 1919, by Oscar P. Austin, statistician of the National City Bank of New York.]

* * * * * * *

INCREASE IN OTHER GOVERNMENTAL OBLIGATIONS.

In addition to the vast sums of legal tender currency turned out by 15 responsible Governments of the world, these Governments have at the same time made an even more spectacular advance in their issue of another series of promises to pay, which, while not legal tender in the ordinary sense of the term, do form a more slowly moving mass of currency. By this I mean the $180,000,000,000 worth of bonds or other forms of national obligations issued by the Governments of the world in the past four years, for the national debts of the world have advanced from $40,000,000,000 at the beginning of the war to $220,000,000,000 at its close. And while these bonds or other governmental promises to pay money at some future date are not legal tender currency in the ordinary sense of the term, they do pass current in the financial world and prove a basis upon which money may be readily obtained by their holders, and to this extent are an addition to the world's circulating medium.

BANK DEPOSITS GREATLY INCREASED.

Still another increase in circulating media is found in the enormous growth in bank deposits, which of itself increases circulation through the increased use of checks, especially in countries such as the United States, where the check forms so large a share of the daily business transactions of the country. Bank deposits in 15 principal countries of the world have grown from about $25,000,000,000 in 1913 to approximately $75,000,000,000 at the present time.

These increases in circulation, indebtedness, and bank deposits, while occurring primarily in the countries participating in the war, have also extended to many other countries, especially in Europe, where the six principal neutrals have during the war period increased their national debts $1,000,000,000, their note circulation over a billion dollars, and their bank deposits nearly $1,000,000,000.

Thus in a short 4½-year period world paper money has increased $36,000,000,000, world evidences of national indebtedness $180,000,000,000, and world bank deposits $50,000,000,000. Most of this enormous increase in currency has occurred in "uncovered" paper. The gold mines of the world have turned out less than $2,000,000,000 worth of the precious metal during the war period, and most of the world's gold, which formed 55 per cent of world circulation at the beginning of the war, has passed into the vaults of the Governments or of their great banks as a basis for their paper currency, and now bears a relation of but about 20 per cent to the flood of paper money in circulation, and this proportion of gold to paper varies widely when the respective countries are compared.

INFLATION AND HIGH PRICES.

If the world's historians and financiers and economists and statisticians are right in their general belief that an advance in prices usually accompanies or closely follows inflation in currency, and especially in paper currency, can we be surprised at the world-wide advance in prices which we have witnessed during the past four years in which world currency and bank deposits trebled and national debts quintupled?

[From the Mid-November, 1919, number of Business Condition, p. 15.]

RECONSTRUCTION.

Paul M. Warburg, former governor of the Federal Reserve Board, after a two months' tour of England, Holland, France, Switzerland, and Germany, declares:

"The United States must assist the other nations of the world in restoring themselves or the whole world will fall into bankruptcy or communism. One can not spend two months in Europe without being deeply impressed with the fact that war has opened wide the dikes once protecting our old form of society and that the unloosened currents, still uncontrolled, are ranging over areas far beyond the boundaries of the countries directly involved in the war. It will be the will of men that will determine the final outcome. The lesson that one brings home from Europe is, therefore, that we must not stand idly with folded hands while the world is drowning, but that it is our duty, and within our power, to arrest a movement which, if unchecked and permitted to run into extremes, will engulf us all.

"There are many who, disgusted and disheartened, believe that we in the United States of America should wash our hands of Europe and leave it to her to straighten out her own affairs. It is too late for that. By the decisive part we played in deciding the war and the peace we have assumed a moral responsibility which we now can not shirk. For the future course of the world will be influenced very materially by economic forces, and these forces we largely control, as, inversely, to a certain extent they control us. In order to survive, Europe needs our products and requires them largely on credit, and it is our moral duty to furnish these goods. While our self-interest is involved in this, Europe's dilemma is so much more acute than ours that it places in our hands the key to the situation, but at the same time the responsibility of using it wisely. There are two fundamental evils common to all which must be eradicated if world bankruptcy or communism are to be avoided. These are the continuous 'increase of prices' and 'decrease of production.'

"Prices must continue to rise as long as the leading countries spend every year millions more than they collect from taxation and other regular revenues covering the resulting deficiencies by issuing additional currency, Treasury bills and other Government obligations. As long as this 'watering process' is indulged in the value of capital must further decline, and if persisted in long enough it must end in something like the Russian or Austro-Hungarian conditions, where the savings of the past invested in money and securities have been practically wiped out. While to some extent the present labor unrest is psychological and in certain aspects as far as it disregards the public interest, may be considered destructive and immoral, there can not be any doubt but that as long as the rise in prices continues, labor will have to fight for and be entitled to increased wages.

"On the other hand, it is obvious that a higher scale of wages is in itself a factor making for a further increase in prices. This unfortunate reaction can not be avoided until the prime driving force has been eliminated; which is the persistent depreciation of capital by the continuous issue of Government securities and currency for the purpose of covering deficiencies caused by excessive current expenditures.

"Prolonged disregard of sound economic principles will wreck business enterprises as well as Governments. To issue Government obligations or currency for the purpose of paying idling men or for providing below cost such things as transportation of food or for covering extravagant military or other expenditures is an insane business practice that sooner or later must lead to ruin or bankruptcy in every country indulging in such methods. As far as expenditures can not be reduced receipts from taxation must be increased, and—with the rapid and wide distribution of wealth resulting from the war indirect will have to play as important a part as direct taxation. (Capital levies can not be safely made in order to pay for recurrent expenditures; they may at best be applied, and even then only exceptionally, for the purpose of reducing the capital debt of a country.)

"It is easier for the United States to place its budget on a sound basis than for any other of the leading powers involved in the war. Our responsibility in this respect is a heavy one and demands not only that we establish model conditions for ourselves but that we insist that sound principles be adopted by countries requiring our financial support. Unless we work toward this end the increase of prices can not be arrested and moreover we would be acquiring the obligations of debtors headed for insolvency. Of all the leading countries we are the only one that, for the time being, has an open sold market where the relation between gold on the one hand and goods and service on the other can establish itself on a fairly natural basis. No other country, therefore, will play as decisive a rôle in determining the future level of prices as we. A great deal is being said about the necessity of stabilizing foreign exchanges.

"To my mind it is futile to attempt to tinker with this problem of stabilizing the level of these various foreign reservoirs and to establish their definite relations to one another and to the dollar, which will be the pivot of all, until the leaks have been stopped; and that is not possible as long as the Government printing presses work overtime manufacturing new money and Government obligations. When once this baneful process is arrested, discount rates may again become powerful influences in bringing about deflation.

"Until budgets are properly balanced discount rates, however, are powerless in this respect. The prewar level prices have gone for good and ever. Somehow we had to pay for the waste and expenses of the war, and the future price level should establish itself at 100 per cent higher than that prevailing before the war. Whether the destruction of capital has gone that far or how much further it will proceed will depend upon the steps that we shall now take to arrest it. The longer we wait the greater will be the loss. While the proper balancing of the budgets must therefore be the first step, without which the world can not rid itself of its present predicament, this measure in order to bring relief must be accompanied by others.

"Everybody knows that in order to prevent a further rising of prices it is necessary that production be increased and consumption be decreased. The necessity of such a course has been forcefully urged by many; it is conceded by all—and practiced by nobody. In Europe and in the United States there never was a greater recklessness in spending money than there has been prevailing since the conclusion of the armistice. The ease with which a larger amount of depreciated money can be earned has diminished the respect for money and the eagerness to save. A willingness to subordinate or sacrifice one's wishes and pleasures to the greater advantage of the country splendidly manifested during the years of war, has ended in the present reaction of an orgy of brazen self-indulgence at the very moment when the war bill is presented for payment.

"In these circumstances may we hope to be able to persuade the workingman that—while his striving for adequate adjustments of wages is generally recognized as legitimate, and while honest efforts are made in almost all countries of the world to comply with his just demand for a reasonable representation and cooperation in the management of his employer's affairs—any tendency on his part to reduce production is nothing short of a crime against the very society of which he is a part? May we hope to convince the reckless consumer that his guilt is as heavy as that of the slacking producers? Only when the world ceases covering deficits by printing new money and obligations, only when a greater scarcity of money can assert its influence will excessive consumption be brought under control, and will there be called into play a consequent greater supply of labor and a greater willingness to work. This presupposes, however, that terrorism will not be permitted to threaten those willing to work.

"It is interesting to watch the various ways in which the labor problems are being studied and approached in Europe. Over there they look to the United States to take the lead in solving the question. Prewar labor conditions with us having been far better than abroad, and our men having enjoyed full political liberty and a free road to the top of the ladder in practically every enterprise, it is believed that we should find less difficulty in this respect than any other country. Meanwhile we are getting so near the brink that every further delay increases the danger that it may become too late to avoid our sliding into it.

"In Europe it is believed that our Senate does not fully realize the gravity of the situation. Friends and enemies condemn many features of the peace treaty. But all agree—even the Germans who more than any other nation deplore some of its terms—that nothing could be more fatal than to prolong the present uncertainty; that the treaty must now go into effect, and that when once a foundation, even though a defective one has been laid, we can begin successfully to combat the baneful forces that now threaten the whole world. In this work the United States can not be missed."

[From Encyclopedia Britannica, Vol. X.]

Exchange, in general, the action of mutual giving and receiving objects, interests, benefits, rights, &c. The word comes through the French from the Late Lat. excambium (see EXCAMBION). The present article deals with the theory and practice of exchange in monetary transactions, but this may conveniently be prefaced by a brief statement as to the law relating to the exchange of property and other matters. In English law exchange is defined as the mutual grant of equal interests, the one in consideration of the other. The ancient common law conveyance had certain restrictions, e. g., identity in quantity of interest, fee-simple for fee-simple, etc., entry to perfect the conveyance, and an implied warranty of title and right of entry by either party in case of eviction. Such exchanges are now effected by mutual conveyances with the usual covenants for title. Exchanges are also frequently made by order of the Board of Agriculture under the Inclosure Acts, and there are also statutes enabling ecclesiastical corporations to exchange benefices with the approval of the ecclesiastical commissioners. The international exchange of territories is effected by treaties. The exchange of prisoners of war is regulated by documents called "cartels" (Med. Lat. cartellus, diminutive of carta, paper bill), which specify a certain agreed-on value for each rank of prisoners. The practice superseded the older one of ransom at the end of a war. By the regimental exchanges act, 1875, the sovereign may by regulation authorize exchanges by officers from one regiment to another. (For "labor exchanges" see Unemployment.)

Exchange in relation to money affairs denotes a species of barter not of goods but of the value of goods, a payment in one place being exchanged for a payment in another place. The popular statement of the theory of exchange represents four principals involved in two transactions. A and B are two persons residing in one place different from the domicile of C and D; A sells goods to C; B buys goods from D; A sells his claim on C to B, who remits it to D in satisfaction of his debt, and D receives the cash from C, so that, assuming the two transactions to be of equal value, one piece of paper satisfies the four parties to these two transactions, and the trouble, expense, and risk of sending money from both places are avoided. The piece of paper which performs the service may be a telegraphic order, check, or bill of exchange. In this elementary proposition there would be no difficulty of exchange, as the full value of A's claim on C would be paid by B, who is under the necessity of sending in exactly similar amount of money to D; but it can be seen that in actual practice the claims of one place on another place would not be exactly balanced by the necessities of the one place to meet obligations in the other place; thus arises the complication of exchange, which may best be described as the price of monetary claims on distant debtors.

Supposing, for example, that A in London had a claim on C in Edinburgh amounting to £100, and that B in London did not require to remit more than £90 to D in Edinburgh, it is evident that B in London must be offered some inducement to take over the whole of A's claim. B might give A £99 : 19 : 0, and could then, after satisfying his debt to D, have £10 to his credit in Edinburgh, which he could retain there at interest until he had incurred further liability to D, or he could have the balance of £10 returned him in coin at an expense, say, of sixpence; this would leave B with a profit of sixpense on the transaction, and, assuming that these figures are reasonable, exchange on Edinburgh in London would be one shilling discount per £100. Supposing the necessities of B induced him to offer A only £99 : 14 : 0 for his £100 claim, A would then prefer that C remitted him £100 in coin, which, on the above scale of expenses would cost 5s. and A would receive £99 : 15 : 0 net. On these premises, exchange on Edinburgh in London can not fall below one-fourth of 1 per cent discount, and the same circumstances prevent it from rising above one-fourth of 1 per cent premium, for B in no case, would pay more for A's claim than £100 plus the cost of sending coin to Scotland. If this basis is appreciated, all exchange problems between different countries can be mastered, and the quotations in the daily papers of cable payments, sight drafts (checks) and long bills are then understood and supply an interesting indication of the state of international financial relations. As shown above, the balance of indebtedness must eventually be remitted by coin, and consequently when exchange in any city is quoted at one or other of the limit points given in our example as one-fourth of 1 per cent discount or one-fourth of 1 per cent premium, this exchange immediately acquires a very serious importance, because with the development of modern monetary systems under which enormous trade is carried on with a most moderate foundation of actual coin the weakening or strengthening of that foundation is a very vital matter.

While the understanding of the theory is essential for any facile interpretation of an exchange, there are of course innumerable details of practice which require to be known to identify the limit points of exchange in any particular city. The limit points can only be taken advantage of by banking experts, and, although we assume a trader remitting his indebtedness in coin when he is asked to pay too high a price for his bill of exchange, in actual affairs the banker will supply the check or bill and himself will do the professional business of sending away bullion. Similarly, we have represented one trader drawing on another trader and selling his draft to a third trader who remits the draft to a fourth. In actual practice, however, No. 1 draws on No. 2 and disposes of his draft to a banker; No. 4 draws on No. 3 and sells his draft to a banker; because, speaking generally, whenever goods are shipped, the shipper immediately requires his money he draws a bill against the goods, and it is the function of a banker to help, as a sort of debt-collecting agency, by buying these drafts; and the bank, being a mart for all forms of remittance, gets an immense variety of demand for cable payments, checks, and bills on all centers. This does not affect the theory, for it must be remembered that the banker is a necessary link between the buyer and seller of exchange, because the seller can only sell what he has and the buyer must have exactly what he wants.

To return to the question of limit points: If a universal currency system existed, with the same monetary standard that is used in England, and the coinage kept in a proper condition of weight and fineness, and the coin readily supplied to meet every reasonable claim—if, in fact, the pound sterling were the prevalent coin and the English banking system obtained everywhere, then we should find all exchange quotations as simple as our case of London and Edinburgh, that is to say, all exchanges would be quoted at par or a premium or a discount. The limit points in any place of the exchange on London would represent simply and obviously the cost of the transmission of the coin. These limit points would vary at each place according to the distance from London, the cost of freight, the risk involved in the transmission and the local rate of interest. On the continent of Europe some advance has been made in the direction of a universal coinage. Countries subscribing to the Latin Union have agreed on the franc as a common unit, and Belgium, Switzerland, France, and Italy quote exchange between themselves at a premium or discount. Greece, Spain, and other countries are also parties to the arrangement, but their currencies are in a bad state, and the exchange quotations involve a considerable element of speculation. We have, however, to deal with another factor in international finance, namely, the enormous variety of currency systems; and we have then to discover, in each case, the exchange which represents par and corresponds to our £100 for £100 in the London-Edinburgh example. The United States furnishes perhaps the easiest problem, and we must find out how many dollars in gold contain exactly the same amount of the precious metal as is contained in 100 sovereigns. The answer is 486⅝, and the arithmetic is a question of the mint laws of the two countries. Gold coin in the United States contains one-tenth alloy and in England one-twelfth alloy. Ten dollars contain 258 grains of gold, nine-tenths fine. One pound contains 123.274 grains of gold, eleven-twelfths fine, consequently £100 is worth $486⅝, or, to be exact, $486.65, and when cable payments between London and New York are quoted at 4.86⅝ for the £1 sterling, exchange is about par. As a cable payment is an immediate transfer from one city to another, no question of interest or other charge is involved. Owing to the cost of sending gold as detailed above, the New York cable exchange varies from about 4.84 to 4.89½; at the former point gold leaves London for New York, and at the latter point gold comes to England. Besides insurance, freight, packing, commission, and interest, there must also be considered the circumstance that coin taken in bulk is always a little worn and under full weight, and in the process of turning sovereigns into dollars, the result would not bear out the calculation based on the mint regulations; consequently, when taking gold from London, the demand would first fall on the raw metal as received from South Africa or Australia to be minted in the United States, then on any stock of American coin the Bank of England might have and be willing to sell by weight (which would be accounted by tale in New York), and lastly the demand would be satisfied by sovereigns taken by tale from the Bank of England and converted by weight in America.

The instance of the American quotation may be further taken to explain some of the numerous points which the study of the exchange involves. In the first place, it will be noted that we have quoted the price in dollars. In London, business in bills, etc., on New York is quoted either in pence or in dollars, that is to say, payments are negotiated for so many dollars either at 49⅞ pence per dollar, or at the equivalent rate $4.88 for the pound. In practice it is much more convenient to quote in London in the money of the foreign country, as it makes comparison with the foreign rate on London very simple. Some foreign countries quote exchange on London in pence, and then, of course, in relation to those countries the same practice will obtain in England, but the majority of the exchange quotations on London are in francs, marks, gulden, lire, kronen, or other foreign money. Another point which must be explained is the reason why exchange varies between what we have called the limit points; why there is sometimes so much demand for bills on London and why at other times so many bills are being offered. Similar causes operate on other exchanges, and if we develop the New York case we shall provide explanations for exchange movements in other countries.

At one time the financial relations between England and America were as follows: England was the principal creditor of the United States, and the latter country had to remit continually very large amounts in payment of interest on English money and profits on English investments, in payment for shipping freights, for banking commissions, insurance premiums, and an immense variety of services, besides paying for the large imports which crossed the Atlantic from English ports. In the fall of the year these payments would be more than offset by the enormous exports of foodstuffs, cotton, tobacco, etc., so that during the first half of the year exchange would be at or about the limit of 4.89½ and gold would have to be sent from New York to supplement the deficient quantity of bills. In the autumn the produce bills would flood the exchange market and gold would be sent from London as exchange got to the other limit point of 4.84. These conditions are still very potent, but latterly another element has entered into the position, and the new development is so powerful as to reverse sometimes what we may call the natural and legitimate movement in the exchange. This new element is the more intimate banking and financial relationship which has been established between the two countries. As American conditions have become more stable, with better security for capital and an assured feeling about the currency of the United States, bankers in London have gladly allowed their banking friends in New York and other large cities to draw bills on London whenever there was a good demand for sterling remittances. We have, therefore, to consider a fresh type of bill of which the drawer has no claim on the drawee, but, on the other hand, incurs a debt to the drawee. To take a very usual method, a banker in Wall Street, New York, will advance money to stockbrokers, investors, and speculators against bonds and shares with a 20% margin. He deposits this security with a trust company in New York, which acts both for the American and English banker. The Wall Street banker then draws a bill at 60 days' sight or 90 days' sight on the banker in Lombard Street and sells this draft to supply the money he lends the stockbroker. Two or three months hence the New York banker must send money to London with which to meet the bill, so that, whereas, in the case of a commercial bill, the produce is dispatched and in due course the consignee must find the money for the bill, in the case of a finance bill, as it is called, the bill is drawn and in due course the drawer must send the value with which it is to be honored. In any event, the acceptor, the London banker, has to pay the bill, so that it will be easily understood that relations of the greatest confidence are necessary between the drawer and drawee before finance bills of this class can be created.

The profit arising from the transaction we have sketched is realized by the separate parties in this way. The New York banker lends money for three months, say, at 5 per cent per annum, he pays a commission of one-thirty-second per cent to the trust company which has custody of the security, a charge equivalent to one-eighth per cent interest per annum. He draws on London at 90 days' sight and sells the bill at 4.83⅞, the cable rate being 4.87⅞, the buyer of a three months' bill making the allowance for the English bill stamp of one-half per mille and the London discount rate of 3 per cent. The drawer of the bill must also pay a commission of three-sixteenths per cent to the London banker who accepts the draft; this is equivalent to another three-quarters per cent per annum in the rate of discount, so that money raised in this way costs one-eighth per cent for the trust company, 3 per cent the London discount rate, about one-quarter per cent for bill stamps, and three-quarters per cent for London commission—altogether, 4⅛ per cent; and, as the money is loaned at 5 per cent, there appears to be seven-eighths per cent profit to the drawer of the bill. This, however, is on the assumption that the cable rate is still 4.87⅞ when the bill falls due for payment, and that the drawer would have to pay that price to telegraph the money to meet the draft. But exchange on London can go up or down between 4.84 and 4.89½, and if at the end of the three months the cable rate is 4.84 the New York banker will be able to cover his bill at almost the same rate at which he sold it and will only be out of pocket to the extent of the commissions and stamps, so that the accommodation will only cost him 1⅛ per cent and his profit will be 3⅛ per cent. If he has to pay more than 4.87⅞ for his cable at the maturity of the bill his profit will be less than seven-eighths per cent, and he may even be a loser on the transaction.

It is obvious, then, that a high rate of interest in New York, with a high rate of exchange on London and a low rate of discount in England, would induce the creation of these finance bills. The supply of these bills would prevent New York exchange reaching the limit point at which gold leaves the United States, and the maturity of these bills in the autumn would ensure a demand for the produce bills and possibly prevent exchange from falling to the other limit point at which London has to send gold to New York.

We have pointed out the essential difference between these finance bills and what we have called produce bills, but there is another very striking difference, that of the question of supply. These finance bills are obviously very difficult to limit in their amounts; produce bills are, of course, limited by the extent of the surplus crops of the United States and by the demand for the produce in Europe, but so long as it is mutually satisfactory to the big finance houses in both countries to draw on credit granted in London, so long may these accommodation bills be created, and the pressure of the bills in New York may depress exchange so much that gold leaves London at a time when it is required in other directions. In such a case the embarrassment caused by this artificial drain of the gold reserve would much more than offset the amount of the commission earned by the accepting houses. The Bank of England may have to raise its rate of discount at the expense of the entire home trade; probably, also, with the rise in the value of money, consequent on the diminished resources, all investment securities fall in value and more onerous terms must be submitted to by the Government, corporations, and Colonies, in the issue of any loans they may require. It will, therefore, be appreciated that, although these finance bills may be perfectly safe, their excessive creation is viewed with great disfavor, and considerable apprehension is felt when the adventures of speculators in New York make great demands for loans against stocks and shares, and, through the instrumentality of these finance bills, shift the burden on to the shoulders of the London discount market. The effect of this is to level money rates as between New York and London, and in the process the pressure falls on London and the relief goes to America. Eventually, of course, the bills must be met and funds sent for that purpose from across the Atlantic, but in the meanwhile the disturbance of the gold supply is an inconvenience.

We have explained the process of employing credits granted in London to finance Wall Street; there are, also, many other types of bill to which the acceptor lends his name on the assurance that he will in due course be supplied with the funds required to meet the acceptance. In the case of the produce bills, a London banker will accept the bills in order that they may be more easily marketable than if they were drawn direct on the actual consignee of the cotton, tobacco, or wheat. The consignees in Liverpool, etc., pay a commission for this assistance and reimburse the London bank as the produce is gradually disposed of. The transaction appears slightly more complicated when English bankers accept bills for produce shipped from the United States to merchants living in Hamburg, Genoa, Singapore, and all other great ports, but the principle is the same, and the influence of such business on the exchange affects, in the first instance, the quotation between America and London, but afterwards, when money must be sent to London with which to honor the bills, the exchanges with Germany, Italy, or the Straits Settlements bear their share in the eventual adjustment, the spinners, tobacco manufacturers, and corn factors requiring drafts on London where so much of the trade of the world is financed.

We shall have to consider later the reasons which ensure to London this peculiar and predominant position. We have so far used the American exchange as an example to explain causes which produce fluctuations in all the principal exchanges on London and to show the points between which fluctuations are limited. The fact that America is still developing at a much greater rate than the Old World makes an important distinction between the financial position in New York and the financial position of the big capitals in Europe. There is not in America the huge accumulation of savings and investment money which the Old World has collected, so that whereas Europe helps to finance the United States, the latter country has so many home enterprises that she can spare none of her funds to assist Europe. It would not be possible for London to draw on New York such bills as we have described as finance bills, for they could never be discounted there except on the most onerous terms, and there is nothing in America which corresponds to the London money market.

We have to deal with dollars and cents in America, with francs in France, with marks in Germany, and different money units in nearly every country; but, given the mint regulations, the theoretical par of exchange and the theoretical limit points are arrived at by simple arithmetic. An exhaustive statement with reference to every country would involve an amount of tedious repetition, so that for the purposes of this article it is more instructive to consider the essential differences between the important exchanges than to go into the details of coinage, which would appeal rather to the numismatist than to the exchange expert.

The United States, offering as it does a vast field for profitable investment, must annually remit huge amounts for interest on bonds and shares held by Europeans; coupons and dividend warrants payable in America are offered for sale daily in London, and at the end of the quarters the amount of these claims, coupons, and drawn bonds is very large, and a considerable set off to the indebtedness of Europe for American produce. It is often asserted that the United States is rapidly getting sufficient wealthy to repurchase all these bonds and shares; but whenever trade conditions are exceptionally good in the States, fresh evidence is forthcoming that assistance from London and Europe is essential to finance the commercial development of the United States. This illustrates a feature common to all new countries, and the effect is that they make annual payments to the older countries and especially to England.

A Government loan or other large borrowing arranged abroad will immediately move the exchange in favor of the borrowing country. A tendency adverse to the United States results from the drafts and letters of credit of the large number of holiday makers who cross the Atlantic and spend so much money in Europe. When remittance is made of the incomes of Americans who have taken up their residence in the Old World the exchange is affected in a similar manner.

In one respect the United States stands far superior to most of the older countries. There are no restrictions on the free export of gold when exchange reaches the limit point showing that the demand for bills on London exceeds the supply. New York (with London and India) is a free gold market, and this is undoubtedly one of the reasons why money is so readily advanced to the United States, and the finance bills, to which we referred above, would not be allowed to the same extent were it not for the fact that New York will remit gold when other forms of remittance are insufficient to satisfy foreign creditors. When exchange between Paris and London reaches the theoretical limit point of 25.32 (25 francs 32 centimes for the £1 sterling), gold does not leave Paris for London unless the Bank of France is willing to allow it. By law, silver is also legal tender in France, and if the State Bank is pressed for gold a premium will be charged for it if it is supplied. Gold may be collected on the cheaper terms in small amounts from the great trading corporations or from the offices of the railways, but a large shipment can only be made by special arrangement with the Bank of France. Similarly, in Germany, where a gold standard is supposed to obtain, if a banker requires a large amount of gold from the Reichsbank he is warned that he had better not take it, and if he persists he incurs the displeasure of the Government institution to the prejudice of his business, so that the theoretical limit point of 20 marks 52 pfennigs to the pound sterling has no practical significance, and gold can not be secured from Berlin when exchange is against that city, and Germany has, when put to the test, an inconvertible and sometimes a debased currency. There is no State bank in the United States, and no Government interference with the natural course of paying debts. On the other hand, when monetary conditions in New York indicate a great shortage of funds, and rates of interest are uncomfortably high, the United States Treasury has sometimes parted with some of its revenue accummulations to the principal New York bankers on condition that they at once engage a similar amount of gold for import from abroad, which shall be turned over to the Treasury on arrival. As these advances are made free of interest the effect is to adjust the limit point of 484 to about 485, and the United States Treasury seems to have taken a leaf out of the book of the German Reichsbank, which frequently offers similar facilities to gold importers and creates an artificial limit point in the Berlin Exchange. The Reichsbank gives credit in Berlin for gold that has only got as far as Hamburg, and sometimes gives so many days' credit that the agent in London of German banking houses can afford an extravagant price for bar gold and even risk the loss in weight on a withdrawal of sovereigns, although the exchange may not have fallen to the other limit point of 20.32. In England the only effort that is made to attract gold is some action by the Bank of England in the direction of raising discount rates; occasionally, also, the bank outbids other purchasers for the arrivals of raw gold from South Africa, Australia, and other mining countries. Quite exceptionally, for instance during the Boer War, the Bank of England allowed advances free of interest against gold shipped to London.

Many of the principal banking houses in all the important capitals receive continually throughout the day telegraphic information of the tendency and movement of all the exchanges, and on the smallest margin of profit a large business is done in what is called arbitrage (q. v.) For instance, checks or bills on London will be bought by X in Paris and remitted to Y in London. X will recoup himself by selling a cable payment on Z in New York. Z will put himself in funds to meet the cable payment by selling 60 days' sight drafts on Y, who pays the 60 days' drafts at maturity out of the proceeds of the cheques or bills received from Paris, and this complicated transaction, involving no outlay of capital, must show some minute profit after all expense of bill stamps, discount, cables, and commissions has been allowed for. Such business is very difficult and very technical. The arbitrageur must be in first-class credit, must make the most exact calculation, and be prompt to take advantage of the small differences in exchange, differences which can be only temporary, as these operations soon bring about an adjustment.

The European exchanges with which London is chiefly concerned are Paris and Berlin, through which centers most of the financial business of the rest of Europe is conducted; for example, Scandinavia, Russia, and Austria bank more largely with Berlin than elsewhere. Italy, Switzerland, Belgium, and Spain bank chiefly in Paris. European claims on London or debts to London are settled mostly through Germany or France, and consequently the German and French rates of exchange are affected by the relation of England with the rest of the Continent. The exchanges on Paris or Berlin are therefore most carefully watched by all those big interests which are concerned with the rate of discount and the value of money in London.

If the Paris cheque falls to 25.12, gold arrivals in the London bullion market will be taken by French bankers unless the profit shown by the exchange on some other country enables other buyers to pay more for the gold than Paris can afford. If the Paris cheque falls still further, it would pay to take sovereigns from the Bank of England for export, and so much would be taken as would satisfy the demand to send money to France, or until the consequent scarcity of money in London made rates of interest so high in England that French bankers would prefer to leave money and perhaps increase their balances. As between London and Paris and Berlin the greatest factor operating the exchanges is the relative value of money in the three centers. There is no great excess of trade balance at any season in favor of Germany or France and against England. On the other hand, the banking relations between those countries are very intimate, and if funds can be very profitably employed in one of these places there will be a good demand for remittance, and exchange will move in favor of that place; that is to say, exchange will go toward that limit point at which gold will be sent. The great pastoral and agricultural countries like South America, Egypt, and India are in a position to draw very largely on London when their crops or other products are ready for shipment. In the early months of the year gold goes freely to South America to pay for the cereals, hides, and meat, and in the autumn Egypt and India send such quantities of cotton and wheat that exchange moves heavily in favor of those countries, and gold must go to adjust the trade balance. During the rest of the year the gold tends to return as these countries always require bills on London or some form of payment to meet interest and dividends on European money invested in their Government debts, railways, and trading enterprises, and to pay for the European manufactures which they import. Exchange then moves in favor of England, and the Bank of England can replenish its reserve. Over the greater part of the world the rate of exchange on London is an indication simply of the trade balance. The greater part of the world receives payment for foodstuffs, and has to pay for European manufactures, shipping freights, banking services, and professional commissions.

The greatest complication in exchange questions arises when we have to deal with a country employing a silver standard, and, fortunately for the development of trade, the problem has disappeared of late years in the case of India, Ceylon, Japan, Mexico, and the Straits Settlements, and now the only important country using silver as a standard is China. When the monetary standard in one country is only a commodity in another country we are as far removed from the ideal of an international currency as can be imagined. We can fix no limit points to the exchange and we can not settle any theoretical par of exchange. The price of silver in the gold-using country may vary as much as the price of copper or tin, and in the silver-using country gold is dealt in just as any other metal. In both cases the only metal of constant price is the metal which is used as the money standard. The easiest method of explaining the position is to consider that anyone in a gold-using country having a claim in currency on a silver-using country has to offer for sale so many ounces of silver, and vice versa the exporter in a silver-using country sending produce to London has to offer a draft representing so many ounces of gold. This introduces a very unsatisfactory element. To take a practical example: A tea grower in China has raised his crop in spite of the usual experience of weather and labor difficulties and the endless risks that a planter must face; the tea is then sent to London to take its chance of good or bad prices, and at the same time the planter has a draft to sell representing locally a certain weight of gold; now, in addition to all the risks of weather and trading conditions, and the chances of the fluctuations in the tea market, he is compelled to gamble in the metal market on the price of gold. Some years ago when a large number of important countries employed a silver standard it was seriously suggested that a fixed ratio should be agreed internationally at which gold and silver should be exchanged. This advocacy of bimetallism (q. v.) was especially persistent at a time when silver had suffered a very great fall in price and the prominent exponents could generally be identified either as extremely practical men who were interested in the price of silver or as very inexperienced theorists. The difficulty of the two standards was successfully solved by discarding the use of silver, and the chief silver-using countries adopted a gold standard which has given greater security for the investment of foreign capital, has simplified business, and brought about a large increase of trade.

In the case of a country of which the government has been subject to great financial difficulties, gold has been shipped to satisfy foreign creditors so long as the supply held out, and the exchange with such a country will continue to move adversely with every fresh political embarrassment and any other economic cause reflecting on the national credit. With the collapse of the monarchy in Brazil the value of the milreis fell from 27 pence to 5 pence, and all the Spanish-American countries have from time to time afforded most distressing examples of the demoralizing effects on the currency of unstable and reckless administration. In Europe similar results have been shown by the mistrust inspired by the Governments of Spain, Greece, Italy, and some other States. The raising of revenue by the use of the printing press creates an inconvertible and depreciating paper currency which frightens foreign capital and severely taxes the unfortunate country which must make payment abroad for the service of debt and other obligations. With the tardy appreciation of the old proverb that "honesty is the best policy" nearly every country of importance has made strenuous efforts to improve the integrity of its money.

Exchange quotations are not published from many of the British Colonies, as their financial business is in the hands of a comparatively few excellently managed banks, which establish, by agreement, conventional exchanges fixed for a considerable period, notably in the case of Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa. The Scottish and Irish banks supply similar examples of a monopoly in exchange.

The following table taken from the money article of a London daily paper indicates the exchanges which are of most interest to England:

Foreign exchanges.

	June 14.	June 15.	June 16.
Paris, cheques	25 f. 18 c.	25 f. 18 c.	25 f. 18 c.
Paris Mkt. discount	2⅛–¾ p.c.	2⅛–¾ p.c.	2⅛–¾ p.c.
Brussels, cheques	25 f. 23 c.	25 f. 23½ c.
Berlin, sight	20 m. 48¾ pf.	20 m. 48¾ pf.	20 m. 48 pf.
Berlin, 8 days	20 m. 46½ pf.	20 m. 46½ pf.	20 m. 45½ pf.
Berlin Mkt. discount	3¾ p.c.	3¾ p.c.	3¾ p.c.
Vienna, sight	Holiday	24 kr. 02½ h.	24 kr. 02½ h.
Amsterdam, sight	12 fl. 13⅜ c.	12 fl. 13½ c.
Italy, sight	Holiday	25 lira 15 c.
Madrid, sight	do.	27 ps. 68
Lisbon, sight	do.
St. Petersburg, 3ms	94 r. 10	94 r. 10
Bombay, T.T	1s. 4d.	1s. 4d.	1s. 4d.
Calcutta, T.T	do.	do.	Do.
Hongkong, T.T	2s. 1⅛d.	2s. 1⅛d.	2s. 1⅛d.
Shanghai, T.T	2s. 10½d.	2s. 10⅝d.	2s. 10⅝d.
Singapore, T.T	2s. 4⅛d.	2s. 4⅛d.	2s. 4⅛d.
Yokohama, T.T	2s. 0⅛d.	2s. 0⅜d.	2s. 0⅛d.
Rio de Janeiro, 90 days [1]	16⅝d.	16⅝d.	16⅛d.
Valparaiso, 90 days Coml [1]	14⅛d.	14⅛d.	14⅛d.
Buenos Ayres, 90 days [1]	48⅝d.	48d.	48d.

[1] These rates are telegraphed on the day preceding their receipt.

In the case of Paris and Berlin, it will be noticed that the local rate of discount is also given, as the value of money in these centers, in relation to the value of money in London, is the most important factor in a movement of the exchange. Vienna has become important owing to the improvement in the financial position of Austria, and still greater improvement is shown in the case of Italy, whose currency stands in the above list better even than that of France. Spain, which should stand at about the same rate, still has a depreciated paper currency. Lisbon stands also at a discount, as the milreis should be worth 53½ pence.

In Russia the exchange showing 94.10 roubles to £10 is carefully and cleverly controlled in spite of the bad internal position. The India exchanges move slightly, as the currency is firmly established at the rate of 15 rupees to the £1. Hongkong quotes for the old Mexican dollar and a British trade dollar. Shanghai for the tael containing on an average 517½ grains of fine silver. The Straits Settlements have fixed their money on a gold basis at 2 shillings 4 pence per dollar, on the lines of the arrangement made in India. In Japan there is a gold standard, and par of exchange is 2 shillings 0½ pence for the yen. Brazil, Chile, and Argentina have a depreciated paper currency, and the last quotation of 48 pence is for the gold dollar equal to 5 francs, but there is a premium on gold in the River Plate of 127.27½ per cent and for the present a gold standard is reestablished on this basis. The latters "T. T." with the eastern exchanges signify telegraphic transfer or the rate for payments made by cable. The very important New York rates are always given in another part of the daily paper with other details of American commercial interest.

These rates are all quotations for payments in England, and all over the world the exchange on London is the exchange of the greatest importance. This unique position was gained originally, probably, through the geographical position of the United Kingdom, and has been maintained owing to several reasons which secure to London a peculiar position by comparison with any other capital. Britain's colossal trade ensures a supply of and a demand for English remittances. Even when goods or produce are dealt in between foreign countries a credit is opened in London, so that the shipper of the produce can offer in the local market a bill of exchange which is readily salable. With the highly developed banking system a large amount of deposits is collected in London, and the result is that bills of any usance up to six months can be immediately discounted, and the proceeds, if required, can be handed over in gold. There are in London a great number of wealthy banks and banking houses whose reputation and solidity allow any one of them to accept bills for amounts varying from £1,000,000 to £10,000,000 sterling whereby large commissions are earned.

These four advantages, namely, a free gold market, a huge trade, an enormous accumulation of wealth, and a discount market such as exists nowhere else, have made London an unrivaled financial center, and consequently bills on London are an international money and the best medium of exchange.

Authorities: A B C of the Foreign Exchanges, by George Clare; Foreign Exchanges, by Goschen; Arbitrage, by Deutsch; Arbitrages et Parités, by Ottomar Haupt; Swoboda, Arbitrage (twelfth edition), by Max Fuerst.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gronna	Lenroot	Simmons
Ball	Harding	McCormick	Smith, Ga.
Bankhead	Harris	McKellar	Smith, Md.
Beckham	Harrison	McLean	Smith, S. C.
Calder	Henderson	McNary	Spencer
Capper	Hitchcock	Moses	Stanley
Colt	Johnson, S. Dak.	New	Sterling
Culberson	Jones, N. Mex.	Newberry	Sutherland
Cummins	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Thomas
Curtis	Kendrick	Overman	Townsend
Dial	Kenyon	Page	Trammell
Dillingham	Keyes	Phipps	Walsh, Mass.
Edge	King	Poindexter	Walsh, Mont.
France	Kirby	Pomerene	Warren
Gay	Knox	Ransdell	Watson
Gerry	La Follette	Sheppard	Wolcott

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

LADING AND UNLADING OF VESSELS AT NIGHT.

Mr. CALDER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 3418. This is a bill reported a few days ago by the Committee on Commerce. It provides for the lading and unlading of vessels at night. The bill was prepared by the Treasury Department, and its passage is desired by the Shipping Board and by shippers generally throughout the country.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3418) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the lading or unlading of vessels at night, the preliminary entry of vessels, and for other purposes," approved February 13, 1911.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let the bill be read, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the lading or unlading of vessels at night, the preliminary entry of vessels, and for other purposes," approved February 13, 1911, be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall fix a reasonable rate of extra compensation for overtime services of inspectors, storekeepers, weighers, and other customs officers and employees who may be required to remain on duty between the hours of 5 o'clock p. m. and 8 o'clock a. m., or on Sundays or holidays, to perform services in connection with the lading or unlading of cargo, or the lading of cargo or merchandise for transportation in bond or for exportation in bond or for exportation with benefit of drawback, or in connection with the receiving or delivery of cargo on or from the wharf, or in connection with the unlading, receiving, or examination of passengers' baggage, such rates to be fixed on the basis of one-half day's additional pay for each two hours or fraction thereof that the overtime extends beyond 5 o'clock p. m. (but not to exceed two and one-half days' pay for the full period from 5 o'clock p. m. to 8 o'clock a. m.), and two additional days' pay for Sunday or holiday duty. The said extra compensation shall be paid by the master, owner, agent, or consignee of such vessel or other conveyance whenever such special license or permit for immediate lading or unlading or for lading or unlading at night or on Sundays or holidays shall be granted to the collector of customs, who shall pay the same to the several customs officers and employees entitled thereto according to the rates fixed therefor by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That such extra compensation shall be paid if such officers or employees have been ordered to report for duty and have so reported, whether the actual lading, unlading, receiving, delivery, or examination takes place or not. Customs officers acting as boarding officers and any customs officer who may be designated for that purpose by the collector of customs are hereby authorized to administer the oath or affirmation herein provided for, and such boarding officers shall be allowed extra compensation for services in boarding vessels at night or on Sundays or holidays at the rates prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, as herein provided, the said extra compensation to be paid by the master, owner, agent, or consignee of such vessel."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, is this the bill to which the Senator alluded a few days ago, and stated, either upon the floor of the Senate or to a number of Senators who approached him in connection with it, that it involved no expense whatever upon the part of the Government?

Mr. CALDER. No expense whatever.

Mr. KING. It merely permits the owners of vessels and the consignees and employees upon the vessels, or the longshoremen, to make such contracts as they please respecting the unloading of the vessels at night?

Mr. CALDER. Yes; and it permits customs officers to work at night and to be paid by the shipowner, with the consent of the collectors of customs in the respective districts. No expense whatever is incurred upon the Government.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator two questions: First, what reason is there for the Government to fix the terms of special contracts that shall be entered into between the owners of vessels and the employees of the Government for the purpose of securing the unloading of vessels on Sundays or holidays? In other words, why should the Government intervene and prescribe the contractual relations that shall exist between the parties? That is one question.

Secondly, if this bill should pass and there should be any considerable amount of overtime work done under the bill, would it not interfere with the efficiency of the employees of the Government in the performance of their duties to the Government? I can readily conceive that if there is very much Sunday work or night work the employees working for the Government and being called upon to perform this additional service would not be in condition to render efficient service to the Government. It might very materially impair their serviceability to the Government and interfere with the proper performance of their duties to the Government.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, this bill was prepared by the Treasury Department. We have had a law on the statute books for a number of years permitting the lading and unlading of vessels at night, for which the Government employees were paid in some such manner as is prescribed in this measure. But a year or two ago the Attorney General held that men could not be paid for passing upon the baggage taken off ships at night, but could be paid for supervising the discharging of the cargoes. That caused some difficulty, because we found a customs official examining baggage at night and being unpaid for it, and right alongside of him a customs official examining cargo and being paid for that.

These men do not work very much at night. I venture the statement that they do not average more than a day a week at the most, perhaps four or five days a month. If the Government did not have some control over it, and the shipowner were compelled to bargain with the customs inspectors and other Government employees all sorts of compensation might be demanded. This bill permits the Government to collect from the shipowners not in excess of double pay for overtime. The collector of customs fixes the pay for overtime, but can not allow more than double time for nights and Sundays. If I own a vessel and wish to have it discharged at night, it would be necessary for me to obtain a permit from the collector of customs to supervise the job. He would assign regular customs employees and keep track of their time, and the shipowner would pay the collector for it, and then, in turn, the men would be paid by the Government. The scheme is one that has been carefully considered, I will say to the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], and meets with the approval of the Treasury Department and the Shipping Board as well; it is also satisfactory to the men who work in the Customs Service.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE.

Mr. CALDER. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of Calendar No. 233, Senate concurrent resolution 14, creating a joint committee to make a survey of and to report on the activities of governmental departments, bureaus, and agencies which relate to public health.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to suggest to the Senator from New York that it appeared before the Committee on Appropriations a year or two ago that there were 47 different departments of health activities connected with the Government activities, if not more, in the city of Washington.

Mr. CALDER. This simply provides for an inquiry into these several departments, and a report to Congress.

Mr. KING. Reserving the right to object, I would like to hear the resolution read.

The Secretary read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution 14.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That a joint committee be, and is hereby, created, consisting of three Members of the United States Senate and three Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House, respectively, to make a survey of and report on those activities of the several departments, divisions, bureaus, offices, and agencies of the Government of the United States which relates to the protection and promotion of the public health, sanitation, care of the sick and injured, and the collection and dissemination of information relating thereto.

SEC. 2. That such committee is directed and empowered to report to the Congress not later than March 1, 1920—

(a) The statutory powers and duties conferred by the Congress on any department, division, bureau, office, or agency of the United States Government to carry on any work pertaining to the conservation and improvement of the public health, together with any rules and regulations authorized or promulgated thereunder;

(b) The organizations now existing in the Federal Government for the purpose of carrying out these powers and duties, together with the personnel of, appropriations for, and expenditures by each department, division, bureau, office, and agency during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919;

(c) The coordination now existing between said departments, divisions, bureaus, offices, and agencies, together with any conflicts, overlapping or duplication of powers, duties, functions, organizations, and activities;

(d) The cooperation and coordination now existing between the Government of the United States and the government of the several States or extragovernmental agencies for the conservation or improvement of the public health;

(e) Such further information as such committee may deem proper;

(f) Such recommendations as such committee may deem advisable to offer for the improveent of the public health work of the United States Government.

